The University of California conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon President Roosevelt last week.

Twenty-five millions will be added to the world's gold supply by the clean-ups now in progress in the Klondike. Water is running freely throughout the Klondike, giving miners a supply sufficient to wash out the immense dumps piled up during the winter. The yield of Gold Run, Dominion and Sulphur Creeks is larger than anticipated.

Secretary Root has decided that the ancient wall around the old city of Manila shall be preserved. Manila's medieval wall, built by the Spaniards several hundreds of years ago, is almost the only one of the kind left in the Orient. The Manila wall is a picturesque old work, and may well be preserved for aesthetic reasons, as well as for its historical associations.

Governor Pennypacker, of Pennsylvania, has signed the child labor bill and vetoed the other three miners' bills. The child labor bill makes it unlawful to employ children under 16 years of age in and about the mines. The three bills vetoed were the eight-hour day bill, the bill providing for the payment for coal mined by the ton of 2,240 pounds, and the mine inspection bill.

It is reported that President Marroquin, of Colombia, has been compelled to resign that office on account of political troubles, and that General Raphael Reyes, Second Vice-President, will assume the Presidency. Friends of the canal are anxiously awaiting developments, since the resignation of President Marroquin means the removal of one of the staunchest friends of the Panama Canal Treaty.

William H. Roberts, stated clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, has received returns from 203 of the 237 presbyteries on the question of creed revision. Of the returns received 185 are in favor of all the overtures, 13 are partly affirmative, 2 negative and 3 took no action. This vote ratifies the proposition, which required a majority of two-thirds of the presbyteries, and practically assures the adoption of the revised Confession of Faith by the General Assembly, which is now in session in Los Angeles.

The consolidation of the St. Louis and San Francisco with the Rock Island system brings under the control of the Rock Island company over 15,000 miles of line —making about the largest railroad system under a single control in the country. The Rock Island company itself is controlled by a small minority of the stock interest, and thus presents the double feature of controlling the most mileage through the smallest relative investment known in the railroad world.

American railroads have not of late been improving their record of casualties.
During the last half of last year, according to a statement made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, no less than 163 passengers were killed in railroad accidents and 1,969 injured. This is as bad as a whole year's record ordinarily is.
Congestion of traffic, overworking of employes and the strain put upon the whole mechanism of railroading probably explain, if they do not excuse, the very bad showing made.

The government's report on the crops for this month appeared last week, and confirms the unofficial reports that the cold snap late in Fourth month did no great damage to the winter wheat crop.
There was quite a material reduction in the condition from Fourth month 1st, but it still remains uncommonly high.
The West has had plenty of moisture, while the East is beginning to suffer seriously from drouth. Farm work is behind in both sections of the country, but western pasturage is in good condition, compared with that in the Eastern States.

The Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Hicksite Friends met in that city last week. The statistical report for the year gives a total of 11,124 members, a decrease of 136 since last year. A number of reforms were suggested by some of the members, including a proposition to provide for a short period for social intercourse and a time for the discussion of ethical and moral topics in connection with meetings for silent worship; also a suggestion was made that Friends should be more active in promulgating their principles among those who are not now members. Neither of these reforms, however, were acted upon by the meeting.

The Yale University Corporation, at a recent meeting, almost unanimously approved the recommendations to extend the elective system into the freshman year by allowing each freshman to choose five out of eight courses of study and to allow the substitution of advanced work in mathematics or modern languages in place of Greek for admission to college.
The new requirements for admission, which will go into effect in 1904, leave English, ancient history and Latin unchanged, but will allow Greek to be wholly or in part superseded by an additional amount of mathematics or by a thorough knowledge of either French or German.

Scientific lumbering or forestry is to become so widely prevalent in a few years, in the opinion of officials of the Federal Department of Agriculture, as to open a large and most attractive field for the employment of specially-educated young men. There is a great scarcity of foresters, and the supply of competent persons is described as being about one in ten to the demand. This demand must increase as lumber companies, paper companies, railroads and other concerns particularly interested wake up to the necessity of applying a conserving policy to the treatment of woodland property. Railroad companies are now employing experts in permanent positions of tree superintendence. This is a new business or profession in the United States.

BE INDEPENDENT.

It's Easy to Shake Off the Coffee Habit.

There are many people who make the humiliating acknowledgment that they are dependent upon coffee to “brace them up” every little while. These have never learned the truth about Postum Cereal Coffee which makes leaving off coffee a simple matter, and brings health and strength in place of coffee ills.
A lady of Davenport, Iowa, who has used Postum Food Coffee for five years is competent to talk upon the subject.
She says:

“I am a school teacher, and during extra work when I thought I needed to be braced up I used to indulge in rich, strong coffee of which I was very fond, and upon which I thought I was dependent.

“I began to have serious heart palpitation, and at times had sharp pains around the heart and more or less stomach trouble. I read about Postum and got some to try. I dropped coffee, took up the Postum, and it worked such wonders for me that many of my friends took it up.

“In a short time I was well again, even able to attend evening socials. And I did not miss my coffee at all. Now I can truthfully say that I have been repaid fully for the change I made. I have no indications of heart disease, and not once in the past four years have I had a sick headache or bilious spell.

“My father, 78 years old, is a Postum enthusiast, and feels that his good health in a large measure is due to the six cups of good Postum which he enjoys each day.” Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There is a reason.

"INTERNATIONAL" BIBLES AND TESTAMENTS

A NEW BOOK JUST ISSUED

CHRISTIAN WORKER'S TESTAMENT

COPYRIGHT 1902

An Indispensable Book for Ministers, Evangelists, Teachers, the Young People, and everyone who is interested in the greatest subject of the Bible, and desires to comprehend the Theme of Salvation in the exact words of the New Testament.

Sixteen Complete and Consecutive Readings in the New Testament. All marked in red and indexed, enabling the reader to turn rapidly and quickly to all the texts in succession. (See next page.) Everywhere commended and endorsed.

Baltimore Methodist Protestant: "This is the most unique and practical marked New Testament we have yet seen. Bible readers, evangelists, missionaries and ministers will find the work so practical and so convenient as to become a necessity."

Christian Work: "A marvel of convenience; has the practical qualities of a marked New Testament."

Henry M. Wharton, Evangelist: "Your New Testament for workers is the only one for the purpose I would recommend. Many Helps have been gotten out, but they only suit the men who write them. David cannot fight in Saul's armor. Jesus Christ knows best how to point the way of life."

THE SONG OF RE-BIRTH.

*In the light of the silent stars that shine on the struggling sea,
In the weary cry of the wind and the whisper of flower and tree,
Under the break of laughter, deep in the tide of tears,
I hear the Loom of the Weaver that weaves the Web of Years.*

*The green uncrumpling fern and the dew that dims the rose,
Are mingled into the silence where the wings of music close,
Mingled into the Timeless that never a moment mars, Mingled into the Darkness that made the sun and stars.*

*One with the flower of a day, one with the withered moon,
One with the granite mountains that melt into the noon,
One with the dream that triumphs beyond the light of the spheres, We come from the Loom of the Weaver that weaves the Web of years.*

HOW TO READ.

It is a very important attainment to learn how to read so as to get the good out of a modern book, and at the same time not to receive harm from what is imperfect and untrue in it. Once it was easy and safe to read. Books were divided into two classes—the sound and the unsound. The sound books might be read without fear; the others were to be let entirely alone. That plan is no longer possible. The world is full of books, and our standards of sound and unsound depend largely upon the reader. There is no authority in any Protestant Church which can settle for all its members what books, out of the endless number, are absolutely safe. It is never with pleasure that we enter upon the consideration of such hard problems, but the times demand it, and if we speak at all we must speak frankly.

It is probably true that no single book of any importance, written by any modern scholar of the last quarter of a century, would seem absolutely sound to a man who judged it by the rigid standards of orthodoxy which prevailed in the first quarter of the nineteenth century. Men's views of God and man, of life and death, of rewards and punishments, have undergone change, and every student of history knows that this is so. The man who writes books to-day is not so infallibly certain that he has fathomed the divine secrets as the theologians of a hundred years ago were. The patient study of facts, which has marked our age to a greater degree than any other age in the history of the world, has brought new light to every problem of human life.

Now there are two possible courses open for the Christian of to-day. One way is for him to remain stubbornly unaffected by the movement of thought, and the discovery of new ways of viewing truth. He will then refuse to read books which are written in the modern spirit. If he reads at all he will go only to the old stand-by volumes which were written when the century was new. He will be satisfied with his own interpretation of the Bible, and he will be content to live within the safe circle of his own ignorance. That is one possibility, and many very good persons have accepted it as their course. The other way which is open is to try to discover what is true and what is false in the teaching of our time. That means that we are going to read and study with open minds what is written by those who are equipped for dealing with the problems which are before us to-day. It is a path beset with dangers, of course. The child who learns to swim takes risks. The man who invests his talent runs the chance of losing it. Nobody can read the new contributions to religious literature without finding much that is immensely helpful, but at the same time in the same books there will be much which is out of line with old ideas and orthodox standards, and he will find it easy to get muddled and mystified, and he may go astray. Books nowadays, as we have said, are not written with a view to guard orthodoxy. They are written by men who care for nothing but to say what they honestly believe is true, and naturally sometimes they are right and sometimes wrong. One book generally needs to be corrected by another, and so on. Therefore nobody is capable of reading books of this sort unless he can select out of them what seems to him true, and can pass over the rest without being harmed by it.

Those who have not learned how to do this, those who have not been trained to think for themselves so that they can get the good out of an honest book which has also in it much seeming error must be content to let such books alone. To such readers all books written by modern thinkers will appear unsound, and there will be a scent of unorthodoxy on almost all the religious literature which comes from the press. There will still be much deep water for us all to go through, but the Church will eventually learn that its strength lies not in crying against these books which deal so freely with the deepest issues of human destiny, but rather in building up in its membership such sturdy, solid spiritual men and women that they can distinguish good and evil and select the good.

A PRACTICAL CASE IN POINT.

A YEAR ago the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight of New England Yearly Meeting decided that its ministers and workers would be helped by an opportunity to know what the leaders of spiritual thought to-day are really teaching, and it was decided further to gather a small circulating library to make such reading possible. A library of about a hundred volumes was carefully selected. Great effort was made that only books should be selected which had proved helpful to those who suggested them, and to have only those which were written by men and women sincerely bent upon the discovery of light and truth. Books of a destructive character were kept out, but it was a thoroughly modern collection, and no one should have expected that every word in them all would ring "sound" to those who tested them by the hard and fast standards of theology. Those who expect that, we repeat, must give up reading books which are written in the modern spirit by persons who are solely concerned to follow out the facts as they find them in nature and in the Bible. One of the Quarterly Meetings on Ministry and Oversight has recently adopted a minute against one of these books, on the ground that it contains unorthodox sentences. The book chosen happens to be by a man who has almost universally been recognized as a safe teacher—a glowing, earnest Christian soul, and a man who has pointed out with remarkable insight the weakness of the Unitarian position. Those who know him would think he was about the last person to be suspected of Unitarianism. But it is quite possible to pick out of his book sentences which seem to come short of the standards which are familiar to those who have brought the charge of unsoundness. The spirit of the book is most wholesome; the whole trend of it is to glorify Christ and make His teaching clear and practical, but he has taken no pains to make each sentence square with tests of soundness. This book happened to come up for examination. Many others would have given equal offense on the same kind of examination. Few men love truth more passionately than the writer whose book is condemned by the aforesaid minute, but the quarterly meeting has judged it in the old way and by the same method they would taboo most of the work of our generation. It is of course a most solemn question, for great issues are involved. But there is no middle course open. Either we must pursue the lines of truth in among pitfalls and dangers, or we must fall back on the policy of contraction and exclusion. It is impossible to ask what modern teachers have to say unless we are ready to take them as we find them. They do not write in the old way; they do make us listen to much which goes in badly with our rigid standards of soundness. But if we are not strong enough to find our truth in books of this sort the only other course is to stay contented with our own incomplete knowledge and let the world go on without us. It is unfair to pick out here and there a sentence or a single book to condemn. That always means that those who do it have failed to discover the spirit and the method of those who are doing the work of investigation in our age. It is impossible to judge without taking into account the whole scope of the movement which is under way and without feeling the whole of the message of the particular book before us. Thus the difficulties of our age are assuredly very great and call for much wisdom. The real question is, which is more dangerous, to stand stock still, or to face the dangers boldly and go ahead?

DUBLIN YEARLY MEETING.

OUR Dublin correspondent, J. Bewley Beale, has given us, in very brief space, a good account of the yearly meeting which began on the 20th of Fourth month, and we shall only add the statement that the total membership in Ireland is now 2,529, which is a gain of 1 during the year.

The two sittings of the yearly meeting on ministry and oversight were both interesting times. Several matters of importance in reference to our spiritual condition and growth obtained a good deal of deliberation and thoughtful expression. Although the reports from the quarterly meetings on ministry and oversight were not of a very encouraging character, yet there was evidence of considerable spiritual life and earnestness in these two gatherings.

The yearly meeting itself gave rise also to feelings of a somewhat mixed character. The early meetings were unusually small, which was disappointing, and this seemed to indicate a lack of life and loyalty; but, as the business advanced, the numbers increased and much more of a lively interest was apparent, so that towards the close feelings of gratitude and praise prevailed for the somewhat striking evidence of our Heavenly Father's goodness manifested in answer to believing prayer for a blessing on our deliberations. The presence of our friends Charles and May Repogle, from Indiana, was greatly valued, their lively and helpful addresses being much appreciated, not only in the meetings for worship and those for business, but in the foreign mission meetings and on other occasions. We had also the company of several Friends from England, whose counsel and sympathy were very welcome. The conferences on home mission work and on foreign missions were both very lively and interesting, and, though some of the business meetings gave rise to a sense of regret as regards our future prosperity, these two large gatherings inspired feelings of hope and good courage.

The meetings for worship, too, were felt by many to be times of much blessing. A full gospel was faithfully preached, and the name of the Lord Jesus Christ was magnified.

The early morning devotional meetings and the meetings for young people in the afternoons were held as usual, and were productive of good.

Mention should also be made of the interest felt in the epistles from America which brought so vividly before us the varying conditions which exist in the yearly meetings there, as also the life and energy which prevails so largely amongst their membership.

WE are fortunate in having secured a very interesting sketch of the girlhood of Harriet Green, which appears in our issue of this week. A letter is at hand from an English Friend, which contains a promise to contribute £100 (about $500) to the Harriet Green Memorial Fund. This is a splendid beginning, and we are hoping for many American Friends to follow this good example. A personal letter from Harriet Green's sister contains this passage which we pass on to our readers: "May I ask you to express on behalf of the family our sincere, heartfelt appreciation of all the kindness and love shown to Harriet wherever she went."

HARRIET GREEN'S GIRLHOOD.

[Through the kindness of Mary Crosfield, sister of our lamented friend, I have just received the following beautiful and comprehensive "Memoir of Harriet's Girlhood." It is from the pen of her sister-in-law, and I was given permission to draw from it at discretion in the preparation of a paper. But I am only too delighted to give it in full, knowing how gratefully the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will welcome such a sketch from one whose life has so intimately touched that of the departed.

I may be allowed, however, to preface these recollections by a few details that belong to this period and do not appear in the sketch.

The eldest daughter in a family of six, Harriet Green was given to her parents at Saffron Walden, Essex, England, on the 7th of May, 1844. Her father, Thomas Day Green, was a brother of Priscilla Green, who will be remembered by our older readers as having traveled in the ministry in this country many years ago. He was a Friend of the conservative type, who lived his religion, and whose example was, perhaps, the most potent human influence in moulding the character of his daughter to the day of his death.

Until fourteen years of age the education of the little girl was carried on with that of her two brothers, under the parental roof, and then a two years' course succeeded at a Friends' boarding school in touch with the inspiring character of an able principal and pursuing with keen interest the study of literature and languages, adding the accomplishments of drawing and painting, for which she is said to have shown a decided talent. Then school days for her were ended, but not student life. The sharpened powers of her vigorous intellect were henceforth to grapple with the best thought of her day on varied lines, but chiefly with the problems that affect the weal of humanity for this world and the next.

Returning to be a helpful factor and a source of joy in the home life, to assist her delicate mother in household duties, whether in cooking or with the needle, and to lend a hand wherever needed, she did faithfully the task that lay nearest her in a retired sphere until, through providential events, and an experience of saving grace, she was led out to swing a sickle in the wide and whitened harvest of her Master. Of this I hope to speak more fully in a further paper.

ESTHER TUTTLE PRITCHARD.]

I think when I first knew Harriet, she cannot long have left school. We were girls together, and visited one another in our homes.

In thinking of her now, in those days of her girlhood, with life just opening before her, the chief characteristic that stands clearly out to me, after the lapse of all these years is what proved to be the motive power—the keynote—of her whole life—what one may best describe as a perfect passion for service. She might have borrowed her Master's motto, "I am in the midst of you as one that serveth." With her to love meant "to serve." She was satisfied with nothing short of pouring out for those dear to her, not only time and strength, but her very self. It was thus that she ever "gave herself," richly, generously, without stint and without measure: first to the Master, whom even thus early she so passionately loved, and then to those with whom she lived or came in contact.

One could never say of her she was this and that, and with it all she was so good—such a real Christian! Her goodness, her Christianity, was her very self. I could not think of her without it. It comes first to my mind in trying to call up her girlhood—as much herself as the strikingly picturesque face, the dark, plentiful hair, bright "speaking" eyes, and rich coloring.

Even then she was seeking to awaken in others that burning love for Him which kindled her own heart. What her power was in thus drawing others to Him, with winning voice and words of strange beauty and almost magnetic force, others can testify better than I can do. And it belongs too to a somewhat later period of her life, though this sacred gift of speech came early to her.

Of one of her brothers, who was at this time going through a phase of religious doubt and perplexity, she was the trusted confidante. Although pained, she was never shocked, by doubt in others. Standing firm in the faith, she could reach helping hands to those who were struggling in deep waters, entering into their spiritual difficulties with a large understanding, even while never admitting for an instant that it "did not matter" what a man believes or disbelieves. She felt that it mattered so greatly, that I know she simply wrestled in prayer for those whose faith was assailed and shaken. Hers was not the breadth of an easy indifference, but of a yearning and sympathetic love and a wise knowledge of human nature.

In those girlish days she never seemed happier than when reading and studying her Bible—alone, or with others. I say "studying," but that does not describe it. I think it was an actual, spiritual feeding upon it. I can picture her more plainly with her loved Bible in those days than in any other way.

At the same time she entered with the greatest zest into any pleasure that was going, and was, at that time, the life of her home, ever ready to join in the constant flow of fun and humor which was one of the great features of those happy family gatherings, when the brothers came down from London, gatherings which I am sure have lived in all our memories, and will live as some of the sunniest days of our youth.

All too early, as it seemed to us, clouds shadowed her life, partly by reason of the heavy responsibilities which came to her at an age when most girls are still in a sheltered home. But I am going back to the days before this. On these occasions of which I write, the drives, and the country walks after wild flowers, picnics, or expeditions of any kind, fell flat without her, while she was even more needed on certain wet days that I remember, when we congregated in the study to read aloud or talk on grave subjects, perhaps out of our depth, or on those exquisite summer evenings when we used to pace, in twos and threes, about the sweet, much loved garden, and watch the stars come out one by one in the clear sky, and revel in the fragrance of the dear Father's cherished flowers, the scent of some of which, even now, brings back to me those never-to-be-forgotten days in that bright house.

She had an ever-ready sympathy, and it seems to me that in those days, when her sisters were very young, we all went to her for advice, and depended on her judgment and swift decisions in most things. She was exceedingly practical, and gifted with a large measure of sound common sense, and always made up her mind rapidly therefore, while we weaker ones were hesitating. One felt she was strong to lean upon. She was more than two years younger than I, but I felt her to be both older and wiser. There was a wonderful vividness about her, a strong personality, that always made her presence singularly felt, and her absence proportionately so.

One of her marked characteristics was a strong tendency to hero worship—a generous enthusiasm for the good in others, and this led her to clothe those whom she specially loved and admired in very bright colors. Her eyes saw them in "hues of their own, fresh borrowed from (her) heart." The power of self-devoted love to which I have alluded, strengthened with her life. To one after another of her family she gave, for years, of her very best. Being herself denied those closest earthly ties for which she seemed so wonderfully fitted, she cheerfully took upon herself the tender care of others and burdens that sometimes taxed her utmost powers and most patient endurance.

She seemed to shrink from no task, however arduous, that would be helpful to others. And it was not till long years had passed, and the dear ones to whom she had so willingly ministered needed her no longer, that she turned wholly to those wider fields of labor that lie outside the home, the mission work of which others will tell, and in the thick of which her sudden summons came, the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The courage and endurance with which she faced, in those last years, when no longer young, hardness and discomforts and deprivations and rough travel, and work hard enough to daunt many a younger and stronger woman, fills one with amazement and admiration. It must surely have been the outcome of a youth and early womanhood from which all luxury and self-indulgence was eliminated.

She took the law of Christ as the law of her life, and drank deep of His mind and spirit, who came, "not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many." And thus the call to give up for others settled home, and the home comforts that get so necessary to many of us, especially as life advances, was freely and gladly responded to, and with a divine rashness, if I may use the word with all reverence, she went forth the second time to a life of hardship. She had come home from her first visit to America, broken down in health, and had spent three years of more or less suffering and weakness, but as soon as ever she was in the least fit to undertake it she returned to her work, held back by no considerations of prudence. No thought as to whether health or strength would bear the renewed strain, or whether, with these years of weakness added to her life she could again endure it, seemed to touch her. She left all that with Him whose voice she believed was calling her forth, and counted not her life dear unto her, for was it not His? to use as He would—in health or in sickness, here on earth, or in that other world which is around us though we see it not. And thus surely she is now working still for Him and with Him who was from her girlhood, and is, the Lord of her life, but with what a difference! All weariness gone from that brave heart, all sadness, all regrets, untrammelled with weaknesses of the body, her "treasure" no longer in an "earthly vessel," but shining forth clear and radiantly bright as her joyous and glorified spirit. And may we not feel sure that she is with them also who were so unutterably dear to her, and for whom she ever yearned, with all the strength of her strong and loving heart—"satisfied" at last!

HOW WE GOT THE BIBLE.

BY LYRA DALE TRUEBLOOD.

(Concluded.)

For various reasons no English translation of the Bible appeared until very late, the first which deserved the name being that of John Wyclif in the fourteenth century. But long before this there were many paraphrases and translations of certain portions of the Scriptures, which indicated the spirit of the times.

It was Caedmon, the earliest of English singers, who began to put the Bible stories into the vernacular, and the wandering minstrels sang them from house to house, thus rendering the people familiar with them. The first portion of Scripture to be translated was the Gospel of John, which "the venerable" Bede put into Anglo-Saxon, dictating it as he lay dying. No fragments of this remain. In the British Museum there is preserved for us an interlinear Psalter belonging to the ninth century. It is interlined with a seventh century Latin manuscript of the Psalms. Alfred the Great also translated the Decalogue and a part of the Psalms.

The earliest complete translation of the Gospels is in the interlinear form, and dates from the tenth century. It was made from early Latin versions. Then followed other translations of the Gospels, one being an independent version, followed by the Latin original, instead of being interlined with it. In the eleventh century Abbot Aelfric, a grammarian, made an Anglo-Saxon version of the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, Esther, Job, Kings, Judith and Maccabees.

To be sure, these early translations and paraphrases into Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-Norman have had no effect on our English Bible, since Anglo-Saxon is very different from our English, but they are of importance as revealing the interest which was taken in bringing the Scriptures to the knowledge of the people.

Down to the middle of the fourteenth century there had not been produced a literal translation in English prose of any complete book of the Bible, except the Psalter, of which two versions had appeared, both made from the Vulgate (which was the Latin translation of the Bible made by Jerome in the fourth century A.D., and which has since that time been the standard of the Roman Catholic Church).

John Wyclif, the "morning star of the Reformation," was the first to determine and to carry out his determination that the great masses of the people of his country should no longer be deprived of the privilege of reading the Bible for themselves in their own tongue. Not merely that certain books should be put into English, but that the whole Bible should be given them was his aim. To Wyclif then in a very real sense belongs the honor of being the father of the English Bible. His work is a translation of a translation (the Vulgate), and its dialect and spelling bear little resemblance to the English of the present day, but its influence is seen in many words and phrases in the Authorized and Revised Versions.

Wyclif's Bible dates from 1382, yet it remained in manuscript form till long after the introduction of printing. It was circulated in manuscripts until the year 1850, and twenty years of work in the examination of one hundred and seventy manuscript copies were necessary to prepare the volume for the printers' hands. At Wyclif's own request his Bible was at once revised by his curate at Lutterworth, John Purvey. Both these versions were anonymous to avoid the anger of the church. The danger of possessing a copy was great, yet the circulation was immense.

One hundred and forty years later appeared Tyndale's New Testament. During this time had occurred the Revival of Letters, the invention of printing, and Greek and Hebrew were studied, and lexicons and Bibles in these languages printed. This made possible a vastly improved translation of the Bible into English, and hence Tyndale's work is far better and more accurate than Wyclif's could have been. Tyndale's English is our English, and his translations were made from the originals. It is estimated that of his work our present Bible retains about 80 per cent. in the Old Testament and 90 per cent. in the New Testament. The New Testament Tyndale translated from Erasmus' edition of the Greek text, using the Vulgate, Luther's German Bible and the Latin of Erasmus as aids. A fragment of this first New Testament ever printed in English is now in the British Museum, and is known as the Grenville Fragment. Between 1525 and 1528 six editions of the New Testament were published, yet owing to the zeal of the Catholic spies only one fragment of the quarto issue and two of the octavo remain. Nevertheless what Tyndale had said to one of the church authorities soon proved true: "If God spare my life, ere many years I will cause a boy that driveth the plough shall know more of the Scriptures than thou dost."

Tyndale next turned his attention to the Old Testament, and in 1530 appeared the Pentateuch, and in 1531 the book of Jonah. In 1535 he was imprisoned, and strangled and burned at the stake in October of the next year. During this interval he translated from Joshua through 2 Chronicles. At his death he left the work in the hands of John Rogers.

The demand for an authorized English Bible now became great, and Henry VIII. promised that the New Testament should "be by learned men faithfully and purely translated." Since Wyclif's and Tyndale's works were both under the ban of the Church, Miles Coverdale, in the hope of meeting with the King's approval, began about 1527 to work at a translation. Just before the martyrdom of Tyndale a Bible appeared, dedicated to Henry VIII. by his "humble subjecte, Myles Coverdale." This differed from the Tyndale version in being a complete Bible (the other having only a part of the Old Testament), in being a translation of Latin and German versions, and not from the original languages, and in being free from comments and notes. Whereas Tyndale had felt the translation of the Bible to be his life-mission, Coverdale had no such feeling, but had only undertaken the work at the instigation of others. Coverdale used the Swiss-German Bible of Zwingli, Luther's German Bible, the Vulgate, the Latin Bible of 1528 and Tyndale's version. His influence on our version has been great and lasting, though his work was far inferior to that of his predecessor.

Soon another version was prepared by John Rogers, under the anonymous title of Matthew's Bible, and had wide circulation during the reign of Edward VI. This consisted of the Tyndale translation, completed by Rogers, who made large use of Coverdale's translation in the untranslated portion of the Old Testament. This Bible reached England in 1537. It forms the real basis of all later revisions, and, with the Great Bible and the Bishops' Bible, forms the direct ancestor of our Authorized Version. Though this was largely the work of the arch-heretic Tyndale, it succeeded in getting "set forth with the King's most gracious license," as did the Coverdale Bible at about the same time.

Coverdale was now given the task of preparing a third and revised Bible, to be based on the text of Matthew's Bible, and was as far as possible to make it conform to the original Greek and Hebrew. This was the Great Bible, the Old Testament being practically that of Matthew's Bible, and the New Testament that of the Tyndale version. It was published in 1539, in a large folio, without notes or dedication. Seven editions were issued in two years. It was ordered set up in every church "whereat the parishioners may most commodiously resort to the same and read it."

No further translation was made until the time of Queen Elizabeth. About 1560 appeared the Genevan or Breeches Bible, due to the Calvinists under John Knox. Coverdale had a large share in the work, and the scholarship and learning which produced it were far superior to that of the Great Bible. This version was dedicated to Elizabeth. In it is found the first use of italics to mark words not represented in the original language. It contained also the division into verses. Previous to this an English New Testament had appeared, in 1557, by Whittingham, Dean of Durham, which was the first to adopt the division of the text into verses, made in the Greek Testament six years before. The division into chapters had been made in the days when manuscripts were still in use to render easier the reading in the synagogues. The division into verses was to aid in reference and quotation.

But the Genevan Bible was too Puritan in tone to be approved by Elizabeth, especially since she hated Knox and Calvin. Hence, in 1564, the Archbishop appointed a revision committee, which produced the Bishops' Bible, in 1568. Even this failed to receive Elizabeth's sanction.

Next came a Catholic version, known as the Douay Bible. An editorial note informs us that this was made for the faithful, who were in danger of being disturbed by the false and heretical versions so abundant at that time. This translation is a very literal one, following the Vulgate closely.

The great version of King James' time was the next to appear. He chose a committee of forty-seven to do the work, and divided them into six companies, to each of which was assigned a certain portion of the Bible. Every version then in existence was consulted. When each company had done its work the translation was sent to the other five for their criticism, so that each part was gone over by the whole committee. The work was completed in 1611.

In 1653 the Long Parliament brought in a bill for revision, but no definite steps were taken, except by individuals, until after the discovery of the Codex Sinaiticus in 1844. In 1870 fifty-four members were chosen to undertake the work of revision, and the co-operation of America was sought. Two companies were set to work in England, and two similar companies in America. After eight hundred sittings of the Old Testament Company in fourteen years, and four hundred of the New Testament in ten years, the work was completed, the New Testament in 1880 and the old Testament in 1884.

In the work of revision there were certain renderings and translations of passages which the American branch of the Revision Committee preferred, but which were not agreed to by the others. The Revised Version was therefore in reality an English production. An agreement was made with the English Committee not to have the American Revision published for some years, and it was not issued until 1901. The differences are mainly in the language, and do not materially affect the text. The American Revision is simpler and clearer in style, and therefore preferable to all revisions heretofore made. This is now published under the name of the Standard American Bible, and is coming rapidly into general use in this country.

CONFERENCE ON DEPARTMENTS OF WORK.

The second annual conference of Stella Quarterly Meeting on the departments of Christian work was held at Bethel, near Keith, Okla., from Fifth month 7th to 11th, inclusive. On account of rain the attendance was not so large as it otherwise would have been, but a good interest was maintained throughout the entire conference.

The first day was devoted to the consideration of evangelistic and pastoral work, and Bible Schools. Josiah Butler, the general superintendent of evangelistic and pastoral work in Kansas Yearly Meeting, was present and rendered valuable service in the discussion of these departments of work. The subject of Sabbath desecration claimed the thoughtful attention of the conference, and a resolution was adopted and directed to be sent to each Sabbath School in the quarterly meeting urging them to use every possible legitimate opportunity to impress the necessity of loyal Sabbath observance. A meeting for worship was held in the evening.

The sessions of the second day were devoted to the subjects of peace, literature and temperance. The work of each department was clearly set forth by thoughtfully-prepared papers and addresses, showing the wonderful progress that was being made in the cause of peace and arbitration, and the need of Friends in this new country standing solidly for prohibition and using every possible means to secure constitutional prohibition should our Territory be admitted as a State. In the evening President Stanley, of Friends' University, Wichita, preached a strong sermon on "Fruit-bearing."

The third day was devoted to education and Christian Endeavor. In the papers that were presented on the subject of education, and in the discussion which followed, the superiority of denominational over public schools, especially those in which the reading of the Bible is prohibited, was clearly shown, but that the mind of the child may be directed toward God by the means of pictures and illustrations, even where the reading of the Bible is not allowed.

The object of the Christian Endeavor is to learn and to receive the effectual working power that may be exerted toward the building up of the Church. We need to advance on the line of pledge-keeping, Bible-reading and prayer, in spirituality, in mission work and in Christian citizenship.

In the evening President Stanley gave an address on "The Evangelization of the World."

The fourth day of the conference was the Sabbath. The Sabbath School and meeting for worship occupied the forenoon. In the afternoon President Stanley addressed a large and appreciative audience on "War and Arbitration." A devotional meeting was held at night.

The fifth and last day was given to the subject of missions. Among the papers presented on the subject, two deserve special mention, one by Edwin Madden, on "Friends' Work in Foreign Missions," and one by Susie Allen, on "The Great Commission." He who has the light is to bear the light to others. We must either turn our backs on the Bible or obey it. The conference closed with a feeling on the part of all that it had been "good to be there."

LESSON X.

SIXTH MONTH 7, 1903.

PAUL'S VOYAGE AND SHIPWRECK.

Acts 27: 33-44.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses. Ps. 107: 28.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Sixth mo. 1.—The voyage to Crete. Acts 27: 1-12.

Third-day, Sixth mo. 2.—The hurricane. Acts 27: 13-20.

Fourth-day, Sixth mo. 3.—Peace amid the storm. Acts 27: 21-32.

Fifth-day, Sixth mo. 4.—Paul's shipwreck. Acts 27: 33-44.

Sixth-day, Sixth mo. 5.—Christ in the vessel. Mark 4: 35-41.

Seventh-day, Sixth mo. 6.—Confidence in God. Psalm 23.

First-day, Sixth mo. 7.—Danger and deliverance. Psalm 107: 23-32.

The lesson is only one scene of the history of the eventful voyage from Caesarea to Rome; therefore the whole of chapter 27 should be read carefully. It gives a picture of Paul under new and most trying circumstances, and shows his character tested by new trials. It was not his first experience of shipwreck or of the perils of the sea (2 Cor. 11: 25-27). Though Luke is not mentioned by name, the use of the pronoun "we" shows that he accompanied Paul; Aristarchus also went with Paul (Acts 27: 2). See also Acts 19: 29; 20: 4; Phil. 24; Col. 4: 10. There were also other prisoners (verse 1) who were being sent to Rome for trial.

The ship, as usual at that season of the year, late September or early October, coasted along the shores of Syria, Cyprus and Asia Minor, to a seaport, Myra, in Lycia. Here the centurion, who had charge of the prisoners, changed ships and embarked with his charge on a large Alexandrian vessel loaded with grain for Italy. As this vessel was capable of carrying 276 passengers and crew, besides cargo, it must have been of the largest size in those days. From descriptions in contemporary authors it has been estimated that this ship was about twelve hundred tons burden.

All careful investigations show that Luke's account is most accurate, and evidently that of an eyewitness. The lesson begins with the shipwreck.

33. "Continued fasting." This does not mean that no food had been eaten, but that no regular meals had been taken.

34. "To take some food." R. V. "For this is for your safety." R. V. Physical safety in ordinary circumstances would depend on strength, which would be impossible without food. "There shall not a hair," etc. Paul had received assurance that all his companions in danger would be saved. Compare 1 Kings 1: 52.

35. Paul was not ashamed of his religion. It is likely that he and his two friends, Luke and Aristarchus, were the only Christians on board, but he showed before all his faith and his loyalty to his God. He gave thanks in the midst of danger.

36. Paul's words, manner and example had given them heart, and they also partook of food which gave them strength to undergo the perils to come.

37. This indicates the size of the ship.

38. "Lightened the ship." This had already been done twice (verses 18, 19). This time it was probably to make the ship draw less water, and so be able to go nearer the shore. "Cast out the wheat." This was the main cargo.

39. "They knew not the land." It is now almost universally accepted that Malta was the place of the shipwreck. The island was, of course, known to the Alexandrian sailors, but the port to which the ship was driven was out of the usual track of ships. The bay, now known as St. Paul's Bay, is at the north-west extremity of the island. It extends from east to west, and is about two miles long by one broad. The bay fulfills in every respect the requirements of Luke's narrative. "They perceived a certain bay with a beach, and they took counsel whether they could drive the ship upon it." R. V. The plan was to run the ship on the beach, where there would be a better chance for escape.

40. "And casting off the anchors they left them in the sea, at the same time loosing the bands of the rudders and hoisting up the foresail to the wind they made for the beach." R. V. Such ships in that day were steered by two large paddles, one on each side of the stern. When the vessel was anchored the rudders were lifted out of the water and lashed. To loose these bands was to make the rudders ready to be used in guiding the ship to the right place on the shore.

41. This verse describes the result of the attempt.

42. "The soldiers counseled." The mariners had no special interest in the prisoners, but the soldiers were answerable for them should they escape. Compare Acts 12: 19; 16: 27.

43. "But the centurion, desiring to save Paul, stayed them from their purpose." R. V. He recognized what Paul had done for them all, and doubtless appreciated his character and nobleness. "Commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves overboard, and get first to the land." R. V.

44. "The rest." Those who could not swim. "They all escaped safe to the land." A fulfillment of the promise to Paul (verse 24).

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Paul used his common sense as well as trusted in God.

2. Paul communicated his assurance of protection to others, comforting them in fear.

Our Scripture presents to us one of the striking object lessons by which God seeks to teach His children. One criticism that has been made against Christianity is the remoteness of God and the indefiniteness of our knowledge of Him. Here is an elementary lesson in revelation: the obedience of the sons of Jonadab had and was to continue to have visible and perpetual reward. If we but heeded the things near at hand that are His work and that reveal His character and purpose, we would never feel separated from Him nor ignorant of His will.

We see also how He entrusts His work to man: He depended upon the faithfulness of Jaazaniah and his brethren to furnish to Judah a type of obedience. What if they had betrayed His confidence?

The Church stands as the visible agent and representative of God in the earth to-day. The destructiveness wrought to body and mind and spirit by the use of intoxicants is terrible enough to mark it a thing that is contrary to His loving will. We cannot imagine Him looking with complacency upon the wrecking of His creatures, and yet we, His professed children, have not, in all the years of the increasing flood of drink, set ourselves to execute the sentence of annihilation upon this evil. Are we keeping faith with God? We misrepresent Him if we compromise with sin or sit down in disheartenment in its presence. Much more do those misrepresent Him who patronize the very agency that breeds the ruin. There are still ministers in Christian churches who defend the social glass, and members who use wine and stronger drinks as a beverage or a self-prescribed medicine. We remember that we are not to judge, but it must appear to most of us that if they are ignorant of the evil they do, both to themselves and to others, their ignorance is in itself culpable.

No one hesitates to condemn intemperance, yet that Chicago daily that classed together the "drunkards and drinkers" as those who would reimburse the liquor dealers for their outlay in license fees was right, despite the protests of a Washington editor. The line is between the user and the abstainer, and no other line exists. It is only the abstainer who is sure not to be harmed by drink. The famous Paris poster with which the health authorities placarded that city, and which the French government has ordered placed in the army barracks, says: "Truly, alcohol is good for nobody, but works injury to everybody." The eminent English professor, Sir Victor Horsely, said recently: "The value of alcohol as a drug has been enormously overestimated. It is a very poor agent, and the medical profession is using it less and less. Either as a food or as a drug we recognize that alcohol is of no service to the community."

The New York navy yard is to be surrounded by a belt of prohibition territory, as are the army posts in the Philippines. My boy passes within a street's width of a saloon every time he goes to the grocery. Our soldiers and sailors ought to be protected, but so also ought the children and young people who are besieged in their very homes by this enemy. If drink unfits the soldier for duty, no less does it destroy the usefulness of mechanic, engineer, accountant, surgeon, lawyer—workman with hand or brain of whatever grade.

No more important economic or social question exists to-day than that which is bound up with the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, and the one solution is the enforcement of the "Thou shalt not" that God utters against every evil indulgence and unholy compromise.

FRIENDS' AFRICA INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

The following is from a report dated Kaismosi, British East Africa, Fourth month 1st, 1903:

"Arthur Chilson conducts the Gospel services and I the school—all, of course, in Swahili. . . . The attention at the Gospel services is good, and I believe growing in interest. The attendance at my Swahili class is from sixteen to twenty, and the interest very good. The boys are very anxious to learn to read and write. Some of them know the alphabet, and are beginning to form words. We use slates and pencils, and I am greatly feeling the need of some sort of reading sheets or Swahili primers. . . .

"The small hand grain mill which we purchased in London came with the iron house, and is now set up. It will be very useful.

"Yesterday Arthur Chilson had his left leg badly crushed above the ankle between a log and a tree. No bones are broken, but the injury is severe, and will make it necessary for him to lay aside for several days at least. . . .

"Fourth month 8th. It is now more than a week since Arthur was injured, and he is still unable to be about unless carried, or move about a very little on crutches. We have daily united prayers for his leg, and it seems to be mending very rapidly. The injury was indeed very severe, and it is a miracle that he has an unbroken left limb to his body. Oh, how good the Lord is in preserving us!

"The dear Lord is turning even this to His own account. Last First-day an enormous crowd from the surrounding country came in to the Gospel service. Arthur still conducts the services. We carry him out under the tree where we have our log seats. The news of the accident spread all over the country, and the natives came in to see the wounded white man and hear him preach. It was the largest crowd we have ever had for a service, and the attention and interest was very unusual. The sympathy of the natives as it is drawn out is in many cases very touching. . . .

"I can never thank the Lord enough for allowing me to come here for Him. I appreciate the precious privilege more and more as the days go by.

"Very sincerely,

"EDGAR T. HOLE."

A pamphlet containing a concise account of the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission from its inception to the present time together with short biographical sketches of the missionaries, Willis R. Hotchkiss, Edgar T. Hole, Elisha Blackburn, Emory J. Rees and families, and Arthur B. Chilson, is now ready for distribution. The financial statement shows that $6,118.70 were spent the first year, leaving a balance on hand of $3,427.72. The estimated expenses for the current year are $4,620.00. Friends who desire a copy of this pamphlet should address Emma B. Malone, Cleveland, Ohio.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND is one of our necessities during summer vacation.

Howard University,
Washington, D. C.

ROBERT B. WARDER.

Special railroad rates have been made for the attenders of New York Yearly Meeting.

James Price, formerly of Portland, Oregon, is now located in the meeting at Salem, Oregon.

Harry R. Keates is at home again in Glen's Falls, N. Y., after an absence of about four months.

We are sorry to hear that Thomas Newlin has been called to Indianapolis by the death of his mother.

Prof. J. W. Woody lectured at Guilford College the evening of the 17th inst., on his recent visit to Palestine and Jerusalem.

Alfred Cook, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, writes encouragingly concerning a union revival service, now in progress in that city. He has a desire to see a Friends' meeting at that point, and will be glad to correspond with any who may feel called to labor to that end.

The commencement of High Point Normal and Industrial School was held last week, closing a successful year of work.

Kinley Blair, a prominent elderly member of Newberg Meeting, Oregon, recently met with a serious accident, losing the sight of one eye.

Susanna Scott, who spent the past year with her daughter, wife of John Hodson, of Newberg, Oregon, is now at home in Fairmount, Ind.

Thomas C. Brown, of Carmel, will preach the baccalaureate sermon at Overman Hall, 31st inst., for the Bloomingdale Academy, Class of 1903.

John R. Webb, a minister in Canada Yearly Meeting, has received a minute to attend New York Yearly Meeting, which begins this week in New York City.

Sarah A. Kelsey, of Western Springs, Ill., made a short visit the latter part of Fourth month with her son, Prof. Rayner Kelsey, and wife, of Newberg, Oregon.

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting will be held at Greenwood, Iowa, Sixth month 6th. The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight will meet on Sixth-day, the 5th, at 2 p.m.

From many sources we are receiving hearty commendation of the plan to raise a Biblical Fund in memory of Harriet Green, and the idea is now working on many hearts.

The committees appointed for that purpose, in conjunction with the yearly meeting trustees, are making arrangements for Indiana Yearly Meeting's sessions to be held at Marion.

Indiana Yearly Meeting Union of Christian Endeavor will hold its convention at Earlham College, Seventh month 28th and 29th, just preceding the Bible Institute. Half-fare rates are secured for the occasion.

C. A. Tebbetts and his wife, Mary Tebbetts, accompanied Elizabeth Miles to Newberg, where they will spend the summer. C. A. Tebbetts addressed the afternoon session of Newberg Quarterly Meeting on Fifth month 9th.

A letter from Miriam Douglas says that her husband, John Henry Douglas, is slowly gaining and is decidedly better than when our last report was given. He, however, does not see any one yet except those who have the care of him.

George Hull, who is the yearly meeting's superintendent of Bible School work for Farmington Quarterly Meeting, Ind., has been visiting all the schools in the quarterly meeting; in his absence the meeting at Hartland has been cared for by members of his family.

Bloomingdale Quarterly Meeting, Ind., was held on the 16th and 17th inst. The ministers present were Jeremiah Hubbard, of Indian Territory; Lewis E. Stout, of Plainfield, Ind.; Griffith Wright, of Mooresville, Ind., and Richard Haworth, of Quaker, Ind. Much good counsel was given.

California Yearly Meeting of Friends will convene at Whittier, Cal., Sixth month 24th, 1903. Meeting for Ministry and Oversight, Sixth month 23d, 1903. For information concerning entertainment for this meeting address P. C. Hadley or Lenna J. Morris, Whittier, Cal, Committee on Entertainment.

At Sand Creek Monthly Meeting, Ind., held the 2d inst., nine members were received by request and one by letter from the Methodist Episcopal denomination. Lewis E. Stout delivered a temperance lecture at the last session. David Hadley was present on Seventh-day, and preached. The call for money for the Earlham building fund was answered by a nice sum.

A temperance meeting of delegates, ministers and others was held at Knightstown, Ind., Fifth month 14th, 1903. Dr. T. R. Woodard served as chairman, and Julia Newby as secretary. The following persons made addresses and remarks on the occasion: Daisy Barr, from Greenfield, Ind.; J. F. Randolph, Kennard, Ind.; Oliver Gottshall, from Lewisville, Ind.; Mercer Brown, Spiceland, Ind.; E. G. Sanderson, State Superintendent Anti-Saloon League, Indianapolis. A good-sized audience attended both day and evening sessions.

An attempt has been made to burn the house occupied by Fred L. Ryon, of Clintondale, N. Y. The attempt was evidently made because of the strenuous efforts which Clintondale Friends have been making to prevent the hotel in that place from securing a license to sell liquor. "Blessed are ye when men persecute you for righteousness' sake."

Elizabeth Miles, after almost a year's absence, has now returned to her home in Newberg, Oregon. She spent last summer with her daughter, the wife of Prof. Morrison, of Penn College; the past winter she spent with her sister, Mary Tebbetts, of Pasadena, Cal., and en route home she made a three-weeks' visit with her brother, Joel Bean, of San Jose, Cal.

Prof. Thomas Newlin, of Guilford College, preached the baccalaureate sermon at High Point on the 17th inst., the occasion being the annual exercises of the school for colored people, in which Friends of New York Yearly Meeting are interested. In the evening he preached on a similar occasion at Winston-Salem, twenty miles distant, to the city graded school for whites.

Arrangements for the Earlham Bible Institute are going forward in the usual way. It will be held from Seventh month 29th to Eighth month 6th. Half-fare rates on the railroads have been obtained. Among the workers will be Mrs. Antoinette Lamoreaux, Prof. Ira M. Price, Elbert Russell, P. W. Raidabaugh, C. W. Hodgkin, R. E. Pretlow, J. B. Wright, Lewis E. Stout, E. O. Ellis and David Hadley. The program announcing the full list will be out at the usual time.

Harry R. Keates spent four days, 8th to 12th inst., in Minneapolis, Minn. He attended two meetings of Friends on First-day, the 10th, besides addressing the Y. M. C. A. at the State University, at 3 o'clock, and Friends' Y. P. S. C. E. at 6.30 p.m. Notwithstanding three of the four days were exceedingly inclement he visited many Friends in their homes and some at their places of business. His messages at the several meetings were encouraging and helpful, and were well received.

In connection with the approaching Yearly Meeting of Friends for New England, to meet in Portland, Me., the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will hold a public meeting on Second-day, Sixth month 15th, at 7.45 p.m. Louise Manning Hodgkins, editor of "Woman's Missionary Friend," will speak on the theme, "A Guest of Missions." Having twice traveled over the world in the interest of missions, she brings a vast fund of information to bear upon the work, and she covets the young people for her audience. An earnest invitation is extended to all.

A series of two-days' meetings have been arranged for in Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting, Kansas. Two appointments, one at South Fairview, Kansas, the 16th and 17th inst., and the other at Glen Elder, Kansas, the 23d and 24th inst., have already been filled. The others are Walnut Creek, Kansas, the 30th and 31st inst.; Oak Creek and Pleasant Valley, Kansas, 6th and 7th prox.; Elwood, Nebraska, the 13th and 14th; Sherman, Kansas, the 20th and 21st, and North Branch, Kansas, the 27th and 28th. All visiting workers are invited to attend these meetings.

The semi-annual report of the work at West Milton, Ohio, is encouraging. The resident minister, F. C. Stanley, has preached 55 sermons, visited 84 families, and made over 200 religious calls. Two weeks of revival meetings have been held, resulting in 45 conversions and renewals. Twenty-seven have united with the meeting, making the present membership 170. The meeting has expended over $400 for all purposes during the past six months. Subscriptions have been taken to build a home for the resident minister, which will cost eight or ten hundred dollars. It is just one hundred years since the first Friends' meetings were held in the vicinity, though the meetings were not regularly established till a year or two later. The old West Branch Quarterly Meeting House, which was built in 1817, but which has been vacated for a number of years, has just been sold, and $200 of the proceeds appropriated on the new building fund.

Marion George is located in the meeting at Portland, Oregon. He spends a part of each week with his family in Newberg, where they will continue to reside until after the close of the academic year at Pacific College.

At Le Grand Monthly Meeting, Iowa, held the 9th ult., Harry Hayes returned the minute for evangelistic work granted him a year ago. His report of the year's work was very satisfactory, and his gospel work in his home meeting was refreshing to all. He was granted another minute for the same kind of work for the coming year. The Bible School work is gaining in interest and attendance, and the meeting decided to add two new departments—the "home" and "cradle roll." Thus all members will come in touch with the work, whether they can attend the school or not.

Joseph J. Mills, ex-president of Earlham College, on the 9th inst. gave a lecture, illustrated with stereopticon views, on Tuskegee Institute, which he has recently visited. This lecture was one of the series which has been given on Seventh-day evenings in connection with the open church work of South Eighth Street Meeting, Richmond, Ind. On this occasion the house was crowded, and the speaker vividly pictured the work of Booker T. Washington, and instructively portrayed the prospects of better conditions for the negro, through the principles advocated and practiced by that eminent philanthropist. The lecture was greatly appreciated by all who heard it. Other speakers among many on similar occasions have been President R. L. Kelly, Allen Jay, Harriet Green, D. W. Dennis, C. W. Hodgkin, E. O. Ellis and R. L. Sackett.

In accordance with an understanding that Willis R. Hotchkiss had when starting to Africa, a little more than a year ago, that he should return in a year's time and visit the different yearly meetings, and return later with his wife and child, he has arrived on American soil, and has brought with him a vocabulary of over 2,000 words of the Kavironda language. These tribes have no written language, and Willis R. Hotchkiss has been compelled to dig out the language, making a grammar for it. He has been working very faithfully on this line during his months in Africa, and will now superintend the publication of this grammar and vocabulary, and perhaps a primer to be used in the teaching of the language. As time and way opens for him he will visit the yearly meetings and other points in the interests of the African work. The president of the Board, P. W. Raidabaugh, Plainfield, Ind., has been appointed to arrange appointments for him, and will be glad to hear from any meeting that might want his service for lectures or First-day services. The Lord has wonderfully opened up the way for the Africa Industrial Mission work in the very heart of the continent, and is prospering it.

Events and Comments.

The General Assembly of Presbyterians, just held at Los Angeles, Cal., strongly protested against Sabbath desecration and condemned seven-day journalism.

The first British Transvaal Parliament was opened in the Raadsaal at Pretoria last week by Arthur Lawley, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Transvaal. The chamber was filled, those present including the military officials, the judges, the clergy and the civil authorities, all in uniforms or in robes.

The United States had all kinds of weather last week. The section east of the Allegheny Mountains was burning up. The great agricultural West was complaining of too much moisture. Several suffered from the heat in Eastern cities and $5,000,000 worth of sheep and cattle perished in a heavy snow storm in Montana.

DOCTOR ON FOOD

Experimented on Himself.

A physician of Galion, Ohio, says: "For the last few years I have been a sufferer from indigestion, and although I have used various remedies and prepared foods with some benefit it was not until I tried Grape-Nuts that I was completely cured.

"As a food it is pleasant and agreeable, very nutritious and is digested and assimilated with very little effort on the part of the digestive organs. As a nerve food and restorer it has no equal, and as such is especially adapted to students and other brain workers. It contains the elements necessary for the building of nerve tissue and by so doing maintains an equilibrium of waste and repair.

"It also enriches the blood by giving an increased number of red blood corpuscles, and in this way strengthens all the organs, providing a vital fluid made more nearly perfect. I take great pleasure in recommending its use to my patients, for I value it as a food and know it will benefit all who use it." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

occasion of the approaching bicentenary of that city. The police have requested the owners of workshops and factories to refuse a holiday to their employees during the festivities, but the men will probably refuse to work. Revolutionist emissaries have been flooding the workshops with seditious literature.

Four native students connected with the missionary establishment of the American Board of Foreign Missions on the Island of Ruk, one of the Caroline group, were arrested by the German authorities on the island and taken away on a German cruiser. It is rumored that their offense was talking against the German Government. Secretary Hay has taken the matter up, and it is also being investigated by the Berlin officials.

Some of the cotton mills are finding that they can make more money at the present price of cotton by selling stocks on hand and shutting down than by continuing to operate the factories. The Cannon mills at Concord, N. C., have just sold 1,500 bales of cotton at 12 cents a pound, which cost 7.3 cents. The price of spot cotton in New York broke all previous records since 1890 one day last week by selling at 12.15 cents a pound. In 1890 it sold at 12.75 cents.

Cuba celebrated the first anniversary of her independence on the 20th instant. The festivities began at midnight and continued for twenty-four hours. All Cuba was in a frenzy of delight. The streets of Havana were thronged with people, and business throughout the island was virtually at a standstill. This first year of independence has been one of successful administration and respect for law, and it has greatly strengthened the courage and hope of Cuba's friends.

The permanent treaty between the United States and Cuba, in which is incorporated all the provisions of the Platt amendment, has been signed by the plenipotentiaries of both countries. The Cuban Government desired to include in the treaty various extraneous conditions, especially one to the effect that there should be no intervention in Cuban affairs by the United States, except through the initiative of the President of Cuba. All these conditions were rejected.

The long-threatened resistance to the payment of education taxes by the English Nonconformists, on account of the new law giving State aid to denominational schools, appears to have come to a head. R. J. Campbell, the successor of the late Dr. Joseph Parker, announces that he will pay only that portion of his tax which is not to be used for sectarian purposes, and he threatens Premier Chamberlain with political extinction if he makes good his menace of imprisonment.

Chinese official returns show that the imports from the United States in 1902 amounted to 30,136,713 Haikwan taels, against 23,529,606 taels in 1901, and is the largest total in the history of commerce between China and the United States. It is six times as much as in 1895, two and one-half times as much as in 1897, about 35 per cent. more than in 1899, and nearly 30 per cent. larger than in 1901. Cotton goods, kerosene oil and flour continue to form the chief imports from the United States.

The work covered 1,200 miles of track, and included about 55,000 poles, upon which were strung 15,000 miles of wire.

THE FOOL'S PRAYER.

The royal feast was done; the King Sought out some new sport to banish care,
And to his jester said: "Sir Fool, Kneel now, and make for us a prayer!"

He bowed his head, and bent his knee
Upon the monarch's silken stool;
His pleading voice arose: "O, Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

"No pity, Lord, could change the heart
From red with wrong to white as wool:

The rod must heal the sin; but Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

"Our faults no tenderness should ask—
The chastening stripes must cleanse them all.

But for our blunders—oh, in shame,
Before the eyes of heaven we fall!"

"Earth bears no balsam for mistakes; Men crown the knave, and scourge the tool

That did his will; but Thou, O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

The room was hushed; in silence rose
The King and sought his gardens cool;
And walked apart, and murmured low,
"Be merciful to me, a fool!"

I YIELD ME TO THY HAND.

Ah, that sharp thrill through all my frame!

And yet once more. Withstand

I can no longer, in Thy name

I yield me to Thy hand.

Such pangs were in the soul unborn,

The fear, the joy were such,

When first it felt that keen morn

A dread, creating touch—

Maker of man! Thy pressure sure

This grosser stuff must quell,

The spirit faints, yet will endure.

Subdue, control, compel.

The Potter's finger shaping me,

Praise, praise! the clay curves up

Not for dishonor, though it be God's least adorned cup.

MEAL TIME CONSCIENCE.

What Do the Children Drink?

There are times when mother or father feeds the youngsters something that they know children should not have. Perhaps it is some rich dessert, but more often it is tea or coffee. Some compromise by putting in so much hot water that there is not much tea or coffee left, but even that little is pretty certain to do harm. It leads to bigger doses. Then come the coffee ills.

It is better to have some delicious, hot, food drink that you can take yourself and feed to your children conscious that it will help and strengthen, and never hurt them. A lady of Oneida, N. Y., says: "I used coffee many years in spite of the conviction that it injured my nervous system and produced my nervous headaches. While visiting a friend I was served with Postum, but it was not well made, still I determined to get a package and try it myself, and after following directions carefully the result was all that could be desired; a delicious, finely flavored, richly colored beverage. Since I quit coffee Postum has worked wonders for me.

"My husband who always suffered from kidney trouble when drinking coffee quit the coffee and took up Postum with me, and since drinking Postum he has felt stronger and better with no indication of kidney trouble.

"You may be sure I find it a great comfort to have a warm drink at meals that I can give my children with a clear conscience that it will help them and not hurt them as coffee or tea would." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A GRAND OLD CHERRY TREE.

Sometimes the fruit on a single tree is worth more than two or three acres of wheat. There is a tree in Northern Delaware, seventy to eighty years old, that has produced an average of fifty dollars' worth of fruit annually for nearly twenty years. One year the cherries sold for eighty dollars. Six years ago this old patriarch bore fifty-four peach baskets of delicious fruit, or about eleven hundred pounds. And all of this fruit has been a free gift from nature, as the old tree has stood in the dooryard all these years unattended and uncared for except in cherry time.—From "Country Life in America."

We cannot rekindle the morning beams of childhood; we cannot recall the noontide glory of youth; we cannot bring back the perfect day of maturity; we cannot fix the evening rays of age in the shadowy horizon; but we can cherish that goodness which is the sweetness of childhood, the joy of youth, the strength of maturity, the honor of old age, and the bliss of saints.—Henry Giles.

SOME Mixed Paints may be better than others, but it cannot be said that there is no poor Mixed Paint. There is plenty of it. Naturally, every manufacturer claims his own particular Mixture is the best.

There is no mystery about Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. They are the standard—the staples in the business. They may not afford the dealer as large a profit as the Mixtures, but they make the best Paint.

WASH GOODS IN BLACK

Black dresses for summer need not necessarily be uncomfortably warm if one chooses the materials carefully. There are plenty of dainty and dressy thin materials that are as cool and airy as the white goods. We have an unusually large and attractive stock of them selected with an eye to comfort as well as style and beauty:

Black Silk Muslin—rivals China silk in appearance and style, but is much less expensive—30c. to 50c. a yard.

Black Embroidered Swisses—make dressy gowns, but are as sheer and thin as their pale-face sisters.—60c. and 75c.

Black Batiste Lace Stripes—make cool afternoon gowns, and are here in many dainty patterns—15c. to 25c.

Black Madras—a cool, semi-dressy fabric. In lace open-work effect, in figures that have the lustre of silk, and in a host of other designs that give a dressy material at little cost—15c. to 25c.

Black Lawn—run with little lines of open-work like fine hemstitching, with lace stripes in smart canvas effects, with tiny figures that give a delightful play of light on the sombre surface—10c. to 25c.

A WAVE OF THE SEA.

*O you who scan your faith with anxious look,
And half believing still a sign require;
Lest the new wisdom of the next new book
Should show your God mere child of your desire;
I tell you if the star-lit silence spoke
For your sake, and your sadness to dispel,
Out of the night in a white-winged music broke,
Such as of old o'er upland pastures fell;*

*Yes, and much more—if as you stood in fear
Whether to take or leave Him, there drew nigh
The Christ Himself, and said in accents clear:
"Behold My hands, My feet, that it is I,"
You would but say "My mind is so unstrung,
Forever harping on a single chord,
It seemed to me one night that angels sung;
I could have said that I had seen the Lord."*

"NOT AS THE SCRIBES."

THERE have been few more arid and juiceless things in our world of human beings than the Scribes. They burrowed in the past and lived on the bits of truth which they could mine out of dead men's books. They wrote comments on the comments of other men who had written commentaries on what live and inspired men had once written or spoken. A thing was true, for them, not because they knew its truth, but because they could trace it back through a long succession of great Scribes to some real authority, and they maintained that there was an unbroken line of Scribes from Moses down to the particular Scribe who happened to be giving his opinion. Their course of argument would run something like this: "There is a sun which gives light to the earth. We know this because Rabbi Jehoshaphat says that Rabbi Josiah was right in agreeing with Rabbi Benoni that there must be a sun because Joshua told it to stand still in Gibeon, and he could not have said this if there were no sun!" What a revolution it would make in this style of teaching to have a man come and say with authority, "There is a sun because when you look up with your eyes open you see it!"

This is precisely what the Saviour did. He did not rest any of His teaching on the authority of some dead Scribe who rested his authority on an earlier Scribe, and so on to the end of the line. He simply brought men face to face with spiritual facts, and told them to open their eyes and see for themselves. The proof that there is a God is that the pure in heart see Him. The proof that it is blessed to be merciful is that you go on growing more merciful. The proof that Christ's followers are the salt of the earth is that they actually do keep society from spoiling and from corruption. In every word He goes straight to the heart of reality, and grounds all His teaching and His promises on the eternal nature of things. There is the same unerring certainty in His words that the astronomer feels when he predicts an eclipse. If the laws of the world hold good that eclipse must come. So Christ sees what is in the nature of God, and in the nature of man, and what the outcome of every condition of life must be. His spiritual conclusions are as unescapable as the law of gravitation. They can be tested and proved in personal experience, and a man may know whether it is well with his soul as unmistakably as whether it is well with his body. It was an entirely new way of teaching truth, and the people who heard were "astonished." The words gripped their lives, and they saw the reality of what he said. It was something like the experience which the country boy has. He has heard his father tell about electricity, and what it can do, and he believes because his father tells him. Then he goes to district school and he hears more wonders about it, and he believes because the book says so and his teacher confirms it. Finally he goes to college. He sees the car going without any horses. He sees the buildings lighted without any oil. He talks through the telephone. He sees the telegraph at work. He watches the great dynamo generate its mighty current. He experiments himself with the strange force. He learns its laws and its methods. He puts his hands on the electrodes and feels the current within him. Now he speaks of electricity with authority. We Christians need to astonish the people with this same first-hand authority when we speak of spiritual things, for there is little power in those who still speak as the Scribes.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

OUR friend Joshua L. Baily, who has for eight years served faithfully and efficiently as president of the National Temperance Society, has declined to accept a re-election to the position, owing to the fact that his home is too remote from the headquarters of the Society for him to devote himself to the work as much as he has felt he ought to do. The service which he has rendered has been whole-hearted, and it has been justly appreciated by his co-workers. Through a long lifetime Joshua L. Baily has been a strenuous and consistent opponent of the drink evil. In the multitude of addresses which he has delivered one will look in vain for any bitterness toward other opponents of the evil who saw their way clear to fight it on different lines and by different methods. He has wisely devoted all his energies against the evil itself, and his steady, logical, sane words have always carried weight and conviction. Would that we had a thousand volunteers to follow his example. The minute which has been adopted by the managers of the National Temperance Society is a beautiful tribute and shall be given in full: "The National Temperance Society reluctantly consents to accept the resignation of our beloved and ever-faithful brother, Joshua L. Baily, who has served us in the presidency of this society for eight years with such unselfish devotion and unwearied activity. He has contributed not only with great liberality to our treasury, but has given his valuable time, his vigorous pen, his sagacious counsels, and the great weight of his personal influence to the furtherance of our cause and the welfare of our society. To the list of eminent philanthropists who have occupied our executive chair, we now add with grateful pride the honored name of Joshua L. Baily, and our sincere prayer is that our heavenly Father may grant to him many more years of abounding activity and usefulness in every enterprise of Christian benevolence that lies near to his generous heart. May the 'Beauty of the Lord our God be upon him;' with long life may he be satisfied and with the blessings of a full salvation."

The society has selected Dr. D. Stuart Dodge as Joshua L. Baily's successor. He is the son of William E. Dodge, who was the first president of the society.

SINCE our last issue we have been made very happy by the receipt of a check for $1,000 for the Harriet Green Memorial Fund. The letter, which is from a Philadelphia Friend, says, "I recognize in her the true apostolic succession." This is a most encouraging beginning, and we trust others will follow with such gifts as they can properly make. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will gladly receive subscriptions, which will be acknowledged and forwarded to the proper person. The brief story of Harriet Green's life, which is being told by Esther Tuttle Pritchard, should make every reader feel anew how unselfishly she was devoted to her Master.

Work is given to men not only, nor so much, perhaps, because the world needs it. Men make work, but work makes men. An office is not a place for making money, it is a place for making men. A workshop is not a place for making machinery, for fitting engines and turning cylinders; it is a place for making souls, for fitting in the virtues to one's life, for turning out honest, modest, whole-natured men. . . . For Providence cares less for winning causes than that men, whether losing or winning, should be great and true; cares nothing that reforms should drag their cause from year to year bewilderingly, but that men and nations, in carrying them out, should find there education, discipline, unselfishness and growth in grace.—Henry Drummond.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

HARRIET GREEN.

BY ESTHER TUTTLE PRITCHARD.

[Fallen, while thy loins were girded still,
Thy feet with Zion's dews still wet,
And in thy hand retaining yet
The pilgrim's staff and scallop-shell!

—Whittier, on Daniel Wheeler.

Thy latest care for man—thy last
Of earthly thought, a prayer—
Oh, who thy mantle, backward cast,
Is worthy now to wear?

Methinks the mound which marks thy bed
Might bless our land and save,
As rose, of old, to life the dead
Who touched the prophet's grave!

—Whittier, on William Forster.]

Carefully reared, religiously inclined, and the strong foundations of character firmly laid, Harriet Green yet lacked the one thing without which her heart could never be satisfied or the mission of her life accomplished. But the Holy Spirit was preparing her for it, and the gracious change was wrought one day as she sat alone in her room with her Bible. A sudden flash of illumination on John 3: 16 revealed to her the redeeming love of God in Christ Jesus, and she at once believed unto eternal life. The witness of forgiveness and acceptance was definite and joyful and never interrupted to the day of her death. She thankfully witnessed to the experience in a season of family devotion, and the testimony was owned to the blessing of other members of the household.

From this time she had a heart at leisure from itself and aglow with expansive, outreaching love for souls.

From the radiant moment when first she found the Lord until her feet stood at the entrance of the city of light, her life was one long exemplification of faithfulness in that which was least and promotion to be a ruler over more.

Beginning her evangelistic work in her own neighborhood, gathering poor women together on Sabbath afternoons for Bible readings in her father's house or garden, she took her first lessons in soul-winning, and was favored to see the transforming power of divine grace on the hearts of the women. Then in her twenty-first year she was transferred, in the providence of God, to the larger field of the East London slums.

Her brother, Dr. Green, having just begun the practice of medicine in London, Harriet went with sisterly devotion, to preside over his home, little dreaming that such a mission field awaited her, in which she was for years to gather crown jewels for the Master. I regret that so few details of this work are at my command, and that I cannot give the immediate circumstances that led her into it. I only know that she began to visit the poor women in their squalid homes, and shortly after to conduct a mother's meeting for them in the old Friends' meeting house in Peele Court. At the first meeting not more than a half dozen were in attendance, and they almost literally in rags and tatters, but week after week the number increased, until, for many years, the average attendance was over one hundred.

The girlhood of this youthful missionary had been protected and guarded in her English home to a degree almost unknown in American families, and she knew nothing of the vice and degradation with which these women had always been familiar. But she knew the human heart, and that she herself had found a great Saviour, and so she simply and lovingly told the message of salvation to these poor creatures, many of whom believed and found Jesus. She had struck the secret of true Christian sociology, and the mighty leverage of the cross was demonstrated in the new hearts, purer lives and cleaner homes, down in the slums. Husbands and sons felt the power of a new and blessed agency, and often one of them would yield himself to Christ.

For months after this work began the tide of saving grace flowed on without interruption, and then it began unaccountably to ebb. The Bible woman called attention to a falling off in the number of conversions, and yet there seemed no failure in the character of the Bible readings. Harriet Green went home to spread the case before the Lord and inquire the cause. She became impressed that it was owing to her own unfaithfulness in Friends' meetings for worship. Westminster Meeting, which she attended, was the one in which John Bright and other members of Parliament worshiped, with their families, while Parliament was in session, and it was no easy place for a young woman to begin her public service. Her shrinking heart ventured a delay until her mother should visit London, and then, assured by her presence, she opened her lips in a brief comment on the text, "He saw them toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary unto them." From that time her voice was heard not only in the mothers' meetings, addressing the lowly and ignorant, but in the cultured assemblies of her ancestral church, at first occasionally, and then more frequently, until her matured gift was officially acknowledged in 1877. Meantime the mission work in the East End had revived and the blessing of the Lord was again resting upon it. An appalling accident occurred during this period, that profoundly impressed her with the importance of a faithful ministry. Thirty of her poor women, together with hundreds of others, had gone out in the Princess Alice for an excursion on the Thames, when their vessel collided with a steamer and sank, drowning nearly all that were on board. Her sensitive conscience could not escape the query whether these women were ready for eternity, and whether she had done her whole duty?

In 1879 Dr. Green married, and his faithful sister returned to Saffron Walden. A long interval succeeded before the death of her parents, during which she was occupied in varied service. Now she is in charge of a little orphanage in which a dozen girls, daughters of farmers, are being trained for teachers; again she and a sister are holding gospel meetings in the neighborhood with good results; later she is holding series of meetings in adjacent villages, often driving home herself, ten or twelve miles, after nightfall. Drunkards give up the saloon and are converted, the careless are transformed into workers for others, and many are built up.

And now, at last, the home nest is rifled of its treasures. The sister, mother and father have all gone on, and Harriet Green is wholly at liberty for the wide and whitened fields. The greater part of two years are spent in holding meetings among Friends and others in England and Ireland, sometimes alone and sometimes with fellow laborers, among whom was our own John Dorland.

She was especially interested in young women, and made it a point to have interviews with them, discerning their gifts and encouraging them to confess their Saviour, and to press out in the ministry of the word. Numerous tributes have been received by the family since her decease, acknowledging how helpful she has been to this class. One such letter lies before me in which the writer, an American girl, says of her: "Everywhere she has been she has left a deep impression of goodness, and will be sadly lost to all who have heard her good counsel and felt her love reaching out toward them and leading them up to God. The words she spoke remained with us to be recalled often, and the very thought of her is an inspiration. I am so glad I met her and knew her even a little."

It is not easy to keep trace of a life-work so many-sided, and we must leave it to the reader to imagine the filling in of Harriet Green's important service in the limits of her own yearly meeting. It was both executive and evangelistic. Actively engaged on the Home Mission Committee, the most effective evangelistic agency of English Friends, a member of the Bible and Prayer League, and one of the organizers of the Young Women's Christian Fellowship Union, which corresponds closely to our Christian Endeavor Society—everywhere and always she seems to have been seeking a point of contact where she could helpfully take hold of the Lord's work.

At one time we find her located for months in a little village that she may be of service to a weak and struggling Friends' meeting—and she succeeded. At first no one took part in the Sabbath services but herself, but before she left, the people had become so revived that there was no opportunity for her to speak, at least in the morning meeting.

It was during the above year—1895—that she heard a Macedonian cry from our American shores, saying, "Come over and help us." The burden of apprehended service among us weighed heavily on her heart, and she deeply felt the responsibility of a step in this direction. Turning for sympathy and counsel to her dear and revered friend, J. Bevan Braithwaite, she obtained permission for an interview without disclosing the object of her visit. But he was led to anticipate the nature of her errand, and when she entered the room he said, "My dear friend, I have for some time past been thinking that thou would be wishing to go to the United States of America."

The impression of duty thus confirmed, and her heart strengthened, she set her face toward our country in the autumn of 1896, attended by Sarah Jane Lury, and bearing the requisite credentials from London Yearly Meeting.

For over a year and a half she labored with tireless energy and devotion in our western and central yearly meetings, braving almost to the limit of her resisting power the rigors of our Northern winters, and enduring hardships that might well have daunted a woman less tenderly reared. In the spring of 1898 she returned to England, exhausted, for a much-needed rest. But her overtaxed energies refused to rebound, and she was soon prostrated with an alarming illness. For months the physicians gave little encouragement of recovery, but in her own mind there was a constant assurance that she would live to resume her American work.

Nearly three years passed in illness and convalescence, and then she came to us again, reaching New York in Tenth month, 1901, and proceeding soon after to Baltimore. The eastern yearly meetings and Canada, Western and Indiana were the scene of her faithful labors for a year. She then attended the Five Years Meeting at Indianapolis, where she was received with marked consideration by the delegations, in whose respective localities she had gone about preaching the gospel, searching out capabilities, encouraging the workers, stimulating fellow servants by her strong and inspiring personality, and grasping the situation in our American meetings as fully as any English Friend has ever done.

A few months later she turned her steps toward North Carolina, where there was a peculiarly open door and inviting field. Nowhere in our great country had she found a more cordial welcome than that which greeted her from the hospitable Southern Friends; but she was not to tarry. The measure of her fruitful ministry was rounded to completeness, and the hour of her departure was at hand. She had repeatedly said to her dear friend and companion, Sophia Fry, that she saw no work beyond America, and there was an evident closing in of earthly prospects.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was attended. On the following day she was powerfully engaged in the ministry of the gospel, and three days later she had gone to be with her Master.

The circumstances of that last brief illness have been mainly given in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and little needs to be added. When she left Greensboro, on the morning of Third month 17th, for the long railway journey of sixty miles to the hospital, she was carried on her couch by four negroes to the train, and calling them to her, before they left, she said: "I may be with your best friend before to-morrow morning. Do you know who He is?" One of the men answered "Jesus," and then she spoke to them of Him. It was her last gospel message. Early in the afternoon she went under the influence of the anæsthetic from which she seems to have but partially rallied. During the night she was praying for individuals, talking to them and arranging for meetings, and in the early morning she peacefully passed away.

Buried at her own request in the old New Garden Cemetery, her precious dust is a legacy to be sacredly guarded. Fanned by the soft airs of our sunny Southland, her grave will speak its pathetic and inspiring message year after year to the students of Guilford College. And aside from the privilege of resting in her native land, I can think of nothing that she would sooner have chosen.

We loved Harriet Green. Probably in no instance has the death of an English Friend been more sincerely mourned in this country. The Church under our name on both continents has sustained a sore bereavement, and in our sorrow our hearts are drawn more closely together in mutual sympathy and fraternal love.

THE PLATFORM OF THE MOHONK CONFERENCE.

At the concluding session of the arbitration conference the following platform was adopted:

"The principle of international arbitration has secured the approval of the civilized world. This fact is solemnly recorded by The Hague convention. It is gratifying to state that, largely through the influence and example of the United States, which had so much to do with the success of The Hague conference, prestige has been given The Hague tribunal by the submission to it of international differences.

"This conference thanks our Government for what it has done in this behalf, especially in the recent Venezuelan controversy, when its efforts averted war. This conference believes that the next step in the steady march forward should be the conclusion of a treaty of obligatory arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, to be followed by similar agreements between the other signatory nations to The Hague convention to refer disputes to The Hague tribunal. Such treaties would make the present implied obligations of the nations signing them explicit, binding and permanent, instead of leaving them, as now, under The Hague convention, voluntary and to be determined from time to time, and largely by circumstances.

TWO POWERS UNITED.

"This conference believes that the best public opinion of the United States and Great Britain, neighbors and kinsfolk as they are, recognizes the wisdom and justice of such an arrangement, and that the example thus set would be followed speedily by the other Powers. It would lead all the nations to The Hague tribunal.

"With a deep sense of the fatherhood of God, and the consequent brotherhood of man, the conference looks forward to new victories for its cause even more remarkable than those already won, notwithstanding the difficulties in the way of extending the application of international arbitration. Many motives may inspire arbitration—fear, horror of war, dread of expense; but justice is the only safe foundation for the world's peace. In the Alaskan boundary dispute, who should not prefer that justice should prevail, even if we make no gain of hills and harbors? America should conduct this claim with such loyalty to justice as to win the honor of the nations.

ALL CALLED TO PREACH PEACE.

"This conference summons all possible agents to teach and preach the gospel of justice—business men and great corporations, teachers in schools, ministers of God, the public press; let our whole country accept the great motto and seek to live up to it. America loves justice, it appeals to every man and woman to aid in increasing and organizing the general sentiment in favor of international arbitration so as to secure, by the invincible power of public opinion, the employment of it in the maximum number of possible cases, in the hope that wars may cease and that peace may prevail."

SERVE CHRIST.

I grow weary of the perpetual spurring on of God's people to service—as if any father ever cared so much to have his children toiling for him as loving and trusting him—and the more so as the God-possessed Christian invariably does serve.—C. I. Scofield.

Not in careless pleasure, but in watchful love and trust of God your Father, in faithful, fervent desire to be His child, is the secret of life's victory and of the overcoming of death by life.—Stopford A. Brooke.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

NEW WORDS AS INDICES OF PROGRESS.

BY HORACE J. SMITH.

The intellectual wealth gathered in the last one hundred years, and stored in books and the brain cells of the race, is indicated by new words which have been added to our dictionaries. These words (like the titles stamped on the backs of books, which are concise statements of their contents) are nuggets of thought by which the mind is enriched; they are keen tools, by which the processes of mental work are facilitated. Just realize how much is compressed in the one word "Darwinianism," and in "X-Rays," "wireless telegraphy," "higher criticism," "automobiles," "asepticism"—Lord Lister's portrait looks down on me as I write, a genuinely good Quaker face. The "Underground Railroad" of slavery times, and the "Grape Vine Telegraph" and the negro "contraband" of the Civil War in America, are almost archaic words. "Klondike" is no longer a word to conjure with; but "trusts," "island possessions" and "Morganism" are much to the fore. These words are themselves "biographs" of the wondrous scenes that have been moving before our minds, and are each a crystallization, a condensation of what was once nebulous thought into what are now brilliant stars in the intellectual firmament. What wealth of wisdom our generation has heaped up for all those who are to follow; and truly the words that summarize the enlarged views thus bestowed on futurity are not idle things, but are rather means and media for quick thinking, handy abridgements of vast mental processes, their pith and quintessence, vital elements, brought to birth after painful labor—each such word a resilient diamond, cut rose fashion, with an infinite number of facets.

Just an enumeration of the words born within a life-time tells the intellectual triumphs of the era. Seventy years ago the name "Lucifer match" was unknown; and this "light bearer" of the material world was but a faint prelude to the inventions and discoveries of the intellectual; and yet "cablegrams" "telephones" and "phonographs" are the common-places of the children of to-day. "Gas," a novelty in my childhood, is replaced by "electricity," or supplemented by an "incandescent mantle"; and the "horse car," only used since I was married, is a back number, while "electric trams" (or "trolleys," as they are known in America) are all the go.

Again, take the geographical names added to those of even our early adult years—such as Lakes "Nyanza" and "Tanganyika," "Uganda," "Rhodesia"—how these impress on the mind the wonders of discovery and occupation given us by Livingstone, Stanley and Rhodes. Alaska, the Aleutian seal islands and the Yukon are already familiar as household words. What regions of the earth's surface, as well as of the mental horizon, have been opened up to us lately. And what condensed food for thought each new word embodies! The sickle and the scythe, prehistoric tools, were the ones with which all our crops were cut; and the grain "cradle" was the ultima thule just reached within a life-time. The "mowing machine" was absolutely new at the "Crystal Palace" (and such a buildings was itself a novelty in 1851); but it cut a swath in agriculture, quickly followed by a host of other labor-saving inventions. For women's work we have the "sewing machine" (and what a marvel that was); and now we have the "typewriter," followed by the wondrous "linotype." "Daguerreotypes" have long been superseded by better "light-printing" pictures, so true to the facts presented to the "camera" that when the microscopic picture of the throwing down of the Vendome column was enlarged, the portraits of the participating Anarchists were so clearly shown, that they were convicted on the evidence of the tiny condensation of the scene. And yet, more marvellous than all I have mentioned, are the "spectroscope" and the astral photographs which reveal to us the constituents of the sun, the stars and the nebulae, and show us worlds in the making.

But one's head grows dizzy as one recalls and considers these pregnant words, which are the titles of the soul-inspiring volumes that crowd the shelves of one's mental library. If we would merely take the new words that have been added to our vocabulary within the last seventy years, grouping them under their appropriate heads, one would have a ready index to the discoveries and inventions of the era.

From the time of Abraham material things and processes (with the exception of a few discoveries, such as the magnetic needle, movable types and gun-powder) had remained almost entirely in statu quo, and the dominant systems of religion sterilized the human mind as thoroughly as they could. Verily the rich man, whose barns burst with their fulness, lived in abject poverty, compared with our affluence; and our grandchildren will need larger domes and more immense cathedrals than were ever dreamed of—more spacious area for their brains, if they shall be able to contain all that which is yet to burst upon them.

LIGHTS ALONG THE SHORE.

BY C. F. BUTTERFIELD.

Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ, was a prisoner of the Roman Government under false charges. The journey toward Rome had been one of hardship. Sin had left its stain upon those with whom Paul journeyed; he may have lost hope for the great work of Christ, and there was the shipwreck, an interesting account of which is left to us, through which they passed without loss of life. Finally, while they tarried at Puteoli, messengers hastened to Rome, some with a message to the government that the prisoners had arrived, others, no doubt, with the news to the Christians that Paul was coming among the prisoners. The little bands of Christians then go to meet him. Meanwhile he journeys toward Rome. He meets one little band at Appii-forum, forty-three miles from Rome, another at the Three-taverns, thirteen miles distant, and possibly all along the Appian Way he is greeted by fellow-Christians, "whom when Paul saw (and heard their messages) he thanked God and took courage."

Along the great Appian highway of the world's history, there are facts that give us cheer and encouragement. Christianity is a great force exerting itself for the conversion of the world. It is stemming the tide, it is overcoming the difficulties, it is transforming the world. Facts of its history and present life were never more in harmony with this thought. "Walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof, mark ye well her bulwarks; consider her palaces." Thank God for the stopping places along the way, and the refreshing from above. To change the figure, let us take heart for the lights along the shore that never grows dim.

"Brightly beams our Father's mercy,
From His lighthouse evermore,
But to us He gives the keeping
Of the lights along the shore."

Faith, hope, love, virtue, knowledge, temperance are great radiants from the Light of the World, and were never so prevalent as now. God has granted more yet than we have been able to understand, even though we see some things through tear-stained eyes, and His ripening purpose will not fail though gained through years of training and discipline. We have a good deal to thank God for even though we do not see all just now. Clouds and darkness may be around His throne, but always back of the cloud there is the eternal blue. We should note the encouraging things around us, and with the sainted Dr. Babcock, be strong:

"Be strong!

We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have work to do, and loads to lift;
Shun not the struggle—face it, 'tis God's gift.

"Be strong!

Say not, 'The days are evil. Who's to blame?'
And fold the hands and acquiesce—Oh, shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name.

"Be strong!

It matters not how deep entrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long;
Faint not—fight on! To-morrow comes the song."

Two hundred years B. C., a vast army left New Carthage in Spain for Italy. Before them was toil, hardship, difficulty. They ascended the western slope of the Alps, and having reached the summit, Hannibal addressed his men, saying, "Soldiers, you are now standing on the acropolis of Italy; yonder lies Rome!" As we stand at this crowning moment of the world's history, let us thank God and take courage that beyond the hardship, beyond the sorrow and sighing, there lies the eternal city.

Issued Monthly, under the care of the

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS, OF PHILADELPHIA
YEARLY MEETING.

All communications should be addressed to

ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS, Editor, 343 E. Main Street, Haddonfield, N. J.

The last executive meeting until the Ninth month of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, was held by invitation, at the home of John B. Garrett, Rosemont, Pa., president of the association.

Nearly forty members were present, representing ten or more meetings of our yearly meeting. New members were welcomed; the reports on temperance education, the publication and distribution of literature—the latter including the work of giving out circular letters to medical graduates, the former of influencing public sentiment in favor of the right teaching of scientific temperance instruction—were of interest. There is a good selection of tracts at Friends' Institute, 20 South Twelfth Street. Friends are asked to co-operate in their distribution. A page devoted to temperance will appear monthly in "The Friend." The two pages in THE AMERICAN FRIEND will not be issued again until the Tenth month. A dainty and bounteous supper, followed by a social hour, closed the pleasant and profitable meeting.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The House bar at the national Capitol in Washington has been removed.

In Indiana the Legislature abolished saloons within one mile of military homes.

Texas counties have just made almost a clean sweep of the saloons from their midst.

Statistics just filed at the capital of Maine show 130 towns to be free of debt. Thus does prohibition ruin (?) communities!

A humorous aspect of the case is the organization in Chicago and Jersey City of "The Bartenders and Saloon Keepers' Total Abstinence Society."

In Tennessee nine towns voted out the saloon in one week. In Rogersville the vote was 161 to 1, the lonely voter afterward expressing a desire to make the vote unanimous.

The liquor papers bemoan the rapid growth of prohibition sentiment, even among men, as they confess, "high in public and professional life, who are known to be men with liberal ideas."

Washington's Legislature passed a local option law and refused to repeal the one-mile limit law and the law making saloon keepers and owners of saloon property responsible for damages to heads of families.

The Pennsylvania Legislature has passed a new law under which habitual drunkards may be committed to a hospital for treatment by a court or magistrate.

The Legislature of every State in which there is a soldiers' home ought to pass such a law as shall prohibit the opening of a saloon within three miles of the home.

United States officers who are accused of smuggling liquor into Porto Rico by wholesale do not improve their standing before the public by refusing to give a straight answer to questions asked by the proper officials.

The Supreme Court of Kansas having decided three weeks ago that the injunction feature of the prohibitory law had been repealed in 1901, the Legislature immediately passed a stronger injunction law by a joint vote of 110 to 10.

Representative Reynolds has introduced in the State Legislature a bill proposing that Michigan adopt the State dispensary system for the sale of liquor, his bill being modeled from the law now in force in South Carolina.

A New York clergyman says that society is "a gigantic pie, the upper crust being steeped in champagne, the bottom layer soggy with beer and the middle soaked in whiskey cocktails." About two slices of a sure enough pie constructed that way would make a man think he owned the whole bakery and was driving the delivery wagon himself.

A new order has been issued by the superintendent of the Dubuque division of the Chicago, Great Western Railroad, which has caused something of a sensation among the employees of the road. The order prohibits the men from using intoxicating liquors in any form or at any time, and from visiting saloons. A violation of this rule means the instant dismissal of the offender. It applies to trainmen, station agents, foremen, or any one holding a responsible position with the road.

If all parents in the millions of homes of the nation would strongly impress upon their children that to get the best and the most out of life they must be temperate, if they would teach them from the very start that intemperance will unavoidably ruin their characters and their prospects, then the children would go forth into the battle for success armed with the one quality that is absolutely essential to accomplish anything or to amount to anything in life.

If there were no reason why schoolboys should be prevented from smoking, more serious than that they fill a school room with an aroma that would breed a pestilence among a herd of goats, that would be sufficient cause to resort to drastic remedies; but unfortunately there are graver causes for interference, and it would be in the direction of averting future ignorance, insanity and imbecility, if school authorities were given some statutory power to deal with the question.

The new licensing act, which went into effect and which aims to diminish drunkenness, was enforced by the London judges. The magistrates immediately applied the clause which calls for the publication of a blacklist of habitual drunkards, whose convictions must be made known to the police authorities. These habitual drunkards are debarred, under heavy penalties, from buying intoxicants for a term of three years.

Another clause in the act provides for a fine of £2 or a month's imprisonment for a woman found intoxicated while she is accompanied by any child under 7 years.

AFRICA.

On Eleventh month 15th, 1902, a new ordinance became a law in the Transvaal. It includes provisions for the application of local option by the decision of a majority or the exclusive control of the liquor traffic by trusts for public purposes. The employment of females, children under 16, and natives behind bars is prohibited. The ordinance also provides for the creation of liquor traffic inspection.

DRUNKENNESS.

At the recent meeting of the Anti-Alcohol Congress in Berlin it was stated by Dr. Delbruck, of Bremen, that beer drinking as a means of combating alcoholism has been clearly shown to be a failure. It leads often to the use of distilled liquors, but in itself it produces all the evils of whiskey. "Of 140 patients who were treated in a North Germany private asylum for drunkards, 41 were alcoholized," said Dr.

Delbruck, "by drinking spirits, 30 by wine drinking and 78 by excessive consumption of beer. The belief that delirium tremens is unknown among beer drinkers is a mistake. It is impossible to convey by statistics the extent of the misery caused by beer alcoholism."

DRINK EVIL IN GERMAN ARMY.

The Hereditary Prince of Saxe-Meiningen, commander of the Sixth Army Corps, who recently issued an order advising soldiers to lodge complaints when they were ill treated, has issued another corps order against drunkenness.

He points out to the privates the damaging effects of alcohol on the health and usefulness of men, and directs the regimental doctors to demonstrate to the soldiers its evil effects authoritatively and in a kindly manner.

A HINT FOR BURGESSES.

Burgess Charles H. Pennypacker, of West Chester, is about to adopt a novel scheme to suppress drunkenness on the streets of that borough, and as a result the "habituals" are well-nigh panic stricken. The burgess outlines his plan as follows:

"On Seventh month 1st I shall present a list of names of men to the tavern keepers of West Chester and forbid them to sell to these men because of their known intemperate habits. This list is being made up of those who have been before me and others as far as I can learn. I am going to complete the list from the 1st of Third month to the 1st of Seventh month—the first four months of my term of office—and I shall hold the tavern keepers for any violation of the order. I expect I shall meet with some opposition, but I am determined to break up this drunkenness, if possible."

In case any hotel keeper violates the notice the burgess will have him brought into the Court of Quarter Sessions. The law is very plain on this matter and this burgess has determined that it shall no longer be ignored where he has jurisdiction.

PROTECT THE INDIANS.

Below is the law which the United States Government has given to protect the Indian Territory against the liquor traffic, and the federal officers of the different districts are appointed to see that this and other laws are enforced:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, that any person who shall sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, or barter any malt, spirituous or vinous liquor of any kind whatever, or any essence, extract, bitter preparation, compound composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label or brand, which produces intoxication, to any Indian to whom allotment of land has been made, while the title to the same shall be held in trust by the government, or to any Indian, including mixed bloods, over whom the government, through its department, exercises guardianship, and any person who shall introduce, or attempt to introduce, any malt, spirituous or vinous liquors, including beer, ale and wine, or any ardent intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, into the Indian country, which term shall include any Indian allotment while the title to the same shall be held in trust by the government, or while the same shall remain inalienable by the allottee without the consent of the United States, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than sixty days and by a fine of not less than $100 for the first offence, and not less than $200 for each offence thereafter; provided, however, that the person convicted shall be committed until fine and costs are paid. But it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce ardent spirits, as beer, wine or intoxicating liquors into the Indian country that the acts charged were done under authority, in writing, from the War Department or any officer duly authorized hereunto by the War Department." (Approved First month 30th, 1897.) (See Indian Territory Statute 1899, Carter's Digest, page 770, Fifty-fourth Congress.)

The last lesson left Paul and his fellow-shipmates safe on the shore of Melita (Malta.) Owing to the lateness of the season all attempt to continue their journey to Rome had to be abandoned, and all hands had to remain until the weather permitted ships to sail. This was about three months (Acts 28: 11). Then a passage was secured on a more fortunate ship, the "Castor and Pollux," which had wintered in the island, to a port of Southern Italy, Puteoli. The sail from Melita to their destination was prosperous. Puteoli was about eight miles north of Naples, and distant from Rome about one hundred and forty miles. It was an important port of Southern Italy, and was the destination of the most of the grain ships from Alexandria. It is the modern Pozzuoli. Here the centurion Julius, in whose charge Paul was, allowed Paul and his companions to remain a week visiting the brethren. The company then went to the "Market of Appius" (R. V.), a small place mentioned by Horace, the Roman poet. It was about forty miles from Rome. Here a deputation of Christians from Rome met Paul, and another one at "The Three Taverns," ten miles nearer the city. "Whom when Paul saw, he thanked God and took counsel" (v. 15). "Such a cordial reception, such impatience to see him and welcome him to their hearts, would scatter all his doubts and thrill his bosom with gratitude and joy." The time of Paul's arrival at Rome was Second month, A.D. 60 or 61.

16. "And when we entered into Rome." The "we" shows that Luke was still with Paul. "Paul was suffered to dwell by himself." He was not required to remain in the enclosure of the guards, but had the privilege of living in the city, still chained, however, to a Roman soldier. It is quite likely this privilege of residence was gained at the request of the centurion Julius.

17. As usual, Paul's first thought went out towards his countrymen. He wished to explain his position to the Jewish leaders, and defend himself against unjust accusation. He asked them to come to him, as under the circumstances he could not very well go to them. There were very, many Jews in Rome at this time, and not a few were wealthy. They were regarded by the Romans very much as they are by the Germans now.

19. "Not that I had ought to accuse my nation of." He did not wish them for a moment to think that he appealed to the emperor in order to accuse his brethren.

20. "Hope of Israel." The Messiah whom all Jews looked for. It was for his preaching Jesus as the Messiah that he was bound. "This chain." That with which he was bound to the soldier.

21. From this verse it would appear that no message concerning Paul had yet reached the Jews at Rome.

22. "Everywhere it is spoken against." This was undoubtedly the case. Both Jew and Gentile, though for different reasons, spoke against Christianity. The Jew, because the new teaching did away with many of his cherished customs and doctrines; the Gentile because of the strict morality taught and required by the Christians; also because of the slanderous reports current regarding the followers of Christ.

23. "Out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets." This was common ground for the Jews and Paul. For the Jew the appeal to the Law and to the fulfillment of prophecy was a strong one. Paul's purpose was to show that Jesus was the Messiah looked for by the Jew.

24. "And some believed." The word means were "induced to believe," as the result of Paul's statements. "And some disbelieved." R.V. What convinced some had no effect on others. This is true all through life. What was the proportion between the two is not stated, but the impression is conveyed that the greater part were not convinced.

25-29. These verses should be read. Verse 29 is omitted in the Revised Version as not being contained in the best manuscripts.

30. "Two whole years." This is supposed to be the period during which Paul was waiting for his case to be heard. Appeals in our own day are often so long in being heard that we can hardly wonder at the delay in Paul's case. There are a number of plausible reasons for the delay. It would take a long time for the accusers and witnesses to come to Rome. The records and papers may have been lost in the shipwreck at Melita, and others procured from Syria, which in itself might take a full year. Possibly Paul's enemies were well satisfied that he should be kept in confinement. Besides all this, trials were frequently postponed for various reasons.

Meantime Paul received all who came in unto him and had thus the opportunity to preach and teach, and also to write Epistles—Philippians, Colossians, Ephesians, Philemon were all written from Rome.

He lived in his own hired house, or lodging, for the word will bear either interpretation.

How many have wished that the book of Acts had given more of Paul's history. There is a feeling that the close is an abrupt one. Why it should close as it does has not been explained.

TOPIC FOR SIX MONTH FOURTEENTH.

GOLD, OR GOD?

Luke 18: 18-30.

Second-day, Sixth mo. 8.—Love of riches perilous. Luke 12: 13-20.

Third-day, Sixth mo. 9.—Tends to selfishness. Luke 16: 19-31.

Fourth-day, Sixth mo. 10.—A generous rich man. Gen. 13: 1-9.

Sixth-day, Sixth mo. 12.—A liberal rich man. Acts 4: 32-37.

Seventh-day, Sixth mo. 13.—Giving up riches for God. Acts 7: 22-29.

The shortsightedness that afflicted this "certain ruler" of long ago seems to be no less prevalent to-day than when he chose the riches near at hand instead of the eternal inheritance. A student of social conditions said recently that "the craving for wealth, pleasure and position has become so absorbing that conscience, responsibility and duty seem to be made less and less a living reality." The buyer may say, "It is naught," and the seller take advantage of ignorance because "each one must look out for himself."

Of Wellington it is told that when his agent remarked that a certain purchase of real estate was a "good bargain," and he learned that the agent's meaning was that the land was worth more than the amount paid for it, he directed him to pay to the seller a sufficient sum to make up a proper valuation. Such integrity is not so prevalent as the Golden Rule demands.

Marvelous investment propositions are found in many papers of good standing, promising a lifetime competency as returns for a small outlay. The paper lends itself for a fee to the speculative, if not deceptive, plans of the promoters of such schemes, while the investor hopes for an income that is in many cases absolutely impossible, except at the sacrifice of some one else's interests. "Get money; honestly if you can, but get money," is the chief and final precept of all these persons, and the eye is so steadily fixed on that aim that the distinctions between right and wrong are lost sight of and the "seek ye first" of Christ's law is forgotten.

The schoolboy or girl whose desire for a good grade in examination leads to deception is in the same boat with the mechanic who takes pay for a good job when he has turned out a defective one, and with the clerk whose time is spent in idleness except while under his employer's eye. Each prefers gain to integrity and is risking the promise of the eternal life which comes only through righteousness for a paltry trifle.

Money has uses and the Christian is not debarred from its acquisition, but he is debarred from questionable methods and from making it so important that his life loses its balance. Love to God and man is the corrective for all false conditions. Satan prefers selfishness and he knows how to encourage it and to repress love by suggesting "the practical," "one's duty towards his own," etc., etc. Does not the Father know all our needs?

The fear of appearing sentimental or theoretical sometimes checks generous impulses, and a faithless dread of poverty paralyzes the heart of many a professed Christian whose care for food and raiment so largely fills his thoughts that Christ's law of values (Matt. 6: 25) has become transposed, if not in profession, at least in practice. Even if hardships come, we have the example of One who refused to "pity Himself," but went the full length of self-denial for the sake of others.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs held its annual meeting at Friends' Institute, Philadelphia, on the 12th and 13th of Fifth month. There were fifteen delegates present, representing six of the eleven yearly meetings composing the membership of the Committee. In addition to the delegates present, George N. Hartley, one of the superintendents of the work under the care of the Committee, was in attendance. There are ten mission stations, the same as one year ago, five of which are situated in Indian, and five in Oklahoma Territory.

At Wyandotte, in Indian Territory, and Shawnee, in Oklahoma Territory, are Government Schools for the Indian children, to which the missionaries in charge of the stations at these points are given free access for religious work among the students. This was also the case at Otoe, Oklahoma, but the burning of the Government School building at this point, last year, scattered the scholars, and greatly interfered with the work of the missionaries. It is expected the school will be rebuilt, near to its former location.

At Hillside, in Indian Territory, close to the Oklahoma line, there is a valuable boarding and day school under the care of the committee. The charge of the school, boarding home and meeting at this point, so fully occupies the missionaries and their helpers, that there is little time for visiting in the homes of the Indians, but there is much opportunity for Christian influence on the boys and girls of the school, especially on the boarding pupils.

Meetings for Worship are held at all the mission stations, and the missionaries attend meetings with more or less regularity at several other points. They have several valuable helpers among the Indians.

The greatest drawback to work for the Indians in this section of country is the bad influence of unprincipled white settlers, who are so numerous about them. This makes the duties of their missionaries much more difficult than was the case when there were but few white men among them.

DEDICATION SERVICE IN MEXICO.

C. Victoria, Mexico, Fifth month 18th, 1903.

On Sabbath evening, Fifth month 17th, the new Friends' meeting house at Victoria was dedicated. The work of building began more than a year ago, but its completion was delayed by three very important interruptions. The first was the erection of a large addition to New York's school building, so that it could be occupied; the second was the repair work necessary on the property which the school vacated, in converting it into a Boys' School; and lastly, was the remodeling of the Mission Home, preparatory to the arrival of W. I. Kelsey and family, who have resumed the work from which they were released about three years ago. At last, however, the church was finished, and the change of meeting place, from an overcrowded school room to this comfortable edifice is one agreeable to all. The dedication sermon was delivered by Eucario M. Sein, of Matehuala, and was a strong, earnest one. The services were impressive throughout. The singing of the girls of Penn Institute, and of the young men of Juarez Institute, was specially fine, and showed much careful training. Appropriate Scripture readings were given by W. I. Kelsey and Everett E. Morgan, who came from Cal-torce for the occasion.

Santiago G. Gonzales presented an interesting account of the building of the meeting house. The opening prayer was by the Presbyterian minister of this city, and Luciano Mascorro offered the dedicatory invocation. Much taste was displayed in the decorations, which, under the electric lights, were most beautiful, and all that could be desired in a land of such luxuriant flowers and foliage. Both rooms of the church were well filled, and in the audience were prominent citizens of the place. Dr. Graybill had been specially invited to be present, and it was the regret of all that he could not be with us. Just thirty years ago this month he accompanied Samuel A. Purdie and wife to Victoria. This was probably the first visit ever made by Protestant missionaries to this city. They drove through from Matamoros in a carriage and encountered perils of robbers and rattlesnakes on the journey. Their friends here advised them not to attempt a public service in a private house; and now we witness the dedication of the meeting house, where about three hundred people gather in response to printed invitations. The printed circulars also announce the evangelistic services, which are to occur each night this week. We trust they may all be as deeply spiritual as the first one, and that lasting impressions for good may be made. We are expecting that these meetings, together with the extensive material improvements, will greatly stimulate our work here.

PHARIBA W. STEPHENS.

Where with us is the spirit of Paul, who, when he spoke of those that were enemies of the cross of Christ, blotted the page on which he wrote with his tears? We know the heathen are perishing, and yet we go about our ordinary vocations as though there were no such thing as perishing people, and as though we could not do infinitely more than we are doing to try to save them.—Isabella Bird Bishop.

If we stand in the openings of the present moment, with all the length and breadth of our faculties unselfishly adjusted to what it reveals, we are in the best of condition to receive what God is always ready to communicate.—T. C. Upham.

Correspondence.

TO THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

With much satisfaction and profit to ourselves we have been able to visit many meetings in the province of Ulster, in the north of Ireland. There we found the majority of the people were Protestants, and likewise prosperity abounds on every hand.

The largest meeting in this province is in Belfast, where we were warmly received, and had acceptable service. We arrived too late in Ireland to attend Ulster Quarterly Meeting, but were granted the pleasure of attending most all the meetings belonging thereto, having blessed and loving services among them. Arrangements for services were so complete that we were kept busily engaged until the time for the assembling of the yearly meeting at Dublin, 29th of Fourth month, where we had most precious seasons of blessings. The yearly meeting gathered with much hope and life. As individuals the yearly meeting is striving after true spiritual life with all their power, and many earnest prayers ascended to the throne of God for the filling by the Holy Ghost. In the meeting on Ministry and Oversight there were many anxious hearts looking for a way to accomplish something permanent for Him, who is the great head of the church. There seemed to be a very earnest desire for some channel by which our salvation might be felt by the world at large, and still maintain the old landmarks, which are so dear to every Friend's heart. Many an appealing voice was heard, inquiring the best method to pursue that this might be accomplished. This, to me, seems a very clear evidence of the fire within, which is only to be fanned to a flame of righteousness. In the entire yearly meeting there was this same feeling, which I think is taking shape in the home mission effort, the report of which was very interesting, showing a great good accomplished by missions which are conducted by the Home Mission Committee. We were especially interested in the adult school work, which gives open doors to many young Friends who are filled with love and energy, and are ready for service. The absence of singing in most all their meetings was somewhat new to us; yet we found it restful and sweet to sit in the presence of God, with no voice but His. Often while sitting in silence, the power of the Spirit gave evidence that He recognized the two or three together in His name. There seemed to be a very conspicuous absence of young Friends at the business sessions, which was the cause of much earnest entreaty by many Friends in prayer. It seems that the young men and women are actively engaged in the mission meetings, which have song and testimony in them, not forgetting the restful silence for His spirit to speak to each one's needs.

In these meetings the young person feels more free, and does not feel the restraint that seems to be resting upon him in Friends' regular meeting for worship.

We are looking forward to much freedom in the meetings for young people in England. We were told in Ireland there were no set rules for a Friends' meeting; that all meetings were free and open alike to all; and so they were. But somehow the young people felt that that freedom had become the most marked bondage.

It is very difficult for one to be exercised by the Spirit, where if he is not moved to speak in the accustomed phrases or manner it would be considered rather questionable as to his leading. But we are glad to say that is largely passing away in many meetings, and a hope of brighter things is in prospect.

We are, in love,

Thy friends,

CHARLES AND MAY REPLOGLE.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

For fifty years the "Friends' Review" and THE AMERICAN FRIEND has come to this household without a break. I feel that it is a part of our lives. Other papers have come and gone, but THE AMERICAN FRIEND stays with us because we appreciate it more than any other, and but for it we would lose touch with the work of our loved Church, as we are practically isolated members, yet so situated that we can attend and take an active part in our Quarterly meeting.

PENINA HILL WILSON.

Toronto, Kansas.

Mary W. Jones, of Winthrop Center, Me., is attending New York Yearly Meeting.

Joseph R. Small, who has been visiting in Whittier, Cal., is now at home in Marion, Ind.

Hannah J., Melvin M. and Letitia Bailey, from Maine, attended the Mohonk Peace Conference.

Oliver Frazer, a minister from Thorntown, Ind., attended Whitewater Meeting, Richmond, Ind., on the 23d ult.

Isaiah Jay and family, the former a minister, have removed from Cincinnati and are now located in Indianapolis, Ind.

Eight members were received into Los Angeles Meeting on Fourth-day evening, the 13th ult., by certificate and request.

Melinda Hunt remained in religious service at La Harpe, Kan., for one week after the close of Buffalo Quarterly Meeting, the 24th ult.

Thomas C. Brown, Carmel, Ind., gave the baccalaureate sermon the 31st ult. at Bloomingdale Academy. Commencement exercises will occur the 5th.

J. Perry Hadley, the yearly meeting superintendent of Christian Endeavor work, recently visited the meetings in Buffalo Quarterly Meeting, Kansas.

Asa Woodard has purchased a farm near Butlerville, Ind., within the limits of Hopewell Monthly Meeting. He is doing faithful work as a minister in the meeting.

E. Howard Brown, by request, addressed a convention of United Presbyterians at Columbus Junction, Iowa, on the 26th ult., on the subject of peace and arbitration.

The commencement exercises of Stella Academy, Cherokee, Okla., took place the 28th ult. Susie Allen preached the baccalaureate sermon on First-day, the 24th.

The New York Colored Mission, which has been a great blessing to hundreds of colored people in that city, has now a new home on West Thirtieth Street (No. 225).

On Sixth month 9th, at the home of Philena B. Hadley, Whittier, Cal., a box will be packed to be sent from the local Friends to the missionaries at Kotzebue, Alaska.

Helen Shelley, an instructor in Whittier College, has returned to her work from her home in San Jose, where she was called by the serious illness of her mother, who is now improving.

Lodi Bonser, who has been located near Elkton, Okla., for the last five years, has taken charge of missionary work among the Seneca Indians in the northeastern corner of the Indian Territory.

At Whitewater Monthly Meeting, held in Richmond, Ind., 21st ult., J. J. Mills was granted a minute to attend New York Yearly Meeting, and also Eastern Quarterly Meeting, in the limits of Indiana Yearly Meeting.

It is a great satisfaction to have safely back again the delegation of Friends who were sent out to study the situation in Japan—Asa S. Wing and Margaret W. Haines. Their report will probably be made public at the proper time.

The annual public meeting of the Christian Endeavor Union of New England Yearly Meeting will be held in Portland, Me., Seventh-day evening, the 13th instant. The address of the evening will be given by Mary E. Miars, of Lynn, Mass.

Fairfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Manchester, Me., Fifth month 23d and 24th. W. Jasper Hadley, of Iowa, and Thomas Ingram, of South China, Me., were in attendance and preached clear, forceful gospel messages. The attendance was large, and the meetings held in the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Penn College spent an hour on the 19th ult., in honor of "The Hague Tribunal." A well-prepared program was rendered by students and members of the faculty. The college body and visitors present were entertained and instructed. Some of the strongest representations made against militarism and in favor of peace and intelligent and sensible methods in settling international disputes were made by students not members with Friends.

This is commencement week at Friends' University, Wichita, Kan. A. A. Parker preached the baccalaureate sermon. The vocal recital of the School of Music was given on Second-day, and the piano recital on Third-day. The graduating exercises of the School of Education took place the evening of the 3d instant, at which time G. W. Cassidy addressed the class. The annual commencement will take place the 5th instant. Professor Olin Templin, of the Kansas State University, will give the address.

Portland Monthly Meeting, Ind., was held the 23d ult. at Pleasant Valley, in Adams County, twenty miles north of Portland. The session was composed of the Friends of that neighborhood, except the clerks, a minister and one other Friend. Meetings were held from Sixth-day evening to First-day evening, and were largely attended by young people, who were quite active in the services. Violet A. Perkins, of the Valley Meeting, and Gertrude Fulton and Zeno C. Thorpe, of Portland, were appointed to the station of Elder for three years. The present membership of the meeting is 136; there have been 19 additions the past year. The meeting is very much alive.

Winchester Quarterly Meeting was held the 15th and 16th ult. The attendance on ministry and oversight was small, but quite a large company gathered on Seventh-day, considering the busy season. Gurney Dicks and companion, of Fairmount, Ind., attended both sessions, the former having considerable service. The new clerks, Henry W. Pickett and Eunice Hunt, were at the table. The quarterly meeting at large is behind yet on the quarterly meeting house indebtedness. The question of insurance was referred to the trustees. Daniel W. Lawrence resigned as quarterly meeting statistical secretary, and E. C. Thornton was appointed in his stead. The Women's Foreign Missionary Society met at 9 a.m., on Seventh-day. An interesting program was carried out, and $11.50 contributed to aid the work.

Events and Comments.

According to a statement made by the Indian Secretary, in the House of Commons, the deaths from the plague in the Punjab, India, from First month 1st to Fifth month 2d, numbered 141,879.

Postmaster-General Payne recently signed an order reducing the salaries of assistant postmasters, cashiers and financial clerks in a large number of offices throughout the country. The officials have been receiving salaries in excess of the legal limit.

The Paris-Madrid automobile race was brought to an end before the Spanish frontier was reached. So great had been the destruction of life that Spain forbade the continuance of the race on her territory, following similar action by Premier Combes at Paris.

A remarkable run was made by the Twentieth Century Limited over the Lake Shore Railroad between Cleveland and Dune Park, thirty-five miles east of Chicago, Second-day. The distance, 307 miles, was made in 292 minutes. The entire distance was covered at a speed averaging 66 miles an hour, equaling the record made on this road in 1893 between Chicago and Buffalo.

During last week a number of very destructive wind storms visited Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Ohio. Much property was destroyed and several lives lost. On the 29th ult. a devastating flood swept over Kansas, Iowa and parts of Oklahoma. Not in a quarter of a century has as general and as disastrous a storm visited this section. Railroad traffic was demoralized and crops in the river districts were washed away.

The report of the national commissioner of education shows that the increase of college students has been great in the past ten years. Now there are 75,472 men and boys in college, while ten years ago there were only 44,926, and there are now 27,879 women students, against the 10,761 ten years ago. The various graduate schools have grown almost in proportion, with the exception of the theological schools, and the attendance at these fell off in the decade.

People have a great fear of small-pox, but it is not as dangerous as many seem to think, and nowhere near as dangerous as pneumonia or typhoid fever. From Twelfth month 27th, 1902, to Fifth month 15th, of this year, there were 17,- 446 cases of small-pox in the United States, and only 503 proved fatal, while for a similar period a year ago there were 33,103 cases and 1,008 deaths. This year there have been more cases in Minnesota than in any other State, while Connecticut has a clean record, as far as the death rate goes, but has had 39 cases; Rhode Island has had only five cases and one death.

Wu Ting Fang, ex-Chinese Minister at Washington, was recently appointed a member of the Foreign Office in his home country. His rank will be below that of the five officials designated in the protocol, and it is questionable whether he will accept the position. While Wu Ting Fang's appointment violates the protocol, he is the only English-speaking member of the Foreign Office, and he alone has had experience with foreign affairs. The legations, therefore, welcome the selection.

If the suit which Attorney-General
Bell recently filed in behalf of the State of Texas against fifty-nine fire insurance companies for forfeiture of their respective permits to do business in Texas results in judgment against the companies, they will be driven out of the State. The new Anti-Trust act contains a special provision prohibiting corporations from re-entering the State when found guilty of violating the law in question. Men of the State are greatly aroused over the possible outcome of the suit. If these companies are not permitted to do business in Texas, the existing fire insurance policies will be cancelled and no other insurance will be obtainable.

The United States Bureau of Forestry has sent experts into the woods to study forest fires. This action will be appreciated at this time, when so much damage is being done by such fires. In Oregon and Washington alone it is estimated that over $12,000,000 of damage has been done to the vast timber lands by forest fires, while Maine, New York and Pennsylvania have been and are suffering.
These agents sent out by the bureau will make a close study of fires, noticing how they burn, what stops them and the damage done to land and trees. Their reports will all be compared at Washington, and it is hoped that much can be learned about forest-fire fighting in this way.

The American Society of Equity at Indianapolis, Ind., has issued a bulletin to the farmers of the United States, demanding an increase in the price of wheat, arguing that the minimum price of wheat should be $1 a bushel, and urging the farmers of the United States not to sell for less than $1. The society has been organized, with Indianapolis as national headquarters, to maintain higher prices for farm products by co-operation of the farmers of the country, and this is the first formal demand for increase in prices as the result of the combination.

The "Times" (London) correspondent at St. Petersburg has been forced by the Russian Government to leave the country within three days, never to return.
Russia gives as her reason for this action that the tone of the British press has been hostile to her policy ever since the correspondent came to her capital. This has caused an outburst from the English press, and the correspondent in Copenhagen cables that the expulsion has undoubtedly created a sensation in all Scandinavian countries, where the feeling towards the Russian dictatorship in Finland is one of the keenest indignation.

Since the adjournment of the extra session of the United States Senate varied and conflicting reports have come from Colombia regarding that country's attitude toward the Panama Canal Treaty. The most recent and radical development was the resignation of President Marroquin, directly brought about by his ardent fight in favor of the ratification of the treaty. President Marroquin polled the Congress of Colombia to ascertain the sentiment of its members in the canal treaty before calling a special session, and it was presumed that when he called the Congress to meet on Sixth month 20th, he had satisfied himself that the convention would be ratified. His enforced resignation through political pressure on this issue, however, was the first really alarming note to the friends of the treaty. From a recent dispatch it seems that the opposition has become sufficiently formidable to threaten the life of the treaty.

The situation in the United States Pension Bureau on Fifth month 1st was not exactly warlike, but it was certainly threatening so far as the Spanish war veterans were concerned. Pension Commissioner Ware reports that on that date over 22 per cent. of those veterans had applied for pensions, and that new applications were coming in daily by the hundreds. Those who like absolute precision will be interested to know that 57,046 "invalids" had applied, and 8,390 "widows and dependents," of which 9,881 "invalid" and 3,160 "widow and dependent" pensions have been granted. There have been 18,185 claims rejected, and 34,210 are still pending. At a corresponding time after the civil war only 6 per cent. of the Northern veterans had applied for pensions. It is now observed, as an interesting fact, that a much greater percentage of applications pours in from regiments that never got beyond the camps of instruction than from those which actually saw active service in the field.

There has been an instant and sensational fulfillment of Colonial Secretary Chamberlain's declaration that he would make reciprocal trade between the mother country and the colonies the question of the hour. Comment fills the English press, and is the general topic in political circles. If the agitation already set on foot indicates that Secretary Chamberlain is likely to have the country at his back a general election at the end of this year is extremely probable. The Colonial Secretary himself is doubtful if he could win out just at present, but he is positive that with political agitation the constituencies can be brought to see the wisdom of his policy.
The opposition contends that the margin that Great Britain could gain by preferential trade with her colonies is comparatively small, and not worth the risk of dislocating the three-fourths of her trade with the rest of the world.
The issue cannot be voted on for at least eighteen months, but in the meantime the government will give the country and Parliament every opportunity to discuss it.

"The Beet Sugar Industry" in the June "Pearson's" is an article of peculiarly timely interest. No other as essentially important agricultural industry in the United States has grown so rapidly in the past decade. In 1891 there were but three beet sugar factories in this country, while in 1900 some eighty thousand tons of beet sugar were produced; since then the annual yield has been doubled. Farmers have discovered that no other vegetable brings better remuneration than the sugar-beet, with its by-products; and in 1900 nearly $1,500,000 were expended in wages to those who worked in the beet fields and factories.

SNAP, PUSH AND GO

Is What One Should Get from Food.

A young St. Louis lady learned a food lesson she won't forget. She says: "I suffered from indigestion for nearly ten years, and although I tried all kinds of foods for breakfast I could not eat any of them until one day I discovered Grape-Nuts, and now I wonder how I ever did without it."

"I am a stenographer in a business office, and need all the energy possible, but I formerly spent the greater part of every morning wishing I had gone without breakfast, for I was continually reminded of it by the uncomfortable distressed state of my stomach. How much ability I lost through this I could not tell you, but now all is different, for I eat some fruit and a saucer of Grape-Nuts and work hard all the morning and never think about my stomach until lunch time comes."

"I feel the good effects of Grape-Nuts in a sharpened brain, better memory and increased thinking capacity. The only difficulty I have about it is that I never want to limit myself to the required amount, for I love it so." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There is a reason why Grape-Nuts sharpens the brain.

J. LEWIS RICE

45 MILK ST., BOSTON, MASS.

To be what God wills us to be, and because He wills it—this should be our supreme thought and aim, and the main-spring of our Christian life. The sanctified instinct which leads us to ask, not first of all for our daily bread, or the forgiveness of our trespasses, or the avoidance of temptation even, but which places in the fore-front of our most passionate longings and pleadings, "Thy name be hallowed, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven"—the supplication which puts the Divine will "in the beginning," will lead to the purest and loftiest experience possible to man on the earth.

Little things are often the hardest things. It is comparatively easy to do a momentary deed of daring that will startle everybody; it is not so easy to do little deeds of quiet courage from day to day unheeded by all and unheeding all. Perhaps you are not called to do the great deed. But you are called every day to do the little deeds, which more surely wear out life and strength in the long run. Be glad that you are called to this; for this is the harder task, and he who is faithful here, will not be unfaithful in the easier great things.—"Sunday School Times."

There are certain boggy places in business life, and politics, and social life, where you cannot set your foot without sinking in; there is a certain line beyond which a Christian cannot venture without betraying his Master. Never venture a single inch into any business, however lucrative, or any speculation, however attractive, or any social circles, however fascinating, if you cannot carry Christ with you and a clean conscience. Remember that Christ is our life, and without Him "no man can keep alive his own soul."—Theodore L. Cuyler.

NINETY-MINUTE TRAINS TO CAPE MAY OVER THE NEW ROAD-BED OF THE PENNSYLVANIA RAIL-ROAD.

With the inauguration of the preliminary summer schedule of the Pennsylvania Railroad, on May 24th, a new era will be marked in the train service to Cape May. During the spring workmen have been busy relaying the track south of Newfield with one-hundred-pound steel rail, and the completion of this work places the road in a matchless physical condition. The solidity of the road-way makes it possible to use the heaviest and fastest of the new type of locomotives, and thus a reduction of the time of transit, heretofore impracticable, will be made. Ninety minutes from the foot of Market Street to Cape May will be the scheduled time of the fast express trains, which will be run at the hours best adapted to the convenience of the daily travelers. This time will prove a revelation to the veterans who have jogged quietly and contentedly over the line for years, yet the increased speed entails no abridgment of security and comfort, but rather enhances both, while it very materially expedites the movement between the two terminals. Ninety minutes on an excellent roadbed means a great deal more to the daily rider than the actual reduction in the running time would indicate, and the saving of half an hour over the old schedule brings Cape May much nearer to Philadelphia than ever before.

The trains will be equipped with parlor and club cars and new vestibuled coaches, which means the perfection of comfort in day travel.

New interests at Cape May have infused new life in its municipal government, and improvements are now being pushed forward by public and private enterprise which will make the famous old resort more attractive than ever. The indications for the coming summer foreshadow a season of unexampled activity.

A number of the smaller hotels are now open, and others will open their doors early in June.

SURGERY IN GERMANY AND AMERICA.

A young surgeon who went to Germany four years ago to complete his studies in pathology makes this interesting comment on national differences in the profession:

"It's science over there; here it's the business of healing. Here one gets the elementary things in college, learns more in hospital and, in general practice, and turns the knowledge into money. The average American practitioner would be out of place over there. With them it's study, study, study from the time they receive their degree until they die.

"At the hospitals or meeting-places they talk nothing but shop. I have known a group of German doctors to leave their dinner half eaten to visit a case under discussion. They are the worst possible practitioners, for they are interested only in technique. I knew a man who went to a German physician with a pain in his leg. That doctor spent an hour each day for five days studying it, and after that time he knew all there was to know about that pain, but he didn't stop it. In this country we would have treated it and thought no more about it except to congratulate the patient in a few days on getting well. They don't care for the patient. He is only a specimen. I heard a doctor say perfectly mechanically that he hoped a certain patient would die so that he might learn some fact from the autopsy.

"The difference aptly illustrates the general difference between our practical ways and the ways of German learning."—From June number of "The World's Work."

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

Coffee Tried and Found Guilty.

No one who has studied its effects on the human body can deny that coffee is a strong drug and liable to cause all kinds of ills, while Postum is a food drink and a powerful builder that will correct the ills caused by coffee when used steadily in place of coffee.

An expert who has studied the subject says: "I have studied the value of foods and the manufacture of food products from personal investigation, and wish to bear testimony to the wonderful qualities of Postum Cereal Coffee. I was an excessive coffee drinker, although I knew it to be a slow poison. First, it affected my nerves and then my heart, but when I once tried Postum I found it easy to give up the coffee, confirmed coffee fiend though I was.

"Postum satisfied my craving for coffee, and since drinking Postum steadily in place of the coffee all my troubles have disappeared, and I am again healthy and strong.

"I know that even where coffee is not taken to excess it has bad effects on the constitution in some form or other, and I am convinced by my investigation that the only thing to do if health and happiness are of any value to one is to quit coffee and drink Postum." APRIL 26, 1903.

The Prudential Insurance Company, through its Philadelphia agents, has insured L. Rodman Wanamaker, son of John Wanamaker, for $1,000,000. The premium on the insurance is over $30,000 a year. This makes Mr. Wanamaker one of the most heavily insured private individuals in the world, as he carries policies for $2,000,000. His insurance is said to be exceeded only by that of King Edward VII. John Wanamaker, his father, carries policies aggregating $1,500,000, and John M. Mack carries $1,250,000, of which $1,000,000 was placed recently.

A PRAYER FOR A HAPPY OLD AGE.

O God, our Heavenly Father, whose gift is length of days, help us to make the noblest use of mind and body in our advancing years.

According to our strength apportion thou our work. As thou hast pardoned our transgressions, lift the ingatherings of our memory that evil may grow dim and good may shine forth clearly. We bless thee for thy gifts and especially for thy presence and the love of friends in heaven and earth. Grant us new ties of friendship, new opportunities of service, joy in the growth and happiness of children, sympathy with those who bear the burdens of the world, clear thought and quiet faith. Teach us to bear infirmities with cheerful patience. Keep us from narrow pride in outgrown ways, blind eyes that will not see the good of change, impatient judgments of the methods and experiments of others. Let thy peace rule our spirits through all the trials of our waning powers. Take from us all fear of death and all despair or undue love of life—that with glad hearts, at rest in thee, we may await thy will concerning us. Amen.

GOD WRESTLES TOO.

WE have heard from our youth up that great souls wrestle for the blessings they get. We all know the Scripture passages where the need of wrestling seems to be taught, and we have grown so accustomed to the idea that perhaps we have missed the deeper truth which the passages ought to have taught us.

Have we sufficiently realized that the deep tragedy of life lies in the momentous fact that God wrestles with us? This is the truth which so many of us miss in that wonderful account of Jacob's night at the ford of Jabbok. He was not wrestling with God, but God was wrestling with him. It was the crisis in his career. Again and again a high spiritual nature broke out and showed itself in this man, only to be overwhelmed and buried under a lower self. It was becoming second nature for him to plot and plan and scheme, to get ahead of somebody else and push his own ends. The power of vision was fading out. Once he could see that heaven and earth were linked by a chain of spiritual beings. Now he was absorbed in the task of winning cattle from his uncle, and escaping the just wrath of an offended brother.

He had come to the verge of his native country after twenty years of absence. The birthright was his. He had his father's blessing, but was he to rise to the height of a Patriarch, of a prince of God, or was he to continue to be a supplanter, a grasper of the goods of earth? This was the question of destiny which was being settled. Was it to be Jacob or Israel? Here is where the marvel of the story comes in. All heaven is concerned in the answer to such a question. It is not a mere earthly drama, but a contest with an infinite issue.

"When the fight begins within himself,
A man's worth something. God stoops o'er his head,
Satan looks up between his feet—both tug—He's left, himself, in the middle; the Soul wakes and grows."

This is a modern poet's way of telling what is told so well in the old Bible story. In the very front of it stands the fact that God is wrestling. He has taken sides with the new Israel against the old Jacob. He is trying to win His man.

It is told in pictorial language, and is full of oriental imagery, but let not that conceal the mystic truth which is in it. God himself is wrestling for the true self in us. We cry out for some selfish, childish blessing which we want, and we wonder that it does not come. While all the time He is trying to bring us up to the place where we can appreciate the real blessing which He is waiting to give us. We hold on to get the bauble which we seek, and all the time He is holding on to get us. We wrestle to get our own wills, and He wrestles to get a person who can understand and love His will. What a contest, for our own defeat is a sure victory!

THE MAKING OF A LIFE.*

FEW more wonderful things have ever happened, outside the pages of a novel, than the making of the beautiful, refined, womanly Helen Keller out of the blind, deaf, dumb girl who was found sixteen years ago in a little farm house in Alabama. A fever had destroyed both sight and hearing when she was eighteen months old, and she grew up to her seventh year without a word of language, and with the world about her a great mysterious blank. Her way of expressing herself was an angry kick or a frantic scream.

Three months before Helen was seven Anne Mansfield Sullivan came from Boston to begin the slow task of winning this soul. Helen writes of the event as follows: "Have you ever been at sea in a dense fog, when it seemed as if a tangible white darkness shut you in, and the great ship, tense and anxious, groped her way toward the shore with plummet and sounding line, and you waited with beating heart for something to happen? I was like that ship before my education began, only I was without compass or sounding line, and had no way of knowing how near the harbor was. 'Light! give me light!' was the wordless cry of my soul."

The story of the early struggle to comprehend what the signs meant which her teacher made in her hand is very touching. Nothing could happen until she could discover the significance of these finger pressures. Day after day the teacher worked, but no light came. Everything was dead and mechanical. She might as well have made her pressures on a piece of clay. But one day the light broke. The child suddenly saw what the touch meant, and the key to her whole education was found. Now the training could go rapidly on. First the things within easy reach were touched and learned, and little by little, as the touch grew fine and the vocabulary increased, harder things were tried. The mind leaped to things the hand could not touch, and the girl was on her way to win not only the tangible world, but also the deeper world which we get by inward vision, if we get it at all. Now, at the age of twenty-three, she is almost at the end of her college life, skillful in five languages, passionately fond of nature, appreciative of art, music and poetry, all of which come to her through her finger tips! But most wonderful of all is the beautiful spirit which has risen within her as she has been overcoming her difficulties. "Fain would I question His imperious decree; for my heart is still undisciplined and passionate; but my tongue will not utter the bitter, futile words that rise to my lips, and they fall back into my heart like unshed tears. Silence immense sits upon my soul. Then comes hope with a smile and whispers, 'There is joy in self-forgetfulness.' So I try to make the light in others' eyes my sun, the music in others' ears my symphony, the smile on others' lips my happiness."

This book which she herself has written will put courage into every struggling soul, and it should make us see in new light the great fact that God is trying to teach us His language and of His world with the same patience—though infinitely more—which Miss Sullivan has shown in making this rich world real to the poor, blind, deaf child.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A VISIT TO GALILEE AND SAMARIA.

BY CHARLES COLLINS.

Our party consisted of five, and we traveled on horseback for eleven days. Leaving Jerusalem early one beautifully bright morning, we rode north towards Samaria. To the right we passed Gibeah of Saul, seeing to our left Mizpeh, where is the traditional tomb of Samuel. We soon reached the road which leads to Ramallah, and, continuing, passed El-Bireh, a Moslem village. Soon after we left Bethel behind us and caught a glimpse on its lofty elevation of Ophrah. Our camp outfit had gone on ahead of us, with its tents and appurtenances, and in the late afternoon, as we approached Turmus Aiya, we saw our tents in place near the village, in the green and fertile plain. A crowd of Arabs came about our camp and were somewhat disturbing by their loud talking and curiosity. On the way we saw many fields of grain, bright green in the sun, and a number of olive orchards. Here and there on a terraced hill could be seen a village in the distance. The hills of Ephraim were about us the latter part of the day's journey.

The following morning we traveled on through Ephraim, visiting Shiloh, where were some ruins almost levelled to the ground. On our left, on the side of a plain, we saw Lebonah, of the 21st chapter of Judges. Another plain, most beautiful, with its fields of waving grain, which men and women were weeding by hand, was next enjoyed. In the distance we saw Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal, looking grand against the sky. The fact was brought to our attention that the road (a bridle path) on which we were traveling was probably the same one that Christ walked or rode over from Jerusalem to Nazareth. We reached Jacob's well in time for lunch, after which we visited the well, and three of our party then walked up Mount Ebal. In the afternoon we were surprised at the great depth and beauty of the Wady Bidan, along the side of which we rode, admiring the glories of the grand scenery about us. We camped at Burj el-Fâr'a, and were sung to sleep by many frogs.

Continuing our journey, we passed a long camel train and had the pleasure of a fine view of the mountains in the rear. There was a most wonderful display of wild flowers in the fields, on the hillsides and almost everywhere. After lunch in the Jordan Valley at the foot of the mountains of Gilboa, we proceeded to Beisan, having an extensive panorama of the valley about us, with the hills east of the Jordan on our right. A number of storks were seen flying about over the fields. Wheat and barley were growing in luxuriance, and many times we crossed streams of running water, tributaries of the Jordan. Upon night setting in, we heard, as we were comfortably settled in our tents, the cry of the jackal.

Proceeding along the west side of the Jordan Valley, we saw many more storks. Much to our surprise, we passed clumps of oleander bushes in full bloom. In the middle of the plain and at other places we noticed a number of Bedouin tents, very black and low. In the afternoon the path brought us to the Jordan and its many windings, and occasional falls and cataracts were most interesting. For several hours we had a beautiful view of Mount Hermon, its glistening snow-capped peak rising high above the surrounding hills into the blue sky. The Jordan at the point where it resumes its course at the southwestern corner of the Lake of Galilee, appeared running rapidly and quite clear and blue in comparison to the slower current and dark-brown muddy tinge near the place of baptizing opposite Jericho. The first glimpse of the lake, with its beautiful surroundings, was thrilling. The water was calm and blue and presented a pleasant picture. Riding along the western side of the lake during the fine spring afternoon, we were charmed with the landscape, and in connection with the sacred interest of the place, felt thankful that we were privileged to see one of the most fascinating portions of Palestine. Mount Hermon, in all its glory, was ever before us, beckoning us onward. As we neared Tiberias we saw the hot springs, and in a number of places steam was rising from the water issuing from the bathing houses. Our camp was pitched to the west of the town. Just upon arrival we met a long procession of Russian pilgrims, marching to a Greek convent. They were led by a Russian Kavass, gaily dressed and mounted on a horse, covered with many-colored trappings. It was a very peculiar and interesting spectacle. Tiberias is situated directly on the lake, and on the west there are impressive ruins of an old well, with battlemented towers.

Mounting our horses in the bright morning, we rode along the western shore of the lake on our way to Tell Hûm, the site of ancient Capernaum. Many beautiful oleanders were seen, and great numbers of flowers, with brilliant hues. Ever before us appeared Mount Hermon, and the lake was smooth and blue. Several palms and fig trees were growing, but not in great numbers. On the way a number of streams of water were crossed, one so deep that it almost reached our stirrups. The small village of Magdala, the home of Mary Magdalen, was on our left. Before reaching Capernaum we rode through acres of thistles, many taller than a man on horseback. There was comparatively little to be seen of what was the Biblical city. The lake and its surroundings made us feel that we were looking upon a landscape as fine probably as any to be seen in the Holy Land. Time cannot change its natural beauties or cast any doubts upon its history. Returning to Tiberias, we enjoyed a row on the water just at sunset, and as the moon was giving her light to the earth.

After our second night's rest here, which was somewhat disturbed by the singing and chanting of the Russian pilgrims as they walked past, we rode up the hill west of Tiberias on our way to Nazareth. Our view of the town and the lake as we passed up to the Horns of Hattin, was grand. On this hill is the traditional site of the Sermon on the Mount. To the west we saw Mount Tabor, at the foot of which we lunched. We had a very fine ride to the top of the mountain, whence we enjoyed the broad panorama spread before us. The beautiful plain of Esdraelon, with its great fields of grain and excellent fertility, extended for many miles. We were interested in looking at the ruins of a town on the top of the mountain. These ruins included a church, baths, a very large oven and streets. Coming down from Mount Tabor, we had fine views and proceeded on our way to Nazareth. Here we had rain in the night for the first time during our camping.

After breakfast we walked to the town and found the streets very narrow, with a kind of gutter in the center, where the drainage was flowing down a steep incline. A number of small shops where blacksmithing, shoemaking, and so forth, were being carried on, attracted our attention. We entered the Church of the Annunciation and saw the altar to the mother of our Lord and the place where Gabriel was supposed to have stood. We rode to the top of the hill just above Nazareth in order to obtain a view of the town. Riding on over the hills and through the valleys, we lunched opposite Haifa, if a straight line were drawn to the coast. Here, also, we had a view of the plain of Esdraelon. After our rest and refreshment, we continued towards Mount Carmel, near whose foot we intended to camp for the night. Many splendid views were presented to us, and as we rode across the great plain it seemed to us as if we had never seen greater fertility or a finer view of its kind than that which now rejoiced us. Crossing a high hill and then descending into the valley beyond, we passed over the line of the projected railroad from Haifa to Damascus. We were now in the Kishon Plain. Our guide had some difficulty upon reaching the River Kishon in finding a place suitable for us to cross. After looking at a number of places and making a few unsuccessful attempts at one where there was apparently a ford, we rode through the water and mud, finally reaching the other side in safety. On our left was the fertile plain; before us and on the right rose Mount Carmel high into the evening sky. In a few minutes we reached our tents on a hill part way up the mountain.

The following day we were surprised to see all about us great banks of fog. Hoping that the atmosphere would clear we rode to the top of Mount Carmel, seeing the reputed place of sacrifice of Elijah and the prophets of Baal. We were rewarded by a good view of the surrounding country. Our camp was near a small Druse village, and we saw a number of these peculiar people on their way to work in the fields. Returning from the mountain, we continued our travels through the plain of Esdraelon, and saw the tell where Dr. Schumacher has begun excavations. The tell is the site of ancient Megiddo. We camped at Tell Taanach. Before reaching our resting place for the night we enjoyed the view of Tabor and Little Hermon.

The morning broke cool and fine, and leaving the plain of Esdraelon and climbing into the mountains of Samaria, we crossed the plain of Dothan, visiting Joseph's well. The hills and valleys were very beautiful. A number of storks were seen, and in the afternoon we were charmed by a clear and distinct view of the Mediterranean. Our tents, white, on the hill near the site of Sebastieh, notified us of our day's close. We saw some of the old Roman columns built by Herod. He had a colonnaded street made to encircle the hill. An American and his wife were also camping for the night very near us.

Leaving our camp, we went to the top of the hill, the site of ancient Sebastieh or Samaria. A grand panorama was spread before us in a fine circle of hills and valleys, green and very picturesque. We passed through the present Moslem village of Sebastieh, where there is a ruin of a Christian church. Our ride to Nablus or Shechem was exceptionally beautiful. Men and women were in the fields working in the cultivation of the land, and many teams were seen plowing. A few minutes before reaching the village we saw an ancient aqueduct, through which the water was flowing. We stopped a short time only in the village, while some provisions for our use were purchased. Riding up Mount Gerizim, where we lunched, we obtained a grand view of Nablus, in the valley, with hills in the background. On the mountain was the camp of the Samaritans, who were soon to celebrate the feast of the Passover. We also had a good view of Jacob's well and Sychar and Mount Ebal. Our camp for the night was near Lebonah, of the 21st chapter of Judges, and now called Lubban.

Before breaking camp in the morning (the last of our eleven days), we saw many people walking by in their curious costumes, often very ragged and consisting of only the fewest possible garments. Very many of the people go barefooted, and their faces are crossed with deep wrinkles from the arduous life they have to undergo. Realizing that we were only a few hours' ride from Jerusalem, we were cheered at the prospect of soon reaching our destination. We saw a gazelle during the day, but the animal was so quick in its movements that a glimpse only was had. We partook of lunch at Ain Assah, near the village of Bethel. Soon we reached the smooth, hard carriage road leading to Jerusalem, the city appearing before us in all the glory of a spring afternoon, and we were thankful to arrive safely, having enjoyed a very memorable camping tour through a most interesting part of this unique country.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

New York Yearly Meeting was held in New York City this year, beginning the 28th of Fourth month. The meeting on ministry and oversight Fifth month 28th, and the yearly meeting opening the 29th. Mary S. Knowles, who has been clerk of the meeting on ministry and oversight for several years, declined re-nomination on account of ill health, and Lindley M. Stevens was appointed clerk and Elizabeth C. F. Stevens assistant. The yearly meeting-at-large opened on Sixth-day morning, with James Wood at the clerk's desk. The attendance throughout was gratifying, and the spirit of the meeting was earnest and harmonious. The comparatively large number of younger people present and active in the work of the yearly meeting gave us all special encouragement.

A keen sense of loss has been upon us on account of the departure of Robert M. Ferris and Robert I. Murray during the year, and the following minute was placed upon our records: "The meeting places upon record its sense of the loss it has sustained in the death of two of its officers, who for many years have occupied positions of great responsibility. Robert I. Murray died Third month 5th. He had long served the meeting as treasurer. Robert M. Ferris died Third month 19th. He had been chairman of the Missionary Board since its organization. Both these Friends were earnest and devoted in the performance of the duties of these positions, as well as those of many others to which the church called them."

The Evangelistic Committee, in its report, informed us that steps have been taken to secure the services of Lindley M. Spicer as superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work for the coming year, a choice heartily indorsed by the Yearly meeting.

The Missionary Board reported a prosperous year in each department of its work, and it is gratifying to note that, although two who have had great responsibility, and have been most efficient in their service have been removed, those upon whom the responsibilities have fallen have not faltered in their activities and have bravely taken up the additional care and labor.

The yearly meeting showed a deep interest in the work for peace and arbitration, and the following minute was adopted: "This meeting desires to express its appreciation of the great service rendered to the cause of peace and arbitration, and to that of the improvement of the condition of the Indians by our Friend, Albert K. Smiley, who, with deep interest and striking liberality has caused so many conferences upon these interests to be held at Lake Mohonk. These conferences have been of international importance in advancing the cause of universal peace and have developed a public sentiment in regard to the Indians, which has resulted in much of the beneficent national legislation for the amelioration of their condition. Both these causes have ever been prominent among the active interests of our branch of the Church, and we feel that we should not longer delay the expression of our gratitude for the signal service rendered to them by one of our members."

The report of the Committee on Peace and Arbitration had in it a jubilant note on account of the fact that the International Court of Arbitration has become operative, and also on account of the passage of the amendment to the Militia Bill in the United States Senate, as reported in detail by THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

The subject of the Harriet Green Memorial Fund was brought before the yearly meeting and commended to the attention of our members.

The following ministers were in attendance: Joseph J. Mills and Anna May Pemberton, of Indiana; Sarah C. Hadley, of Wilmington; Willis R. Hotchkiss, of Ohio; John R. Webb, of Canada; E. Anna Tucker, Alice C. Earle and Osbourne J. Hoffman, of New England.

The services on the Sabbath both in New York and Brooklyn were well attended and profitable in character. Several ministers, both visitors and others, attended meetings within reach of the city, and others were at missions in which Friends are interested.

At the public meeting of the Society of Christian Endeavor Joseph John Mills gave the principal address.

The public meeting of the Bible School Board listened to Newell Dwight Hillis, who spoke upon "Oliver Cromwell and the Problems of Puritanism, with an Outlook upon Cromwell's Plea for the Quakers." He closed with the following statement: "In proportion to the numbers that have held the faith of the Society of Friends, it has given to the world more great men than any other denomination."

The public missionary meeting was addressed by David S. Cloyd, connected with the General Board of Education in the South, upon "The Negro in the South," and by Willis R. Hotchkiss upon "The Negro in Africa."

The meeting in the interests of temperance and peace was addressed by Willis R. Hotchkiss, Joseph John Mills and Harry R. Keates, and Olive A. Ryan gave a thrilling account of the effort in the village of Clintondale, N. Y., to defeat the establishment of a hotel contrary to law.

The yearly meeting, which was favored with the presence of the Holy Spirit, adjourned to meet next year in Glens Falls at the usual time.

SECOND QUARTER.

LESSON XII.

SIXTH MONTH 21, 1903.

PAUL'S CHARGE TO TIMOTHY.

2 Tim. 3: 14 to 4: 8.

GOLDEN TEXT.—There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness. 2 Tim. 4: 8.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Sixth mo. 15.—Advice to Timothy. 2 Tim. 1: 1-11.

Third-day, Sixth mo. 16.—Endurance. 2 Tim. 2: 1-13.

Fourth-day, Sixth mo. 17.—Warnings. 2 Tim. 3: 1-13.

Fifth-day, Sixth mo. 18.—Paul's charge to Timothy. 2 Tim. 3: 14 to 4: 8.

Sixth-day, Sixth mo. 19.—Paul's last words. 2 Tim. 4: 9-18.

Seventh-day, Sixth mo. 20.—Looking upward. Phil. 3: 13-21.

First-day, Sixth mo. 21.—The crown of life. Jas. 1: 1-12.

The lesson is taken from one of the group of Epistles known as the "Pastoral Epistles." They are First and Second Timothy, and Titus. They are so called because they give advice and directions to those who hold a prominent position and one of influence in the Church. The word "pastor" does not occur in the Epistles, in connection with Timothy or Titus, and exactly what position these men held is still a matter for discussion. There are five views (1) that they were bishops; (2) pastors; (3) evangelists; (4) simply prominent men; (5) that they were "elders," or "overseers." Whatever may have been their technical position the advice given is almost wholly on the spiritual side, and it is that side which Paul emphasizes.

It is now generally held that these three epistles were written after Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, and that 2 Timothy was composed during his second imprisonment, while he was momentarily expecting to be put to death. We have, if this view is correct, in this epistle the very last words of the great apostle. Exactly what Paul did between his release and second apprehension is not recorded in the New Testament, neither is tradition very full. It seems almost certain, from 1 Timothy, that he went over the routes familiar to him in Greece, and Asia Minor, and that he visited Crete. Many think he went to Spain; while there is little or nothing against this view, there is little evidence for it. From what we know of the persecutions under Nero, it is likely that Paul suffered because of alleged acts against the Roman emperor; possibly on the charge of aiding or abetting the burning of Rome, with which Nero charged the Christians.

The date of 2 Timothy is probably A.D. 66 or 67. Some critics question the Pauline authorship of the Epistle; others claim that only passages are Paul's. It seems impossible that any one but Paul could have written the section we study in the present lesson. Read the whole Epistle.

14. "But continue." Said in contrast with those of whom he has just been writing. "Assured of." The witness of the spirit. "Of whom thou hast learned them." His mother, his grandmother (1 Tim. 1: 6), and Paul himself.

15. "Holy Scriptures." "Sacred Writings." Revised Version. The Old Testament. There was no New Testament when Paul wrote. Faith in Christ is a necessary condition to a thorough knowledge of the convincing power of Scripture.

16. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction, which is in righteousness. Revised Version. This is the translation which has the best authority. The ordinary one is allowable. Which-ever translation may be taken, the inspiration of the Bible is a fundamental point. It is because Scripture is inspired that it is profitable.

17. "That the man of God," etc. "Perfect" means "complete in everything needed for His work." "Every good work." Christianity is practical belief; it must show itself in action.

4: 1. "I charge thee . . . and by his appearing." "Paul writes with a full consciousness of his apostolic dignity," and speaks so as to give all weight possible to what he is about to say.

2. "Preach the word." Proclaim the Gospel—that is the first thing to do. "Be instant in season, out of season." This means, be on the alert for opportunities. Paul's own work illustrates how tactful he was, and how he combined the "wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove." Compare Luke 16: 8. "Reprove," etc. These things have to be done, but note the qualification with all longsuffering and teaching." It is not sufficient to rebuke. Men need to be taught what is right.

3. "But having itching ears will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts." Revised Version. They will wish to hear what they want to hear and will choose teachers who will teach, not the truth, but what their employers wish to be told.

4. "Fables." Tradition, false teaching, etc.

5. "But be thou sober in all things, suffer hardship, do the work of an evangelist, fulfill thy ministry." Revised Version. "Sober." Do not be led away into any vagaries, keep thy head clear. "Hardship." Compare Heb. 13: 23. "Fulfill thy ministry." There is no doubt this is the best translation. Timothy was to perform fully the service to which he was called.

6, 7. "For I am already being offered, and the time of my departure is come. I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith." Revised Version. "Offered." Literally, "poured out." Possibly referring to the custom of pouring out a libation of wine at the time of sacrifice. "The good fight." Not "a," but "the" fight of faith (1 Tim. 6 :12); so "the" course.

8. "Henceforth." The struggle was over, the life of service had been fulfilled—filled out to completion. The course was run, and the crown of victory was about to be bestowed. "Not only to me." What Paul had done, could be done, though perhaps on different lines, and the crown could be won by all, who, like him, love and serve the Lord Jesus.

Christian Endeavor

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Lindley D. Clark, 1429 New York Avenue, Washington, D.C.]

TOPIC FOR SIXTH MONTH TWENTY-FIRST.

HOW WE MAY LEARN TO USE OUR SWORD.

Eph. 6: 17; Heb. 4: 12, 13; 2 Tim. 2: 15.

First-day, Sixth mo. 15.—Bible teachers. Neh. 8: 5-9.

Second-day, Sixth mo. 16.—Cleansing the life. Ps. 119: 9-16.

Third-day, Sixth mo. 17.—Comforting. Ps. 119: 50, 92, 93, 143, 144.

Fourth-day, Sixth mo. 18.—For teaching others. Matt. 13: 51, 52.

Fifth-day, Sixth mo. 19.—Overcoming sin. 2 Cor. 10: 4, 5.

Sixth-day, Sixth mo. 20.—For purifying the nation. Deut. 4: 6-8.

How did David learn to meet Goliath? Doubtless he stood for hours on the hills of Judea and slung stone after stone into the valleys below. This exercise, of course, gave him skill; but where did he get his courage; whence is the source of his faith? Those early days with his father's sheep must have been spent "practicing the presence" of his father's God. It was this, as well as the training of his right arm, that gave David the victory when the crisis came. How did Moses and Samuel and the other mighty men of old learn to do their God-appointed tasks? They did it environed by God and with hearts open to His presence. So can Christian young people to-day learn to use the "Sword of the Spirit," the Living message which God puts into their lives.

A church member came to his minister with the declaration, "I have been through the Bible five times this year." The minister looked at him a minute and then asked, "But how often has the Bible been through you?" The preparation we need to make us efficient in the use of our sword, the word of God, is that it shall go through us.

It is not enough to know many Bible texts, but the Spirit that called them forth should be in the life, and then will the lips use them as "living messages."

SHALL THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR BE PERPETUATED?

Under the present conditions of the Christian Endeavor in our branch of the Church, the question has come to me time and again, What is the future of the movement? Can it continue?

It was organized as a young people's society. Its success has been due to the fact that it was a young people's organization. There are to-day in our branch of the Church a great many societies that have never revised their membership lists, whose membership is largely made up of those who joined ten or fifteen years ago. I do not think an age limit necessary or to be a solution for this question, but I am sure that the societies that have for their leading members and workers persons who are forty and fifty years of age cannot expect any very great revivals or additions to their ranks.

Much as we love the Christian Endeavor, and we all thank God for it, yet I believe that persons over 30 or 35 years of age, by insisting upon retaining an active membership in the society, are striking at its very life. It was the purpose of the society that young people should pass through it into the Church. A young lady asked me not long ago, "Do you want me to come into the Christian Endeavor alone among the old maids and you old married people?" I want every older Endeavorer to ask himself or herself the question, Am I in the way of the future usefulness of the Christian Endeavor?

You have been loyal and true to the pledge and have filled your place manfully. But all of us get older as the days go by.

Instead of remaining in the "training school of the Church" all our lives, we ought to now take our places in the Church. Instead of remaining on the Lookout Committee, they will make you an overseer. Instead of being a member of the Prayer Meeting Committee, they will make you an elder. If the Christian Endeavor is and has been a training school for the church, do you not think yourself about old enough for active service in the Church? The monthly meeting, quarterly meeting and yearly meeting are in need of trained young people. Think of this very seriously and let us prepare for a future for the Christian Endeavor among Friends, and also furnish at once a host of enthusiastic middle-aged workers for the monthly meeting. E. HOWARD BROWN.

Richland, Ia.

If we would gain light either on the theory or the practice of religion, we must sincerely desire the light. We must use the light we already have. We must patiently seek light in the double way of prayer and rational inquiry. Never, as long as the world stands, will any religiously benighted soul thus patiently desire and pray and labor for the break of day, without at last seeing the eyelids of the morn unsealed, and the painfully dusky east gradually redden into the sun.—E. F. Burr.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

I appreciate THE AMERICAN FRIEND as a whole, and especially the "Events and Comments" and the "Editorials." . . . There are very many in the West who love Truth and value highly the careful, loyal, able position of our paper.

HERBERT J. MOTT.

Curtis, Neb.

Nixon and Louisa Rush, ministers of Fairmount, Ind., are visiting meetings in Oregon.

The Christian Workers' Assembly of Iowa Yearly Meeting will be held at New Providence, Iowa, the 22d to 28th inst.

John F. Hanson delivered an address on "Peace" at the Friends' Meeting House, Marshalltown, Ia., on the 26th ult.

Willis R. Hotchkiss expects to attend New England Yearly Meeting, after spending a week of rest at the home of Sarah M. Seull at West Falmouth, Mass.

Friends at Newberg, Ore., are very happy over their success in paying off all indebtedness on their meeting house. The house cost $15,000, and was built in 1893.

Ellison R. Purdy delivered the baccalaureate address for Friends' Academy at Le Grand First-day afternoon, the 17th ult., and for the New Providence Academy the 31st ult.

We have received no official information on the subject, but it has been reported several times that Dover Monthly Meeting in New Hampshire has recorded Joel and Hannah Bean as ministers, and the report is undoubtedly correct.

Joseph S. Elkinton has been liberated by Philadelphia Monthly Meeting to pay a religious visit to all the remnants of Indian tribes dwelling in New York and the New England States, and some within the Dominion of Canada.

The Temperance Committee of New England Yearly Meeting is making plans for a solid and interesting public meeting on the evening of the 16th at the Friends' Meeting House in Portland. The main address will be given by Edwin C. Dinwiddie, of Washington, D. C. The committee would like to see the house full.

George N. Hartley, the general superintendent of the Friends' Indian Missions, attended the meeting at Knightstown, Ind., Fourth month 10th, and gave an address in the evening, full of interest and instruction concerning the Indians.

At Bangor Quarterly Meeting, held at Bangor, Ia., the 23d and 24th ult., J. F. Hanson, Ellison R. Purdy, Joel Bean and Harry Hays were present and had religious service. J. F. Hanson delivered a peace address to a large company on First-day afternoon.

John Frederick Hanson was nominated for Governor of Iowa on the Prohibition ticket at Marshalltown, the 28th ult., on the first ballot. He was received and spoke amid great enthusiasm. The Prohibitionists, and especially the Friends, are greatly pleased.

Anna B. Thomas, of Baltimore, Md., delivered an address on "Peace" at the "Playhouse for Poor Children," Eleventh and Catharine Streets, Philadelphia, on the 5th instant. Plans are being perfected to keep several kindergarten and gymnastic classes open in the "Play House" during the summer months.

Charles E. Tebbets, Levi D. Barr and Thomas Armstrong, of Pasadena Quarter, were in attendance at Whittier Quarterly Meeting; also Jesse Wilmore, from San Diego Meeting. The Christian Endeavor session was addressed by Charles Kellogg and Bell White. The entire quarterly meeting was a time of rich blessing.

Lindley A. Wells, who has acceptably served in the meeting at Vermilion Grove, Ill., for the past year and nine months, has recently accepted a call to Long Beach, Cal., where he expects to be permanently located after Seventh month 12th. He and family will start for their new home on the 15th inst., spending three weeks in Kansas on their way. Friends will note change of their address.

Memorial Sabbath was observed in Friends' Meeting at Los Angeles, Cal. It was made an occasion for the presentation of the cause of peace. The decorations were carnations, white roses, palms, ferns, and the national colors. Levi Mills preached an eloquent peace sermon to the members of Rosecrans Post, G. A. R., who, with the members of the W. R. C., attended the services in a body.

Hannah Bellows, daughter of the late John Bellows, of Gloucester, England, who was prevented by his death from going to teach among the Doukhobors one year ago, has lately been visiting among interested Friends in and about Philadelphia, preparatory to entering upon her mission in Canada. On Second-day, the 1st instant, she left Philadelphia for her distant field of service among the Doukhobors.

The North Branch Academy (Kansas) commencement occurred the 22d ult. There were four graduates—Carl Folger, Jennie Hadley, Harold Hester and Nellie Watkins. The school has had a prosperous year. It has been under the charge of H. H. Townsend, principal, and Anna R. Townsend, assistant. These teachers, wish to retire from the work, and the Board is now looking for others to take their places.

The speakers at the Seventh Annual Reunion of the West-town Old Scholars' Association at Westtown, Pa., the 6th instant, were Judge William F. Smith, of Ohio, and Anna K. Cadbury, of Philadelphia. The former is well known in the legal profession in Ohio. The latter is a member of the committee in charge of the school and is prominent in Friends' educational circles. Over one thousand were present, and the event was one of the most interesting of the school year.

Twenty years ago Deborah Brown, whose obituary appears this week, began her labors with the W. C. T. U. in Kansas, most of the time holding prominent and responsible positions. For a number of years she was district superintendent of the peace department of that institution. Later she was elected State superintendent of the same department, which place she held at the time of her death. Missions, home and foreign, is another line of work that occupied much of her time and thought.

Nathan and Esther Frame have been laboring in Florida since the 8th of Second month. They began work at St. Petersburg, where they conducted a union evangelistic effort for three weeks. Then they spent three weeks at Braidentown, followed by meetings at Oneco and Manatee. At all these points their labors were crowned with success, and at one point the church membership was doubled as a result of their efforts. They are now holding meetings in Key West, the most southern city in the United States.

Commencement exercises at Bloomingdale Academy, Bloomingdale, Ind., occurred the 5th instant. A class of eight finished the academic course, six boys and two girls. Most of these will pursue their work in some higher institution of learning. Professor A. F. Mitchell will remain at the head of the academy for another year. There have been some changes in the course of study to better meet college entrance requirements. Thomas C. Brown, of Carmel, Ind., preached the baccalaureate sermon. This is the third year he has been called for this duty.

Salem, Ore., Quarterly Meeting was held at Rosedale from the 15th to 17th ult. The presence and ministry of Nixon and Louisa Rush, of Fairmount, Ind., who intend to visit, in the love of the gospel, all of the meetings constituting this and Newberg Quarterly Meeting, were highly appreciated. Daniel Drew, of Portland Monthly Meeting, and Alice Mendenhall, of Newberg Meeting, were also present and contributed to the religious service. The fraternal delegates sent by Newberg Quarterly Meeting were very cordially welcomed. The business of the meeting was transacted in much harmony.

Falmouth Quarterly Meeting, New England, was held at Deering, Me., Fifth month 29th to the 31st. Those present from abroad were W. J. Hadley, of Iowa; Alfred Ware, of Portland, Me., and Sarah W. Newlin, of Deering. These, together with the home members and others, rendered lively and impressive services. Seventh-day evening the Bible School Conference met at the Oak Street Meeting House in Portland, Me., to listen to a discourse for the benefit of Sabbath School workers, by Smith Baker, which was very helpful and inspiring. First-day evening closed with a social meeting in the same place.

Friendsville Academy, Friendsville, Tenn., closed its academic year the 21st ult. The fall term had only a limited patronage, but at the opening of the spring term most of the funds from benevolent sources were assigned to a general tuition fund, and the rate of tuition reduced forty per cent. This act proved satisfactory, and the enrollment soon increased to 115. The commencement exercises were complimentary to all sharing responsibilities. On the 17th Dr. Hughes, of Knoxville, preached on "The Fullness of Years, and the Intensity of Life." On the 19th the undergraduates rendered an excellent program to the largest audience that ever assembled in Farnum Hall. The commencement exercises were participated in by the students and bore high marks of intellectual, moral and religious culture. An address was given by J. M. Melear, of Knoxville. The friends of the academy are much rejoiced over the benevolent act of Philadelphia Friends, and especially of the trustees of school property, Maryville, Tenn., for the $1,000 given to aid the William Forster Home, and the $2,000 given Friendsville Academy. This comes at a time when the children from mountain and valley homes in East Tennessee are appealing for aid. Many of these are from homes where parents were once students of what was Maryville Friends School. One of these, May Sharp, of Monroe County, won a scholarship the past year on the highest general average. Samuel T. Miser, of Maryville, Tenn., is retained as principal for the ensuing year.

The following is a program of the Earlham College commencement week, from the 4th to the 10th instant, inclusive:

Fifth-day—Annual Elocutionary Entertainment.

Sixth-day—Annual Recital of the Department of Music.

Seventh-day—Public Exercises of the Ionian and Phoenix Societies.

Evening—Reception for President Kelly.

Third-day—Morning—Meeting of the Board of Trustees. Class Day Exercises of the Senior Class. Afternoon—Business Meeting of the Alumni Association. Evening—Public Meeting of the Alumni Association. Address, by Linton A. Cox, '88, Indianapolis, Ind. Poem, by Professor Allen D. Hole, '97, Earlham College.

Fourth-day—Morning—Commencement Exercises. Address, by Professor George Edgar Vincent, Dean of the Junior Colleges, the University of Chicago. Conferring Degrees.

COMMENCEMENT AT GUILFORD.

On the 26th ult. the sixty-seventh year of the operation of Guilford College was brought to a close. The day was highly favorable, and a large company of intelligent people were present to hear the closing exercises of the class of 1903 and the baccalaureate address by David Worth Dennis, of Richmond, Ind.

Among the visitors was the venerable B. G. Worth, of Wilmington, who is an uncle of David W. Dennis, and who was educated at this school in the early days of its history. He was a student of the distinguished scholar and teacher, the late Nereus Mendenhall.

At 10 o'clock the exercises began with devotional service, consisting of an anthem, followed by a Bible reading and prayer by Professor Dennis. After brief orations by four members of the class were delivered, the bachelor's degree was conferred upon Charles L. Holton, Philip D. M. Lord, of Maine; Ida Eleanor Millis, Irvin T. Blanchard, Edgar Thomas Snipes, Flora K. Harding, Rufus William McCulloch, Maria E. Bristow, of Virginia, and Charles M. Short.

The president made the following announcements: The Bryn Mawr scholarship has been awarded to Flora K. Harding, and the Haverford College scholarship to Irvin T. Blanchard. Some valuable gifts have been made to the library during the year: 150 volumes by R. J. Mendenhall, of Minneapolis; Hastings's "Dictionary of the Bible, 4 vols., by Alfred C. Garrett; Hilprecht's "Explorations in Bible Lands," "American Animals" and Anne Hollingsworth Wharton's "Social Life in the Early Republic," 3 vols., by Joshua L. Baily; "The Doukhobors," 1 vol., by the author, Joseph Elkinton.

W. W. Mills, of Raleigh, N. C., in honor of his wife, who was educated at Guilford, and whose son has been a student here during the year, has just made a subscription of $1,000 towards the establishment of an electric light plant. The announcement of this donation was received with great applause, and a very cordial expression of appreciation of the splendid gift was made by the president.

The address by D. W. Dennis was one of the most forcible presentations of the doctrine of universal education that has ever been made at Guilford College. Every one felt that through Dr. Dennis's splendid address he had been inspired to do more for the cause of education in the future than he had ever done in the past; and the educational effort of the exercises altogether was most gratifying to all who are seeking to develop and enlarge the powers of Guilford College.

The Alumni Association has shown much interest in the success of the college during the year and in its future growth and prosperity.

DIED.

BROWN.—At Barclay, Kan., Fifth month 21st, 1903, Deborah H. Brown, daughter of Daniel and Angeline Stanton, of Logan County, O., and wife of Edward H. Brown, in her 59th year. She was a birthright Friend, and for a number of years an elder and faithful Christian worker in her local meeting.

DORLAND.—At the home of her daughter-in-law, Bloomfield, Canada, Fifth month 31st, 1903, Mary Ann Dorland, mother of the late John T. Dorland, Jr., in her 88th year. Interment from her late residence, "Lake View," in Wellington, Ontario.

NEWLIN.—At Carmel, Ind., Fifth month 18th, 1903, Elizabeth Newlin, in her 82d year. She was a daughter of John Sylvester and Elizabeth King, and wife of John Newlin (deceased in 1875). She was a strong pioneer character, who knew the way to infuse her life into the church and community. The highest testimony to her splendid womanhood and Christian character is the distinguished family of Christian men and women she has given to the world.

RICH.—At Emporia, Kan., Fifth month 16th, 1903, Phineas H. Rich, aged 76 years. He was a lifelong Friend, and a member of Emporia Meeting at the time of his death.

TOWNSEND.—At the home of her youngest daughter, Jennie T. Gray, Winchester, Ind., Fourth month 27th, 1903, Mary G. Townsend, wife of Stephen Townsend, aged 87 years. She was a birthright Friend, and was converted when 22 years of age. Her counsel or encouragement in public service were always prized.

WRIGHT.—Near Sherwood, Oregon, Fifth month 20th, 1903, Alonzo Wright, in his 87th year. He joined the Methodist Church in 1847, but later united with Oregon Friends, and lived a consistent Christian life.

A VALUABLE PUBLICATION.

The Pennsylvania Railroad 1903 Summer Excursion Route Book.

On June 1st the Passenger Department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company published the 1903 edition of the Summer Excursion Route Book. This work is designed to provide the public with descriptive notes of the principal summer resorts of Eastern America, with the best routes for reaching them, and the rates of fare. It contains all the principal seashore and mountain resorts of the East, and over seventeen hundred different routes or combinations of routes. The book has been compiled with the greatest care, and altogether is the most complete and comprehensive handbook of summer travel ever offered to the public.

The cover is handsome and striking, printed in colors, and the book contains several maps, presenting the exact routes over which tickets are sold. The book is profusely illustrated with fine half-tone cuts of scenery at the various resorts and along the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

On and after June 1st this very interesting book may be procured at any Pennsylvania Railroad ticket office at the nominal price of ten cents, or upon application to Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa., by mail for twenty cents.

THAT'S THE TIME

When Proper Food is Necessary.

Proper food is never more necessary than when recovering from a wasting sickness, when over-eating would be fatal, and yet the body needs nourishment and plenty of it.

At this time the condensed food Grape-Nuts is shown to be one's most powerful friend. Four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts and cream will sustain a healthy man for half a day, and a less quantity in warm milk will build up the convalescent wonderfully. No stomach is too weak to digest and relish Grape-Nuts. "I was taken sick with typhoid fever, and everyone who has had this disease knows how weak and lifeless a person feels when beginning to recuperate.

"I had to be very careful about my diet, and could eat only very light foods. These did not seem to nourish me, and instead of getting better every day I was just at a standstill, and everyone began to fear a relapse. One day while lying in bed very much discouraged my sister, who was reading to me from the paper, read an article about Grape-Nuts, and we decided to send for a package.

"From the very first meal of Grape-Nuts I began to improve, strength came in bounds and leaps, with the result that I was soon out of bed; my change for the better seemed simply marvelous. My mind is clear and strong, and my body sturdy. I am now entirely recovered." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There is a reason.

Events and Comments.

Lady Henry Somerset, who has been dangerously ill, has undergone an operation, and was unable to attend the convention of the World's Christian Temperance Union at Geneva, Switzerland, the 9th instant.

An authoritative report announcing Russia's future policy with respect to the Jews has been made public. It declares that the Siberian mines await hundreds of the rioters; that orders have been sent out to the governors all over Russia to make immediate use of fire-arms in cases of anti-Jewish disturbances, but that the government cannot give the Jews new rights of citizenship, as this would be sure to drive the Russian population to new excesses against the Jews.

The grain markets reflect a conviction in the trade that the floods and heavy rains have inflicted widespread crop damage. Probably the cold rains have been doing more in this line than the flooding of grain fields. They have delayed corn planting and compelled much replanting so late in the season that it will be difficult for the crop to mature. Drouth has been at work where over-moisture has not, and altogether the promise of the year in agriculture is not of the highest.

The five leading live stock markets of the interior, for the first four months of 1903, report receipts of 10,069,769 head, as compared with 10,220,516 head in the same months of 1902, and 10,263,859 head in the first four months of 1901. From this it appears that there has been a continuous decline in quantity. The chief loss, however, has been in the receipts of hogs. Gains have been made in the receipts of cattle and sheep, compared with either of the two preceding years.

President Roosevelt returned to Washington the 5th instant in excellent health and spirits after his long tour through the Western and Central States. One of the remarkable features of the trip was the non-partisan spirit displayed in the reception of the President everywhere. Democratic as well as Republican mayors united in extending him a welcoming hand. The crowds in the different places visited were orderly and friendly, and gave the secret service men little cause for concern.

There is a disposition among the other ministers at Peking, China, to regard more favorably the British proposal toward relaxing the conditions of the indemnity payments. The proposal, which is a modification of last year's scheme, invites the powers to accept payment in silver until 1910, after which payments are to be in gold. Such relaxations are to be conditional on China's signing the gold bonds in accordance with what the powers, except America, consider an equitable interpretation of the protocol's indemnity clause.

Until recently the British Parliament has held out against the practice of delivering speeches from manuscript which has become so common in Congress, but it is said that the innovation is now gaining ground, though it is viewed with disfavor, and a member was recently rebuked by the speaker for his use of a manuscript. When a man has something to say he can find hearers, but when he has something written he might as well print it. The decline of oratory in Congress has often been attributed to this cause, and Speaker Gully is to be praised for his efforts to keep up the old standards.

The hope held out by Joseph Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary, to Canada of preferential treatment for Canadian imports into England has overbalanced any desire the Canadians might have for reciprocity with the United States. The reciprocity proposition was the leading feature of the program to be submitted to the high joint commission. Hope of the reassembling of the commission has now been abandoned, since Canada shows no disposition to consider reciprocity, and it is said that there will be no occasion to reconvene for the consideration of the other and smaller subjects on the program.

Japan seems to be thoroughly modern in the monopolizing movement. The Japanese Steamship Company Nippon Yusen Kaisha has just purchased the vessels, rights and good will of the British Meibian Yangtse River Steamer Line, which gives the company control of the wharves and berthing accommodation at the Yangtse ports, where the congestion of late years has prevented the competition of newcomers. Then, again, owing to her acquisition of Formosa, Japan controls the camphor product of the world. The Chinese yield has never exceeded 220,000 pounds, while the yield in Formosa has in recent years averaged over 6,000,000 pounds. In the rest of Japan the annual production is about 300,000 pounds. For four years the government has handled the entire output of Formosa, but recently the monopoly has been extended to the camphor of the whole empire.

The United States Supreme Court has decided the case of the Territory of Hawaii vs. Osaki Mankichi, a Japanese, who was convicted of manslaughter in Hawaii under the laws of the old Hawaiian Republic, adversely to the claim of the prisoner that his conviction was illegal and invalid, five judges concurring, four dissenting. The decision was sharply criticised in dissenting opinions. In support of the decision Justice Brown said: "From the terms of the resolution it is evident that no change in the government was contemplated, and that until further legislation the Republic of Hawaii continued in existence," while Justice Harlan, in dissenting, declared that "the opinion of the court would mean that the United States may acquire territory by cession, conquest or treaty, and that Congress may exercise sovereign dominion over it, outside of and in violation of the Constitution, and under regulations that could not be applied to the organized Territories of the United States and their inhabitants."

"Some years ago," said Bishop Potter, in a recent speech, "I was traveling in Minnesota. A man approached me on the railway platform and scanned my features closely. 'Excuse me,' he said, finally, 'but haven't I seen your picture in the papers?' I was compelled to confess that he might have done so. 'I thought so,' continued the inquisitive one. 'May I ask you what you were cured of?'"—"Medical Times."

You have heard the experience the old negro told in meeting: "I prayed night after night for de good Lawd to sen' me a Thanksgiving turkey, but I prayed in vain. Then at last I prayed de good Lawd to sen' me where de turkey was, and de berry nex' night de turkey was ready for de oven."—Selected.

An Irishman went to have a tooth extracted. The dentist told his assistant to stick a pin in the patient's leg, from behind the chair, so that the pain might distract attention. The tooth-pull and pin-stab came together, and the Irishman howled with anguish. "Oh, murther, murther," he yelled, clasping his leg, "I didn't know the roots went so fur down."—Selected.

LEARNING THINGS.

We Are All in the Apprentice Class.

When a simple change of diet brings back health and happiness the story is briefly told. A lady of Springfield, Ill., says: "After being afflicted for years with nervousness and heart trouble, I received a shock four years ago that left me in such a condition that my life was despaired of. I could get no relief from doctors nor from the numberless heart and nerve medicines I tried, because I didn't know that the coffee was daily putting me back more than the doctors could put me ahead.

"Finally, at the request of a friend, I left off coffee and began the use of Postum, and against my convictions I gradually improved in health until for the past six or eight months I have been entirely free from nervousness and those terrible sinking, weakening spells of heart trouble.

"My troubles all came from the use of coffee which I had drunk from childhood, and yet they disappeared when I quit coffee and took up the use of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Many people marvel at the effects of leaving off coffee and drinking Postum, but there is nothing marvelous about it—only common sense.

Coffee is a destroyer—Postum is a re-builder. That's the reason.

GIVE THE BOY A CHANCE.

There is nothing in the world so well worth looking after as the boy, and there is no being in the world so much neglected as the boy. The attitude of the world toward him is too nearly expressed by the mother, who said to the nurse:

"Where is Johnny?"
 "He is out in the yard."
 "What is he doing?"
 "I don't know."

"Well, go and see, and tell him to stop it."

We chaperone our girls, and not too carefully; but we leave the boy to choose his associates and his environments without much advice, and with very little guidance. Girls are naturally winsome, gentle, companionable, and they win their way, too, and are welcome in all homes, but I do not know of many homes where boys are invited. About the only door that swings with sure welcome to the boy, about the only chair that is shoved near the fire especially for the boy, about the only place where he is sure of welcome, is where you do not desire him to go.

It is about the hardest thing in the world to get hold of a boy—to get a sure grip on him. I remember a father I once knew who had spent most of his life being a companion for his son. He went skating with him. He went everywhere with him. They were always together. They were companions. The old man never amounted to much himself, but his boy did. The product justified the expense.

The greatest discovery in the world is self-discovery. A great many people go through the world and never discover themselves, never come to the consciousness that they are an element, a factor in the world. They feel no personal responsibility. The load does not touch their shoulders. We are apt to criticise self-assertion, and yet a boy or a young man who thinks he is the whole thing is worth a thousand times more than the one who thinks he is nothing. The one will probably discover his mistake, and he will get lots of assistance to that end; but the other will never discover his mistake, and few will care whether he does or not.—Leslie M. Shaw, in "The Purity Advocate."

The great men about us will pass to their rest,

Their places be filled by the boys who pursue

The search for the highest, the noblest, the best;

I wonder who'll fill them; I hope 'twill be you.

—"Ram's Horn."

"Success don't konsist in never making blunders, but in never makin' the same one twict."—Josh Billings.

AMONG THE HUSKS.

It is stated that before Cornelius Vanderbilt died he said to a friend: "I don't see what good it does me—all this money that you say is mine. I can't eat it; I can't spend it; in fact, I never saw it. I dress no better than my private secretary, and cannot eat as much as my coachman. I live in a big servants' boarding house, am bothered to death by beggars, have dyspepsia, cannot drink champagne, and most of my money is in the hands of others, who use it mainly for their benefit." It is a terrible thing to come toward the end of life and find oneself condemned to live among the husks. But there is no way to avoid it if the mind and heart are given up to material things during the growing and working years of one's career. Surely no one is so great a fool as the man that lays up treasure for himself, but is not rich toward God.

The time is past when poets starve
In garrets without hope,
They're making scads by writing ads
For breakfast foods and soap.

The volume relating to appropriations made and new offices created during the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress has been completed. A summary of the appropriations shows a grand total of $753,058,506. The new offices and employments specifically authorized are 11,316 in number; those abolished or omitted are 1,815, a net increase of 9,501.

"INTERNATIONAL" BIBLES AND TESTAMENTS

A NEW BOOK JUST ISSUED

COPYRIGHT 1902

A Very Useful Book for Ministers, Evangelists, Teachers, the Young People, and everyone who is interested in the greatest subject of the Bible, and desires to comprehend the Theme of Salvation in the exact words of the New Testament.

Sixteen Complete and Consecutive Readings in the New Testament. All marked in red and indexed, enabling the reader to turn rapidly and quickly to all the texts in succession. (See next page.) Everywhere commended and endorsed.

Baltimore Methodist Protestant: "This is the most unique and practical marked New Testament we have yet seen. Bible readers, evangelists, missionaries and ministers will find the work so practical and so convenient as to become a necessity."

Christian Work: "A marvel of convenience; has the practical qualities of a marked New Testament."

Henry N. Wharton, Evangelist: "Your New Testament for workers is the only one for the purpose I would recommend. Many Helps have been gotten out, but they only suit the men who write them. David cannot fight in Saul's armor. Jesus Christ knows best how to point the way of life."

"You're what?" asked the common or garden spook
Of a stranger at midnight's hour.
And the shade replied with a graceful glide,
"Why, I'm the ghost of a flower."

"The ghost of a flower?" said the old-time spook;
"That's a brand-new one on me;
I never supposed a flower had a ghost,
Though I've seen the shade of a tree."
—"Life."

The past is like a derelict on the stream. Each day it is floated farther away. It is hopelessly gone from us. And even if it could be reclaimed it would not suit our present purpose. It was all right once, but it can never be again. We have outgrown it. The little knee-breeches are no use to the grown man. The present must have present things.—"United Presbyterian."

STRANGE

*He died at night. Next day they came
To weep and praise him: sudden fame
These suddenly warm comrades gave.
They called him pure, they called him brave;
One praised his heart, and one his brain;
All said, "You'd seek his like in vain,— Gentle and strong and good." None saw
In all his character a flaw.
At noon he wakened from his trance,
Mended, was well! They looked askance;
Took his hand coldly; loved him not,
Though they had wept him; quite forgot
His virtues; lent an easy ear
To slanderous tongues; professed a fear
He was not what he seemed to be;
Thanked God they were not such as he;
Gave to his hunger stones for bread;
And made him, living, wish him dead.*

SUMMER CHRISTIANS.

WE hear often of "Fairweather Christians," and "Rainy-day Christians," of "Housetop," and "Basement, Christians." There are also "Winter Christians" and "Summer Christians," and best of all there are "All the year Christians." It has long been recognized that the hot, relaxing weather of an American summer has its effect not only on the physical condition, but also on the moral and religious life of many persons. Energy falls to a low point, and it grows hard to hold the enemies of the spiritual life at bay. It has become a settled habit for everybody to migrate from the city who can possibly get away. Those who have been carrying the Bible classes and the mission work, and the Boys' Clubs, and those who have taken the responsibility for the forward work of the Church, lay these things down and go to the country, the seashore or the mountains, and there sets in a period of small meetings, with very little religious activity of any kind. In the country the danger is of another sort. There is an influx of summer visitors, and a new population appears. Many of those who come are away for a rest and for pleasure, and they take on a free and easy way of living, and not infrequently set none too good an example for the country people among whom they have come. They make little account of the First day of the week, and leave their religion behind with their winter clothes. All this has its marked influence upon the country neighborhood, and particularly upon the young persons who have ambitions to get in with the city visitors.

This picture is of course too general to fit any one locality exactly, but the fact is clear to all observers that the summer does bring very severe tests to the religious life and to the work of the church. Now what remains for us to do to meet the summer situation? There is only one way to meet any such difficulty, that is for the man or woman who is a Christian in fact to hold straight on in rain or shine, cold or heat, as though he had been stationed at his post by Christ himself. If those who have been leaders in the city meeting find it necessary to go away for the summer, as often happens, then this is just the chance for those who have taken a quieter and less active part during the winter, to come to the front and fill the gaps. It is often a great blessing to have emergencies come because they reveal how much good material lies unused. Then those who go to new localities for the summer have the opportunities opened to them of giving new ideas and new methods of work in the communities where they go, and of infusing, best of all, a new spirit and enthusiasm into those among whom they live. What better rest can there be than that which comes from the joy of helping others to get surer hold of the things which make life really good? And, finally, nobody can realize how much power a simple country man or woman, who has the sincere, honest, four-square Christian life, can exert over those who have grown tired of mere formal religion and fashionable churches. Many a careless pleasure seeker has found a new life through the influence and faith of some country Christian whose life stood out above the low level as the mountain stands above the flat fields and pastures. Put truth into your life and decide that you belong to Jesus Christ three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, and, whether it is your lot to spend the summer in the city or the country, there will be effects from your life like the effects which come from the fresh air of the sea and the fragrance from the balsam trees.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING.*

THE report of London Yearly Meeting gives the impression that the sessions of this year were well up to those of previous years in interest and in importance. The visitors from America included Ruth S. Murray, William and Susan Thompson, of New England; Charles and May Replogle, from the Alaskan Mission; Elisha and Virginia Hole Blackburn and Adelaide T. Hole, from Ohio, and William Penn Henley, from Indiana. The statistical returns show a present membership of 17,617, which is an increase of 141. There are 7,767 attenders who are not enrolled as members, and there are 748 members who reside in foreign parts, 234 of whom are in America. The Foreign Mission reports show 127 missionaries in the foreign field, 116 of whom are Friends.

* Since this was written the interesting article by Joshua Rowntree has been received.

A prominent Friend stated that he did not remember ever hearing a series of American epistles, which took so broad an outlook on the duty of the Christian Church, nor a series which breathed so much of unity of brotherliness as did the epistles of this year. It was also noted that every one of the American epistles spoke of the need of more training for those who are to do the work of the ministry.

The three subjects which most especially took hold of the yearly meeting this year were (1) the development of the ministry, (2) the attitude toward the new Education Bill, and (3) the plan of procedure in future yearly meetings. The subject of the ministry is without question the one which at present occupies the thought of concerned English Friends more than does any other subject; and rightly so, for everything depends upon the right solution of this problem. The whole matter was so clearly presented in the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight by Edward Grubb, that we shall print next week the substance of his address. The time spent on the "State of Society" was largely devoted to this same subject. It was shown that attendance on meetings for worship is much lower than it ought to be in a healthy Church, and that the proportion of ministers to membership is far too small. It was felt, too, that in meetings composed mostly of birthright members there are many lifeless and formal members. The yearly meeting concluded to call an autumn conference to consider the whole subject of the ministry and the special subject of birthright membership.

It proved extremely difficult for the yearly meeting to formulate any corporate attitude toward the Education Bill, and on the subject of the payment of tax rates under it. It should be understood by our readers that the Education Bill puts the direction of public education largely in the hands of the Established Church, and that many Friends are compelled to pay taxes to support schools to which they would not send their children, and the religious teaching in which they strongly disapprove. Many Friends have decided to refuse to pay their school tax, and to suffer the consequences. Much personal sympathy was expressed for those who take this course of resistance, but naturally the meeting itself found it impossible to adopt a minute encouraging such a course, for other Friends felt clear that it was their duty to pay the tax and confine themselves to constitutional methods of opposing the present educational system.

After much consideration of the subject, the yearly meeting concluded to meet in some other city than London in 1905, provided that a suitable place for holding the sessions offered itself in time to make the change of locality feasible. It was further decided to shorten materially the period of the yearly meeting, which now occupies nearly two weeks. The new plan includes the omission of the mid-week meeting for worship during the first week, and many slight changes which will expedite business. Members were encouraged to express their approval or disapproval, where possible, in a word or two rather than in lengthy speeches. In America we have succeeded in shortening the period, but we miss the solid consideration of great questions, which is such a feature of London Yearly Meeting. Brevity may be purchased at too great a price.

EARLHAM'S NEW PRESIDENT INAUGURATED.

LAST week marked an epoch in the history of Earlham College. The college was founded (at first as a boarding school) in 1847, and during the period of fifty-six years it has had three remarkable men at its head. During its first period its guiding spirit was Barnabas C. Hobbs. He was followed by Joseph Moore, who was then fresh from his studies with Agassiz, and whose work was a remarkable inspiration, as it has ever since been, to all who came closely under his influence. The period of fifteen years during the administration of J. J. Mills has been one of steady expansion and of growing influence. New buildings have been erected, the endowment has multiplied five-fold, the faculty has grown in numbers and in intellectual strength and the reputation of the college has increased extraordinarily. The deep religious spirit, which has become such a feature of Earlham, has steadily increased during these fifteen years.

Now a new administration is beginning with great promise. Robert L. Kelly, the new president, as one speaker at the inauguration exercises said, "has already killed a lion and a bear," and is well girded for the tasks which lie before him. He has the entire confidence of the supporters of the college, and the faith and affection of the students. It is easy to believe that a steady upward career is waiting in the future for the college. The inauguration exercises were of a very high order. Many distinguished educators were present, and the tone of the addresses was most gratifying to all who care for truth and goodness.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

PLEDGES have been received for about $40,000 toward the Whittier College Endowment Fund, nearly all from Friends of California. This includes one subscription of $10,000, one of $3,000, twelve of $1,000, fifteen of $500 and several smaller amounts.

Only three weeks remain to complete the work, with about $10,000 to raise to secure the $50,000 according to the conditions under which Washington Hadley made his offer of $10,000.

The success of the work of Friends in California, and the character of it as well, will depend upon the success of its educational work.

The friends of California Yearly Meeting are doing their best to build up the interests of the Church. With less than 1,800 members, they are giving over $20,000 to the building of new meeting houses, and other church work this year, and this entirely aside from the pledges mentioned above for educational work. They have the heavy burden of a pioneer field, and they are doing nobly.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE WELSH SETTLERS OF HAVERFORD.

BY PRESIDENT ISAAC SHARPLESS.

Under the strict guard of the Friends of Philadelphia is an old limp-leather book which contains, in an angular and sometimes almost illegible hand, the business proceedings of the Welsh Friends who established the "Barony" on the banks of the Schuylkill. The records of Haverford Monthly Meeting begin with "the 10th day of the Second month (April), 1684," when, among other interesting events of similar character, "Humphrey Ellis and Gwen Rees haveing declared their Intention of marriage before this meeting, John Bevan and John Humphrey were ordered to inspect to their Clearness, and to bring an acc't thereof to the next meeting," and again, a month later, "Humphrey Ellis & Gwen Rees haveing laid their Intention of Marriage the Second time before this meeting, and nothing but clearness found on each side, are Left to their freedom to proceed therein."

After the double announcement, Humphrey and Gwen stood up in a public meeting and announced that they took each other in marriage, "promising with Divine assistance to be unto her (him) an loving and faithful husband (wife) until death shall separate us." Then the certificate was signed by themselves and by their friends as witnesses, and they went to their farm in the woods to conquer it for civilization. The previous course of the courtship was hedged about with difficulty. We find the following directions: "That all young men among Friends make known their intention to their parents or guardians before they acquaint the woman's relations, and make it known to the woman's parents or guardians before they speak to them, and if any do otherwise they shall condemn the same."

The Barony is now a rich and popular suburb of Philadelphia. Its ancient woodlands are selling at thousands of dollars an acre, and the descendants of the settlers are among the prominent men of the old town. Their Welsh origin is only betrayed by the proper names, but Jones and Thomas and Roberts, Pugh (ap Hugh) and Price (ap Rees) and Bevan (ap Evan), and the line of stations along the Pennsylvania Railroad—Merion, Narberth, Wynnwood, Haverford, Bryn Mawr, Radnor and St. Davids, are their permanent memorials.

They had been land owners in Wales, some "gentlemen" and some "yeomen," and they bought their land of William Penn, 40,000 contiguous acres. They scattered themselves over this great territory, beginning in West Philadelphia and extending northward and westward for twenty miles. Their original idea was to control everything within the limits, to retain their language, customs and nationality, and to manage their civil affairs, as well as ecclesiastical, through their monthly meeting. So we find, interspersed with religious directions, "It is ordered by the Meeting, & Consent of the Inhabitants of the Townships of Haverford & Radnor in pursuance of a Law in that Case made yt ye Inhabitants of ye sd two Townships should pay 1 s. per hundred towards ye takeing of Woolves." It may be inferred that the "hundred" refers to acres owned, and not to wolves destroyed.

In order to retain a means of access to the city they must needs guarantee a sum to the ferryman, so three Friends "are ordered by this meting to collect the mony due to Nathaniel Mull, upon the account of ye ferry, to view their accounts & see what is due him, & to bring an account thereof to the next monthly meeting."

Mull was not the name of the ferryman, but the Cymric penman stumbled at the strange name—Mul-lineux—and cut it short.

Another minute requires that the land owners should maintain their line fences.

They were not able to attend to all their secular affairs, however, without the aid of the central government, for in 1685 the Council records "the Complaint of ye friends of Hertford (Haverford) against the Indians for ye Rapine and Destruction of their Hoggs." The Council sent for "ye respective Indian Kings with all speed" and the trouble ended.

These Welshmen were many of them owners of considerable property. They brought with them their household furniture—solid oak pieces, which have come down to the present day. Their napkins were of the finest linen, and their plate was solid. Copper and pewter ware were abundant, and cash was not lacking.

They almost immediately began speculating in Susquehanna lands, and they had been here but about a dozen years when out of their abundance they were able to contribute to the impoverished New England-

ers. "The Friends appointed to collect the subscription of friends towards ye Releif of distressed friends & others in New England bring an acc't yt they collected & paid to the use aforesaid ye sune of 60£, 14s, 11d according to ye appointment of ye meeting."

Their own unfortunate neighbors were also well looked after. "That 15s. be given to help — in his present necessity, 5s. out of the Collection of each meeting. — are ordered to see the same paid ye said — and Likewise to Collect him out of each meeting effects to buy him a Cow & Calfe at Spring, provided he doth repay it if he be able hereafter, It being his proposall to friends when he requested the same."

"It was ordered as followeth That Three pounds of the Collection of Haverfôrd and Meirion is ordered by this meeting to be paid to assist — to build him a House, vixt. Thirty shillings of each Township."

"It is ordered by this Meeting that Cadder Morgan and James Thomas do receive the voluntary gift of Meirion Meeting to assist — in his present distress, he haveing sustained loss by fires: and Richard Ormes and Stephen Bevan for Radnor and Maurice Lleullyn and David Humphrey of Haverford to receive the voluntary subscription of each of the said Townships to the said use."

Nor did they intend that their Barony should be a refuge for defaulters from their old home. "Our friend John Bevan, haveing laid before this Meeting That divers persons came over here, and left debts unpaid, in those parts and places yt they came from, and the Creditors complaining against ye said persons that they did not receive any satisfaction from them for ye said debts, the ffrriends yt are appointed by this meeting to see to such affairs, are desired to deal with them, If there be any such belonging to this meeting."

Who were these Welsh people, and why did they come to Pennsylvania? As they were fond of stating in their public addresses, they were the descendants of the ancient Britons, a warlike and proud people who had never been conquered. Their racial devotion was deep-seated, their love of their country and language and customs they supposed to be ineradicable. Yet, when George Fox journeyed thitherward, in 1653, he was received with marked favor. A non-conformist minister of Denbighshire heard of him and sent two members of the congregation "to trie the Quakers." Fox tells us the result: "When these triers came down among us the power of the Lord overcame them, and they were both of them convinced of the truth. So they stayed some time with us and then returned into Wales, where afterwards one of them departed from his convincement, but the other whose name was John ap John, abode in the truth and received a gift in the ministry to which he continued faithful."

John ap John became the apostle of Quakerism in Wales. He aided in buying the Barony of William Penn, but he never came to America. He died at a great age, venerated as a patriarch of the flock.

Equally influential with him was Richard Davies. He met an itinerant preacher who had some influence with him, but his Quakerism seems to have arisen almost spontaneously. The thee and the thou, the refusal to doff the hat, to swear, and to make forcible resistance, the confident belief in direct Divine teaching as a practical guide in all matters, the silent worship and the unconquerable sense of duty, sprang fully developed into being. He went to London to enter into business, but the need of his Welsh neighbors pressed on his heart. He tells the story of his courtship (?) preparatory to his migration: "So the Lord gave me a little time, and He alone provided an help-meet for me; for I prayed unto Him that she might be of His own providing, for it was not yet manifest to me where she was, or who she was. But one time, as I was at Horslydown meeting in Southwark, I heard a woman Friend open her mouth, by way of testimony, against an evil ranting spirit, that did oppose Friends much in those days. It came to me from the Lord, that that woman was to be my wife, and to go with me to the country, and to be an help-meet for me. After meeting I drew somewhat near to her, but spoke nothing, nor took any acquaintance with her, nor did I know when or where I should see her again. I was very willing to let the Lord order it as it seemed best to Himself, and therein I was easy; and in time the Lord brought us acquainted with one another, and she confessed she had some sight of the same thing that I had seen concerning her. So after some time we parted, and I was freely resigned to the will of God; and when we came together again, I told her, if the Lord did order her to be my wife, she must come with me to a strange country, where there were no Friends but what God in time might call and gather to Himself. Upon a little consideration she said, if the Lord should order it so, she must go with her husband, though it were to the wilderness; and being somewhat sensible of the workings of God upon her spirit in this matter, she was willing to condescend in her mind to what He wrought in her; but by hearkening to one who had not well weighed the matter, she became disobedient to what God had revealed to her, which brought great sorrow and trouble upon her. I went to see her in this poor condition, and I rested satisfied with the will of God in this concern, being freely resigned, if the Lord had wrought the same thing in her, as was in me, to receive her as His gift to me; and after some time, we waiting upon the Lord together, she arose and declared before me, and the other Friend who had begot doubts and reasonings in her mind, that in the name and power of God she consented to be my wife, and to go along with me, whither the Lord should order us; and I said, in the fear of the Lord, I receive thee as the gift of God to me. So I rested satisfied with the will of God, for a farther accomplishment of it."

The young couple went zealously to work. Converts came quickly and in multitudes, and most of them were in jail in a few months. The fighting and unconquered Britons became peace-loving and unresisting Friends. Charles and Thomas Lloyd, of a good old family, and Oxford graduates, neighbors of Davies, joined them. Thomas became the leader of the Welshmen in Pennsylvania, and, after Penn, the most conspicuous man of the colony, and its Deputy Governor.

Nowhere in Great Britain did persecution rage more fiercely than in North Wales. It was easy to offer the oath of allegiance, and then fines and prisons would logically follow. A priest, with whom Davies had an argument, had the oath tendered to the Quaker leader, and he spent some years in jail as a result. The Lloyds had their full share. Such as were not sent to prison had their property swept away by unreasonable distraints to recover small fines. Their kinsmen, instigated by rage or gain, became their persecutors. There seemed no evidence that this would not go on indefinitely.

Then a haven of hope was opened. William Penn received his grant of Pennsylvania. He wished to call it New Wales, and claimed a Welsh origin for his own name. If his co-religionists could have a real New Wales, free from persecution, where they could educate their children in a pure environment, and retain their ancient customs, modified by their new teachings, they would emigrate bodily.

So a committee of them, including John ap John, Davies and Charles Lloyd saw Penn in London. They asked for a Barony, as they afterwards expressed it, "Within which all causes, quarrels, crimes and disputes might be tried and wholly determined by officers, magistrates and juries of our language." They would have representation in the Provincial Assembly, but all their local officers would be commissioned by themselves alone.

Penn seems to have satisfied them. He had ample powers under the Charter of Charles II., and he gave them promises which, if reduced to writing, appear to have been lost. It was his personal influence that brought them, as Hugh Roberts wrote him ten years later. "I can truly say that many of us had never come here but because of the love and unity and confidence we had in thee."

The stream began to come in 1682, prior to or in company with the proprietor. Dr. Thomas Wynne, the great physician of the colony, was a passenger on "The Welcome." Thomas Lloyd came in on the same boat with Francis Daniel Pastorius, a kindred spirit who was leading his Rhinelanders to Germantown. The largest immigration was in 1684, and in the years immediately succeeding they overflowed the "Welsh Tract" and settled Uwchlan, Tredyffrin and Goshen. Several of their leading men had taken five thousand acres as trustees. These tracts were subdivided to suit the smaller holders, and New Wales became an established fact. They had the usual difficulties of settlers in a woodland, but Philadelphia was near by, game was plentiful, and the Indians were friendly. Cabins, soon replaced by more substantial houses of stone, quickly arose. To marry their young people and to provide burial places for their dead were their first communal duties, to be followed in a little time by the building of meeting houses, when the private houses became insufficient. The most ornate Friends' meeting house in Pennsylvania, if old prints are to be relied on, was that at Merion, built in 1695.

There is no doubt that Penn meant to keep his promise of a Barony, though what amount of local government they were to be granted does not appear. He wrote his surveyor, Thomas Holmes, in March, 1684, that settlers in Wales were coming in large numbers, sufficient to occupy 40,000 acres, and "I do charge thee and strictly require thee to lay out said tract."

Nevertheless the immigrants were at first deeply disappointed with the result. They had to give up the idea of their own juries and officials as distinct from those of the province, and in a little time parts of their tract which they had not taken up, began to be surveyed and sold to English settlers. At first their protest was successful and the sales were annulled. This was after Penn had returned to England, and had made Thomas Lloyd his deputy. But Lloyd had no desire for political prominence, and in 1688 Penn sent over John Blackwell, an old Cromwellian soldier as Governor. He was a well-intentioned but tactless and stubborn man, who set everything awry. The Friends, under Lloyd's lead, protested most vehemently against his movements, and practically tied up the government. The wrangling partly centered about the Welsh tract.

This tract had been entirely in Philadelphia County. A petition came up from the people of Chester County, adjoining, asking that as they were few in number a portion of these Welshmen should be added to them to reduce the individual contributions to the county funds. The petition probably appealed to Blackwell as a wise measure to divide his most persistent opponents and so lessen their political power. They would be in a minority in either county. Several worthy people deposed that they had heard William Penn say that he had intended to run the line through the tract, and a map was found which seemed to support the view. The Welshmen protested vigorously, and asked at least for time to carry the question to England. They appealed to their ancient understanding with the Proprietary, but Blackwell by this time had a sympathetic majority in the Council well in hand, and he forced the division through. Merion Township was placed on one side of the line, and Haverford and Radnor on the other, and there they remain to this day. The Welshmen had refused to have anything to do with government (except to elect members of the provincial legislature) or to sit on juries or to take part in affairs in either county, but they none the less strenuously opposed this beginning of a separation. The heat engendered by this and other matters made Blackwell's life miserable. Thomas Lloyd was a Quaker minister, and, as Blackwell said, his fellow members had an "inordinate affection" for him. He could unresistingly go to jail in Wales in obedience to an unjust but established government. But in Pennsylvania he felt his responsibilities and knew his rights. Colonel Markham, who sided with the Deputy Governor, thus narrates one of the several scenes of confusion:

"The Govr declared ye Councill to be adjourned till ye next councill day, viz: to ye fifth day of ye same week, at nine of ye Clock, at ye same place; and Rose up out of his place to depart accordingly; upon wch severall of ye members of ye Councill departed. But divers remayned and a great deale of confused noise & clamor was Expressed at & without the doore of ye Govrs roome, where ye Councill had sate, wch occasioned persons (passing by in the streets) to stand still to heare, which ye Govr observing, desired ye sayd Tho Lloyd would forbear such lowd talking, telling him he must not suffer such doings, but would take a Course to Suppresse it, & shutt ye Doore. So he went away, attended with severall of ye members of ye Councill, others staying behind with ye Governor."

The Welsh refused to abide by the decision of the Council to divide their tract. At the next election of Councillors they all cast their votes for John Eckley, of Philadelphia County, and sent him up to claim membership. Amid much feeling the Governor and his majority ruled him to be ineligible. They also kept out Thomas Lloyd for refusal to comply with their wishes, and Samuel Richardson for an attack on the Governor's authority, notwithstanding his protest, "I will not withdraw. I was not brought hither by thee, and I will not go out by thy order. I was sent by the people, and thou hast no power to put me out." One of the councillors, lamenting the confusion, said, "We have two governors, one inside the council chamber, and one (Thomas Lloyd) outside." As soon as the condition could reach the ears of William Penn, he recalled Blackwell, who, doubtless with sincerity, told the Council, "'Tis a good day. I have given and I do unfeignedly give God thanks for it (which are not vain words), for to say no worse, I was very unequally yoked." Lloyd came in as the head of the government and retained the place till his death.

But the Welsh had not taken up their whole tract, and in 1690 men of other nationalities came in with claims. The settlers made an eloquent appeal: "We, the Inhabitants of the Welsh Tract in the Province of Pennsylvania in America, being descended of the ancient Britons, who always in the Land of our Nativity, under the crown of England, have enjoyed that Liberty and privilege as to have our bounds and limits by ourselves within which all causes, quarrels, crimes, and titles were tryed, and wholly determined by officers, magistrates, and jurors of our own language, which were our equals; having our faces towards these counties, made motion to our Governor, that we might enjoy the same here,—to the Intent we might live together here, and enjoy our Liberty and Devotion; which thing was soon granted us before we came into these parts."

It was decided that if the Welshmen would pay all quit rents since 1684 they might preserve their tract intact. They refused the proposition, but expressed a willingness to be responsible for the whole 40,000 acres in the future. This was declined. When it was too late they reconsidered the matter and agreed to accept the conditions. But the commissions to others had already been executed. Their political integrity had been broken, and now their social comradeship was threatened. The Barony was about to pass away, but the "Great Welsh Tract" became a well marked section of the province, leading in enterprise and prosperity, up to the time of the Revolution.

The Friends' meetings were more considerate of Welsh sentiment than the State authorities. The Quarterly Meeting of Chester, in 1700, sent word to the Haverford Friends that as they were in their county they should be joined to their meeting. But Haverford protested and the Philadelphia Meeting strongly supported them: "Whereas Haverford meeting hath belonged to this Quarterly Meeting from the first settlement & for several other reasons this meeting unanimously desire that the Monthly Meeting at Haverford may not be separated from this our Quarterly Meeting." And so it remains to this day.

The separateness of the Welsh settlers now rapidly departed. Business, marriages, politics, drew them into close association with the English, and while their brethren in the old country retained their language, the new country Welshmen, who had so pathetically appealed for national peculiarity, had before the Revolution lost it all.

In this conflict they were in a difficult position. The most of them had retained their Quaker connection. But the old Briton blood moved in their young men, and many of them joined the American army. The rest, whatever their sympathies, adopted, in the contest, a position of passive neutrality for conscience' sake.

In the dark winter of 1777-8, when the British army was in Philadelphia, and the starving soldiers of Washington were at Valley Forge and Radnor, the Welsh Tract lay between the two. It was fair game for both. The British foraged without apology. The Americans offered pay, but the Quakers would not take it. Between the two needy armies they lost everything movable. The carefully compiled records of the meetings tell of the number of cattle and horses and hogs, of sheaves of wheat and bushels of potatoes, of blankets and garments, of pots and kettles, with their estimated value, taken from each farmer. Thus we have: "Taken from Isaac Davies of Haverford, by a detachment of the British army, commanded by Earl Cornwallis, the 12th of 2th month, 1777, £284 — 10 — 2," the articles being mentioned in great detail; and as if he had not lost sufficiently: "Taken from Isaac Davies by the army under George Washington, commonly called the American Army, £5 — 17." John Roberts lost, at the hands of the American army, live stock, grain, and household matters valued at £500, but there was an especial reason for this, and his future sufferings were more tragical. He was a farmer and miller of Merion. At the time of the Revolution he was in his sixties, the almsgiver and kindly adviser of his neighborhood, of unquestioned integrity and British sympathies. He had just completed a collection for suffering Friends in New England. Some of his friends in Philadelphia had been exiled to Virginia in a high-handed way by the State government, to prevent their extending aid to the British army then advancing toward the city from the South. He went to Sir William Howe and asked for a company of soldiers to release them—a request which the British commander denied. His meetings disapproved of his action, which became public, and to escape real or fancied danger he took refuge within the British lines, after they had occupied Philadelphia. When Cornwallis, in December, 1777, organized the foraging party to Merion and Haverford, just noted, he took Roberts along as an unwilling guide.

The next spring the British evacuated Philadelphia, and all the open Tories went with them to New York, knowing the fate that awaited them if captured by the irate mob, which, for a little time, ruled the city. Roberts quietly remained. He was tried before Justice McKean and convicted of high treason. A thousand men of high standing, including his jurors and generals in the American army, attested to his character, and petitioned for his pardon without avail. His meeting refused to interfere, because it could not sanction the actions for which he had been tried, but its members joined heartily in the efforts to save him from the gallows. He expressed his penitence and quietly met his fate.

Such is the story, as the records of the Quaker Meetings show it. The court records were lost, and in order to account for the treason various reports have been circulated—that he mixed glass with the flour he furnished the American army, that he poisoned their springs, and so on. On the face of them these are false, but recently the manuscript notes of Judge McKean, embracing the case, have been recovered from a Philadelphia junk-shop, and the veracity of the ecclesiastical records has been established.

KNOWING AND DOING.

[Selections from the sermon of Henry van Dyke, before the Presbyterian General Assembly.]

"If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." John 13: 17.

I want to speak to you to-day about the religion of Christ in its relation to happiness. This is only one of the aspects of Christianity. But it is not necessary that every sermon should embrace a complete system of theology. The preacher takes the whole heavens of astronomy for granted, while he shapes his course by a single star.

In the wish for happiness, all men are strangely alike. In their views of it, and their ways of seeking it, they are singularly different. If we acknowledge Christ as our Master and Lord, there are two questions that we must ask of Him. First, is it right to wish to be happy? Second, what are the chief conditions on which the fulfillment of that wish depends?

KNOWLEDGE NECESSARY TO HAPPINESS.

(1) "If ye know"—there is, then, a certain kind of knowledge without which we cannot be happy. There are questions arising in human nature which demand an answer. If the answer is denied, we cannot help being disappointed, restless and sad. This is the price we have to pay for being rational creatures. If we were mere plants or animals, we might go on living through our appointed years in complete indifference to the origin and meaning of our existence. But within us as human beings, there is something that cries out and rebels against such a blind life. Man is born to ask what things mean. He is possessed with the idea that there is a significance in the world beyond that which meets his senses.

John Fiske has brought out this fact very clearly in his last book, "Through Nature to God." He shows that in the morning twilight of existence, "the human soul vaguely reached forth towards something akin to itself, not in the realm of fleeting phenomena, but in the Eternal Presence beyond." He argues by the analogy of evolution, which always pre-supposes a real relation between the life and the environment to which it adjusts itself, that this forth-reaching and unfolding of the soul implies "the everlasting reality of religion."

The argument is good. But the point which concerns us now is simply this: The forth-reaching, questioning soul can never be satisfied, if it touches only a dead wall in the darkness, if its seeking meets with the reply, "You do not know, and you never can know, and you must not try to know." This is Agnosticism. It is only another way of spelling unhappiness.

"Since Christianity is not true," wrote Ernest Renan, "nothing interests me, or appears worthy of my attention." That is the logical result of losing the knowledge of spiritual things—a life without real interest; without deep worth, a life with a broken spring. But suppose Renan is mistaken. Suppose Christianity is true. Why, then, the first thing that makes it precious, is that it answers our questions and tells us what we must know in order to be happy.

DOCTRINAL TEACHING NECESSARY.

Christianity is a revealing religion, a teaching religion, a religion which conveys to the inquiring spirit certain positive solutions of the problems of life. It is not silent, nor ambiguous, nor incomprehensible in its utterance. It replies to our questions with a knowledge which, though limited, is definite and sufficient. It tells us that this "order of nature, which constitutes the world's experience, is only one portion of the total universe." That the ruler of both worlds, seen and unseen, is God, a Spirit, and the Father of our spirits." That He is not distant from us nor indifferent to us, but has given His eternal Son

Jesus Christ to be our Saviour. That His Spirit is ever present with us to help us in our conflicts with evil, in our efforts towards goodness. That He is making all things work together for good to them that love Him. That through the sacrifice of Christ, every one who will may obtain the forgiveness of sins and everlasting peace. That through the resurrection of Christ all who love Him and their fellow men shall obtain the victory over death and live forever.

Now these are doctrines. And it is just because Christianity contains such doctrines that it satisfies the need of man.

"The first and most essential condition of true happiness," writes Professor Carl Hilty, the eminent Swiss jurist, in his recent book, called "Happiness," "is a firm faith in the moral order of the world. What is the happy life? It is a life of conscious harmony with this divine order of the world, a sense, that is to say, of God's companionship. And wherein is the profoundest unhappiness? It is the sense of remoteness from God, issuing into incurable restlessness of heart, and finally into incapacity to make one's life fruitful or effective."

Let us never imagine, my brethren, that we can strengthen Christianity by leaving out the great doctrines which have given it joy and power. Faith is not a mere matter of feeling. It is the acceptance of truth, positive, unchanging, revealed truth, in regard to God and the world, Christ and the soul, duty and immortality. The first appeal to faith lies in the clearness and vividness, the simplicity and joy with which this truth is presented. There has not been too much preaching of doctrine in this age. There has been too little. And what there has been, has been too dull and cold and formal, too vague and misty, too wavering and uncertain.

DOCTRINE MUST BE VITALIZED.

What the world wants and waits for to-day is a strong, true, vital preaching of doctrine. The Church must realize anew the precious value of the truths which Christ has given her. She must not conceal them or cast them away; she must bring them out into the light, press them home upon the minds and hearts of men. She must simplify her statements of them, so that men can understand what they mean. She must not be content with repeating them in the language of past centuries. She must translate them into the language of to-day. First century texts will never wear out because they are inspired. But seventeenth century sermons have worn out because they are not inspired. Texts from the Word of God, preaching in the words of living men—that is what we need.

We must think about the doctrines of Christianity more earnestly and profoundly. We must renew our Christian evidences, as an army fits itself with new weapons. The old-fashioned form of the "argument from design in nature" has gone out with the old-fashioned books of science which it used. But there is a new and more wonderful proof of God's presence in the world—the argument from moral ends in evolution. Every real advance of science makes the intelligent order of the universe more sublimely clear. Every century of human experience confirms the divine claims and adds to the divine triumphs of Jesus Christ. Social progress has followed to a hair's breadth the lines of His gospel; and He lays His hand to-day with heavenly wisdom on the social wants that still trouble us, "the social lies that warp us from the living truth." Christ's views of life and the world is as full of sweet reasonableness now as it was in the first century. Every moral step that man has taken upward has brought a wider, clearer vision of his need of such a religion as that which Christ teaches.

I will not admit that it makes no difference to a man of this age whether or not he believes in the personal God and the Divine Christ. If he really believes, it makes all the difference between spiritual strength and spiritual weakness, between optimism and pessimism. I will not admit that it makes no difference to a learned scholar, or a simple laborer to-day, whether he accepts or ignores the doctrine of the atonement, the doctrine of personal immortality. If he knows that Christ died for him, that there is a future beyond the grave, it makes all the difference between despair and hope, between misery and consolation, between the helpless frailty of a being that is puffed out like a candle, and the joyful power of an endless life.

RELATIONS OF KNOWING AND DOING.

(2) Here is the second "if," on which the power of religion to confer happiness depends. "If ye know, happy are ye, if ye do these things."

Between the knowing and the doing there is a deep gulf. Into that abyss the happiness of many a man slips, and is lost. There is no peace, no real and lasting felicity for a human life until the gulf is closed, and the continent of conduct meets the continent of creed, edge to edge, lip to lip, firmly joined forever.

It is not a blessing to know the things that Christ teaches and then go on living as if they were false and doubtful. It is a trouble, a torment, a secret misery. To know that God is our Father, and yet to withhold our love and service from Him; to know that Christ died for us, and yet to deny Him and refuse to follow Him; to know that there is an immortal life, and yet to waste and lose our souls in the pursuit of sensual pleasure and such small portion of the world as we may hope to gain—surely that is the deepest of all unhappiness.

DOING LEADS TO HAPPIER KNOWING.

But the right kind of knowing carries in its heart the doing of the truth. And the right kind of doing leads to a fuller and happier knowing. "If any man will do God's will," said Christ, "he shall know of the doctrine." Let a man take the truth of the Divine Fatherhood and begin to conform his life to its meaning. Let him give up his anxious worryings, his murmurings, his complainings, and trust himself completely to his Father's care. Let him do his work from day to day as well as he can and leave the results to God. Let him come to his Father every day and confess his faults and ask for help and guidance. Let him try to obey and please God for love's sake. Let him take refuge from the trials and confusions and misunderstandings of the world, from the wrath of man and the strife of tongues, in the secret of His Father's presence. Surely if he learns the truth thus by doing it, he will find happiness.

THE DUTY OF THE CHURCH TO LABOR IN LOVE.

What then is the duty of the Church? What must she do to win the confidence of the world? What is the best way for her to "prove her doctrine all divine"?

First, she must increase her labors in the love of men; second, she must practice the simple life in the trust of God.

Suppose that a fresh flow of energy, brave, cheerful, joyous, should be poured into all the forms of Christian work. Suppose that Foreign Missions and Home Missions should no longer have to plead and beg for support, but that plenty of money should come flowing in to send out every missionary that wants to go, and that plenty of the strongest and best young men should dedicate their lives to the ministry of Christ, and that every household where His gospel is believed should find its highest honor and its greatest joy in helping to extend His kingdom.

And then suppose that the Christian life, in its daily manifestation, should come to be marked and known by simplicity and happiness. Suppose that the followers of Jesus should really escape from bondage to the evil spirits of avarice and luxury which infect and torment so much of our complicated, tangled, artificial, modern life. Suppose that instead of increasing their wants and their desires; instead of loading themselves down on life's journey with so many bags and parcels and boxes of superfluous luggage and bric-a-brac, that they are forced to sit down by the roadside and gasp for breath; instead of wearing themselves out in the dusty ways of competition and vain show, or embittering their hearts because they cannot succeed in getting into the weary race of wealth and fashion—suppose instead of all this, they should turn to quiet ways, lowly pleasures, pure and simple joys, "plain living and high thinking." Suppose they should truly find and clearly show their happiness in the knowledge that God loves them and Christ died for them and heaven is sure, and so set their hearts free to rejoice in life's common mercies, the light of the sun, the blue of the sky, the splendor of the sea, the peace of the everlasting hills, the song of the birds, the sweetness of flowers, the wholesome savor of good food, the delight of action and motion, the refreshment of sleep, the charm of music, the blessings of human love and friendship—rejoice in all these without fear or misgiving, because they come from God and because Christ has sanctified them all by His presence and touch.

Suppose, I say, that such a revival of the joy of living in Christ and working for Christ should silently sweep over the Church in the twentieth century. What would happen? Great would be the peace of her children. Greater still would be their power.

A MESSAGE FOR THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL.

This is the message which I have to bring to you, my brethren, in this General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. You may wonder that it is not more distinctive, more ecclesiastical, more specially adapted to the peculiarities of our denomination. You may think and say that it is "a message which could just as well be brought to any other Church on any other occasion." With all my heart I hope that this is true. The things that I care for most in our Church are not those which divide us from other Christians, but those which unite us to them. The things that I love most in Christianity are those things which give it power to save and satisfy, to console and cheer, to inspire and bless human hearts and lives. The thing that I desire most for Presbyterianism is that it should prove its mission and extend its influence in the world by making men happy in the knowing and doing of the things which Christ teaches.

The Church that the twentieth century will hear most gladly and honor most sincerely, will have two marks. It will be the Church that preaches the central truth of Christianity most clearly, strongly and joyfully. It will be the Church that finds and shows most happiness in living the simple life and doing good in the world. May that Church be ours.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

BY JOSHUA ROWNTREE.

Another yearly meeting of the Society of Friends has been added to its long series, reaching farther back into English history without a break than the annual gatherings of any other religious body now held in the country. Certainly age has brought no apparent lack of zeal for serious and protracted work. The notice card for the sittings of 1903 announced upwards of 80 meetings, conferences or committees, all to be held on the premises during the 11 days of the session. How many more were actually held it would be difficult for any one to say. The minutes and reports printed in advance for the use of the yearly meeting made up a bulky pamphlet of 134 pages.

The number of meetings in England and Scotland is now 369, the same as last year. The number of members is 17,617, an increase of 141. The number of habitual attenders is 7,767, an increase of 120. The number of recorded ministers is 375, being 6 more than last year. The number of Friends engaged in foreign mission work has now grown to 116. The number of scholars in the Friends' First-day Schools has increased during the year by several thousands, 1,500 of these representing the growth of the junior schools. The membership of the adult schools taught by Friends is more than twice as large as the whole membership of the Society.

Satisfactory reports of good work accomplished were also made to the yearly meeting by the Friends' Tract Society and the Friends' Temperance Union.

The yearly meeting was well attended. Most of the sittings were joint sittings of men and women Friends.

Amongst the visitors cordially welcomed were William and Susan T. Thompson and Ruth Murray, of New England; Charles and May N. Replogle, of Alaska, and Dr. Elisha and Virginia H. Blackburn, and Adelaide T. Hole, of Ohio.

The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight addressed itself especially to the need for spiritual efficiency in our Meetings for Worship, feeling afresh the grave importance of our making "the priesthood of all believers" a practical reality. The subject took deep hold of the meeting, and it was decided to carry the matter to the yearly meeting. Both at the beginning and close of the sittings touching reference was made to the loving labors of our late dear friend, Harriet Green.

Three matters of primary importance came before this yearly meeting.

First, the proposal to shorten the yearly meetings of the future, so as to compress them within one week, in the hope that thereby more Friends engaged in business may be able to attend; and along with this a proposal to hold the yearly meeting in 1905 in the provinces instead of in London. These proposals were both agreed to, the latter on the condition that an invitation offering suitable accommodation was received in time to allow of all needful arrangements from some quarterly meeting. Considerable doubt was felt as to the desirability of moving the yearly meeting from the capital, where it has so long been held, but Friends yielded to the strong desire to try experimentally if the holding of these large annual gatherings might not be found to tell more powerfully for the spread of the Truth in some populous provincial center than they can do in the eastern part of the metropolis.

The second subject which took firm hold of the meeting was that of the ministry. The need for more spiritual power, for more dedication on the part of the young, for a better understanding as to the practice of recording ministers. It was decided that a large representative conference, to consider these questions more carefully, should be held during the ensuing autumn.

The third subject to claim close attention, with a view to further action, was that of the enrollment of children on the lists of members. The numbers now entered as birthright members are much fewer than they were of old. Various causes contribute to this, but chiefly the number of families where one parent only is a Friend in actual membership. It was decided to refer the whole subject to the Meeting for Sufferings to make further inquiries as to the facts and to report if possible to the next yearly meeting.

All the sittings of the yearly meeting were characterized by that unity of spirit which is too large to begrudge differences of mind and varieties of thought. It was felt, and at least on one occasion expressed, that the flowings of life throughout the body must ever require more watchful solicitude than the inertness of decrepitude or death, but that the very need for this solicitude was in itself a cause for thankfulness and a sign of growth.

Perhaps the most noticeable trait, at any rate after that of the harmony which hung as a canopy over the assembly, was its open-mindedness. This must have a weak side if it stops short with the proving of all things, but if it is only attendant on the deep-rooted desire to hold fast the things which are good it is a necessary ingredient of gospel freedom, an attribute that must be cherished if the followers of Christ address themselves fearlessly to His service and seek to enter into a large place for the advancement of His kingdom.

An attender of London Yearly Meeting could see no occasion whatever for any boasting. On the contrary, when Friends consider their heritage, and ponder on the condition of the world around them, he would rather lament our "leanness," our timidity, our little faith, our few signs of manifest Divine power. And yet there is great room for hope that better is yet to be. There are so many quietly-seeking souls who know in whom they have believed, and who are waiting for and expecting new manifestations of God's will concerning our section of the Church of Christ. The prayer assuredly ascends from many hearts, "Help Thy servants whom Thou hast redeemed with Thine own precious blood," and as it ascends in singleness and in sincerity the answer will assuredly come in increased power even day by day to magnify Him who has called and appointed His servants that they should bring forth much fruit.

Some Views on Present Topics.

A QUALIFICATION FOR SUCCESSFUL LEADERSHIP.

BY ANNA MAY PEMBERTON.

Sincere humility is the primary element of greatness. Self-assertion ruins more people in public work than perhaps any other one thing. How many a public speaker has been weakened and his work brought to naught by a domineering, over-towering self-assertion. Men that are in the contest for distinction, or a high place, will find defeat, while the humble followers of truth will carry off the palms of victory.

When a reporter on the Chicago "Tribune," in 1860, came to Abraham Lincoln, after his nomination for the Presidency, seeking information, so that he might write a campaign biography of him, Lincoln said: "It is a great piece of folly to attempt to make anything out of me or my early life. It can all be condensed into a single sentence, and that sentence you will find in Gray's Elegy:

"The short and simple annals of the poor."

"That is my life, and that is all you or any one else can make out of it."

The most beautiful traits of character in Abraham Lincoln were his humility and his courtesy to other people. James Russell Lowell fittingly pays tribute to these traits of character in him, in the "Commemoration Ode":

"How beautiful to see
Once more a shepherd of mankind, indeed,
Who loved his charge, but never loved to lead;
One whose meek flock the people joyed to be,
Not lured by any cheat of birth,
But by his clear-grained human worth,
And brave old wisdom of sincerity."

There was room by the side of Abraham Lincoln for every true lover of liberty; and he was ever open for suggestions from the people.

The man that is interested in reform, or the spread of Christianity, finds his life in the principles he has set out to advocate. He has no time to be thinking, "What impression shall I make?" He faithfully follows the path of duty and feels the value of every other person that has taken up the cause. With him there is no desire for monopoly; nor does he feel that everything that is done must be done under his dictation. There is no crowding out of kindred spirits, saying by his manner, "This is my work." By his side there is room for every one that has the cause at heart. He sees in others like aspirations to his own and feels the value of every one of them. He does not care to have others look upon him as a leader; but if he be a leader, it is fortunate for those that work with him, for all are on a common level.

It is not an evidence of strength for a minister to make other people feel that they cannot work with him; it is rather an element of weakness. One of the greatest hindrances to Christian work is the failure to recognize the ability of other people working toward the same end; but it is probably more often the result of ignorance than of real selfishness.

THE RESCUE.

BY EVELYN WHITE.

A Shepherd journeyed o'er the hills
And in the valleys bare;
A sheep had wandered from the fold;
He could not find it there.
So many sheep the Shepherd had,
And stronger and more fair,
You would not think the loss of one
Would cause Him so much care.

He thought of crags and rugged hills,
Of barren pastures sere,
The lack of running water-brooks,
Of dangers dark and drear,
And how the sheep so feeble grown Without a Shepherd's care,
Might lose its way forevermore
And die in dark despair.

The sheep had lonely grown and sore,
While seeking its own way.
It missed the loving Shepherd's care,
His voice was far away.
With thirst and hunger, new and keen,
It cried in great dismay.
It sank upon the cold, bare earth,
And suffering there, it lay.

With tenderness the Shepherd kind,
In mercy found it there.
He raised it up in His strong arms
And to His bosom, where,
In sweet relief and thankfulness,
Restored, it nestled there.
In pastures green, by waters still,
It lives in His good care.

This Shepherd was the Saviour dear
Of God's lost flock on earth.
To everyone, when lost in sin,
When in whose life is dearth
Of peaceful rest and happiness,
He comes and gives new birth
To that poor, seeking sinner's soul,
Who lives anew on earth.

The International Lesson.

SECOND QUARTER.

LESSON XIII.

SIXTH MONTH 28, 1903.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom. 2 Tim. 4: 18.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Sixth mo. 22.—Farewell to Ephesus. Acts 20: 28-38.
Third-day, Sixth mo. 23.—Journey to Jerusalem. Acts 21: 1-16.
Fourth-day, Sixth mo. 24.—Paul arrested. Acts 21: 30-39.
Fifth-day, Sixth mo. 25.—The plot. Acts 23: 12-32.
Sixth-day, Sixth mo. 26.—Paul before rulers. Acts 24: 10-26; 26: 19-29.
Seventh-day, Sixth mo. 27.—Journey to Rome. Acts 27.
First-day, Sixth mo. 28.—At Rome. Acts 28: 16-31.

The lessons of this quarter give the only account we have in the Bible of the last years of Paul's life. It is generally believed that after about two years he was released, and that then he made a fourth missionary journey through Macedonia, and probably Asia Minor, and possibly Spain. He was probably seized in Asia Minor, taken to Rome, condemned and executed on the Ostian Way, near Rome, some time between A.D. 65 and 68. The letter to Timothy, known as 2 Timothy, appears to have been written during his second imprisonment.

The lessons, it has been pointed out, fall into several groups. The first three give in brief the substance of Paul's doctrinal teachings. In the farewell to Ephesus, and the Law of Love, he dwells on the true law of Christian love as exemplified in the Lord Jesus Christ, "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." He also referred to his own practice.

In the Resurrection he states the importance of this great fact in the Christian economy, and shows how a belief in the resurrection is essential to a full belief in the Divinity of Christ.

In the next group of lessons (4-8) there is an account of God's dealings with the great Apostle. Trials, obstacles, dangers, threatening of death itself beset him, yet he is able to bear them all and to come out more than conqueror through Him who loved him.

Lesson 9—"The Life-Giving Spirit"—gives the key to Paul's success, that life of spiritual power in Christ Jesus which made him free from "the law of sin and of death," and enabled him to make the righteousness, which is the law, perfect, because he walked "not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." He here lays down the great definition of what it means to be "sons of God." "As many," he says, "as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

In lessons 10 and 11 we have graphic pictures of Paul, his attitude and actions in times of danger, and his readiness and efforts to spread the gospel at all times. In his charge to Timothy we have good advice given by a veteran in the service, and the farewell statement of one who, conscious of his own humility and trust, with no feelings of self-praise, could yet speak of his past and of his future with holy confidence. And not of his only, but "of all them also that love Christ's appearing."

"The close of Paul's life, like that of all the apostles except James, is almost entirely hidden from us." But though the close "is veiled from our eyes, no cloud dims, or ever can dim, the splendor of the services of that life for God and for humanity."

TOPIC FOR SIXTH MONTH TWENTY-EIGHTH.

CHRIST IN OUR CITIES.

Acts 18: 1-11; Luke 19: 41-44; Matt. 11: 23, 24. (City Missions.)

Second-day, Sixth mo. 22.—Early city missions. Luke 10: 3-11.

Third-day, Sixth mo. 23.—Danger of wicked rulers. Prov. 29: 6-8.

Fourth-day, Sixth mo. 24.—Intemperate rulers. Prov. 31: 4, 5.

Fifth-day, Sixth mo. 25.—Danger of demagogues. 2 Sam. 15: 2-6.

Sixth-day, Sixth mo. 26.—The gospel in wicked cities. Jonah 3: 1-10.

Seventh-day, Sixth mo. 27.—Purifying a city. Acts 19: 8-19.

To reach the people with the gospel is the end of all missionary effort. Problems vary with conditions. In the country families sometimes live miles from any place of worship, while in the city the distance may be but a few squares, and the actual remoteness be hardly less. It is not enough that they could hear the gospel preached; it must be put in their way. Then there is the constant shifting of city population, moving from one tenement to another, or going from squalor to improved conditions as the benefit of missionary effort is realized. In the latter case, the necessity for work is not at an end, for there is a large class of respectable and thrifty people, as well as many wealthy, who need to be absolutely confronted with the truths of Christianity in such a way that they cannot help thinking about them.

By most of those whose early life was spent in the country, the isolation and exclusiveness possible for the individual in the city are probably first realized with surprise. How to get at those who hold themselves aloof from the ordinary opportunities is the great difficulty. Down-town churches, mission halls, street preaching, rescue work and house-to-house visitation are some of the instrumentalities used. Most churches prefer to give way to the encroachments of business and tenement houses and remove to the resident sections of the better-to-do, sometimes leaving large areas without the haven of refuge that a church building ought to afford, not for a few hours in the week, but for most or all of every day.

In this city, as in many others, there are halls opening from some of its principal thoroughfares, and lighted, comfortably seated, with music, singing, and the spoken gospel every night—often with preliminary services at an adjacent street corner, so that even the most casual passer-by is constrained to hear some message of the love of God. It is claimed that here the first gospel wagon was put into operation, by which a band of speakers, singers, and an organ are carried from one part of the city to another, two or three services being held in one evening, attracting the attention of many who are not at all accustomed to attending church.

Flower missions, medical missionary work, and even that which is practically foreign missionary work in many senses, may be undertaken in quarters where the need is imperative, even within the sound of church bells and the shadow of hospitals. The work needs to be systematized so as to offer every opportunity of success and permanent reformation to those once reached. Industrial establishments and colonies will answer for some, but for the most there must be the open door in the usual local employments of the community. Every one can lend a hand, if not in one way then in another. Much has been done to reach the needs of cities, but it is not enough. "If Christianity fails in the city, it fails everywhere. The world has no use for a religion that fails at the most important point, and that is the city. The city is like a heart, pumping poison through the entire system. It must be cleansed, or the whole body will perish."

BRITISH FRIENDS' MISSIONARY WORK.

The British Friends' Foreign Missionary Association closed their thirty-sixth year with 1902. Their work in India suffered a great loss during the year in the death of Alice Sophia Wood, who was killed in a carriage accident Third month 4th. The missionary staff was further reduced by the retirement of Ernest and Sarah R. Munnings, who labored for nearly three years in Syria, but who were missionaries of the association for twelve and thirteen years respectively, the earlier years of their service having been spent in India.

Ten new missionaries were sent out to different fields during the year, the largest accession being to the Madagascar Mission, which received two men and three women missionaries. The India Mission also was strengthened by the addition of one man and two women. Syria and Ceylon each received one missionary, both women. The total number of missionaries now in the field is ninety-four, of whom only thirty-five are men. This does not seem to be a satisfactory proportion, and in India especially, the fewness of the men missionaries is a serious loss to the work of the mission.

Substantial work was done in the different mission fields in India, Madagascar, Syria, China and Ceylon, though from various causes aggressive evangelization could not be carried to the extent which the association desired that it should. Their total expenditures aggregated $136,932.19, with a shortage of $34,065.50.

The annual report concludes with the following statement and appeal: "A large part of this review of the year's work has been necessarily occupied with the financial aspect of the work. We do not, however, want so to present the facts as to make it appear that our chief need is money. We believe that the shortness of funds is the sign of deeper needs, the need especially of the conviction expressed in the words, 'We have heard Him ourselves and know that this is indeed the Saviour of the world,' with the resulting conviction that we who have heard and believed should recognize and pay our debt to those who have not had the opportunity of knowing Christ."

"The Fourth Decennial Indian Missionary Conference was held in Madras in Twelfth month of last year. That Conference issued an appeal to the home churches which in all its essential features may be taken as the appeal of missionaries in all heathen and Mohammedan lands, an appeal to which it behooves us to listen. The missionaries, after stating the progress made by Christianity among the peoples of India, speak of the deplorable inadequacy of the whole body of foreign and native missionaries for the work of evangelization. The vast majority of India's villages cannot be regularly visited by Christian preachers. The appeal continues:

"We fully recognize that the greatest part of this work of district evangelization must be done, not by foreigners, but by members of the Indian Christian Church. But to train these Indian Christian workers and to supervise and direct their work, there will for many years to come be required a considerable number of foreign missionaries. It is thought to be anything but an extravagant estimate of the needs of the country if we ask that there be one male and one female missionary for every 50,000 of the population, and this would mean the quadrupling of our present numbers.

"But we further affirm that the mere placing of a clear and intelligible statement of the gospel message before every inhabitant would be a very inadequate fulfillment of our duty. The messengers of the churches have to use the influences of the Divine Spirit to remove the prejudices of ages, to overcome aversion, indifference and inertia, to arrest attention, to win affection for Christ by beneficent deeds, and to impart new ideals of life by unselfish and saintly lives. They have to study with sympathy blended with discrimination, hoary philosophies maintained by men of subtle intellect; they have to bridge great social gulfs, and weld into Christian brotherhood classes that have for millenniums stood apart; they have to adapt the experiences of the West to the circumstances of the East, and to devise careful schemes for meeting the new needs of rapidly-changing times; in short, to bring the spirit of Christ into touch with every part of the personal and domestic and social and political life of the people.

"As there is need of a large diversity of gifts, we appeal to those of the most highly-cultivated classes of our native lands, who have consecrated their lives to the obedience of Christ, to consider whether there is not a call to many of them to dedicate their talents, which are largely the heritage of seventeen centuries of Christian privilege and enlightenment, to the uplifting of their brothers and sisters in foreign lands, who have had fewer advantages."

Correspondence.

TO THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

I am anxious to obtain the names and addresses of any Friends who have removed from the United States to Western Canada, or of any who contemplate doing so in the near future. If you would be kind enough to publish a notice, asking that any one possessed of such information will please forward it to my address not later than the 15th of Seventh month it would oblige me very much. Our object is to find out if there are other places where meetings could possibly be opened in the West, and also to get a sufficient number of Friends from different parts to locate near enough to each other to make a strong center for Friends' work in the Northwest Territories. We already have a work in Manitoba, but none further west, except a small company of Friends, who I think meet regularly at Victoria, B. C.

Yours truly,

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

DEAR EDITOR:—I think THE AMERICAN FRIEND is well worthy the support of all Friends. Thou hast never written a better article to my liking than "The Theory and Practice of Public Worship." I think I will read it in our meeting next Sabbath morning. It is truly inspiring to every reflective and truth-loving mind.

DEAR EDITOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND:—Your articles are a real spiritual uplift.

WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Wyncote, Penna.

Lizzie Kirk, an active worker of the Y. W. C. A. of Pacific College, Newberg, Oregon, attended the Y. W. C. A. Conference at Capitola, Cal., the latter part of Fifth month.

Prof. J. W. Woody gave a second lecture on Jerusalem and other places visited in his recent trip to Bible lands, in New Garden Meeting House, at Guilford College, on the evening of the 7th inst.

Nixon and Louisa Rush, ministers from Fairmount, Ind., were at Newberg and Springbrook, Oregon, Fifth month 27th to Sixth month 3d. Their presence and gospel services were cheering and edifying.

The commencement exercises of the Oakwood Seminary, Union Springs, N. Y., will be held on the evening of the 19th inst. The address of the evening will be given by J. Ellwood Paige, clerk of New England Yearly Meeting.

Minnie Bassett, who has acceptably served in Spiceland Meeting, Ind., for over two years, will leave the work after Seventh month 26th. She expects to have some time for rest before entering upon other work the coming year.

One of the main reasons urged for holding London Yearly Meeting in a provincial city is that its influence may be felt on the general public more than is possible when it occurs in such a great city as London, where only the restaurants seem aware of the gathering of Friends.

It has been computed that the premises of Devonshire Meeting House will accommodate 2,500 persons under cover. The large meeting room will accommodate a thousand persons. There are two other meeting rooms, a large library room, and fifteen good committee rooms.

Rufus M. Jones attended the inauguration of President Robert L. Kelly of Earlham College, as representative of the Haverford faculty. On his return home he found his son stricken down with diphtheria and the house under quarantine. The case has favorably responded to treatment, and the outlook is at present very encouraging.

Phoebe R. Gifford, a minister of New England Yearly Meeting, Providence, R. I., passed her one hundredth anniversary on the 10th instant. She was made happy on that occasion by a joyful reception and the gift of many tokens of remembrance. The children from two Bible Schools visited her and recited together the 100th Psalm.

William J. Sayers, a converted Roman Catholic, who has been located in the meeting at Lewiston, Me., for the past nine months, spoke to a large and appreciative congregation on First-day evening, the 7th instant. His subject was "A Big Jump from Romanism to Quakerism." Interesting and pathetic incidents, mingled with sound teaching, made the talk a very helpful one.

Yonge Street Quarterly Meeting, held at Toronto City, Can., the 30th and 31st ult., was well attended. Besides the resident ministers, Rufus Garratt, a returned missionary from South America, with his companion, friend Peckham, from Cleveland, Ohio, were present. Their services were edifying and helpful. Rufus Garratt gave a very instructive address on missionary work in South America.

The young people of the newly-organized Endeavor Society of Friends' Monthly Meeting, Gibara, Cuba, were impressed with a concern to observe the 20th of Fifth month, the Cuban "Independence Day," in a more Christian way than by dances and races, as is the custom. Entirely by their own efforts they collected over $7.00, which, on the afternoon of the 20th was distributed among the aged and sick, twelve families being visited. Short religious services were held at each place. It was hard to tell who were made more happy, the needy ones or the young people.

A. Edward Kelsey has most efficiently and successfully served in the meetings at Winthrop and Winthrop Center, Me., during the last four years. The meetings are united in the feeling that he should continue with them another year, and have perfected arrangements to that end. The members of both meetings met at Winthrop Center on the evening of Sixth month 6th, and after an hour or more spent socially and very pleasantly, they were called together by C. Irving Bailey, who acted, by appointment, as "moderator," and plans were discussed for renewed religious effort during the coming year. Both meetings are in a flourishing condition, many members being active not only in church work, but also in other lines of philanthropy.

Deep River Quarterly Meeting was held at Deep River, N. C., on the 6th inst. Thomas Newlin preached on worshipping spiritually as against worshipping formally. Being the last quarterly meeting before yearly meeting, the session was protracted on account of reports of the year's work, and being the first year's operation under the Uniform Discipline, clerks and others were not prepared to expedite business. The greatest harmony was manifest. Rufus P. King received a minute for service in North Carolina and Baltimore Yearly Meetings. Some use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage from one monthly meeting was reported; also considerable use of tobacco from all the meetings. It was decided to hold a conference for the quarterly meeting at High Point the 4th of Seventh month for the membership on doctrinal tenets. The meeting appointed a Friend to bear the love and sympathy of the meeting to three beloved members who are sick.

Bangor Quarterly Meeting was held at Bangor, Ia., the 22d to 24th ult. After the business meeting of ministry and oversight E. R. Purdy read a carefully prepared paper on "How to Get Committees to Work." A discussion followed of much interest. In the evening J. W. Hadley, of Le Grand, Ia., gave a very touching address on missionary work. On Seventh-day John F. Hanson and Ellison R. Purdy preached to the edification of all. In the evening E. P. Ellyson gave a stirring Sunday School address. On First-day, at 10 a.m., J. L. Beane, followed by John F. Hanson, preached to a very large congregation. Many could not get into the meeting house. At 2.30 p.m. J. F. Hanson spoke on peace and emphasized the importance of instruction on this line. In the evening Harry Hayes preached. W. M. Peckham, evangelistic superintendent, was present at all the services and took a prominent part.

COMMENCEMENT AT HAVERFORD.

The commencement exercises at Haverford College were held the 12th instant in Roberts Hall, the new building erected this year in memory of the late Charles Roberts, and at their conclusion dinner was served in the gymnasium.

In his introductory remarks President Sharpless outlined the changes, material and intellectual, which had taken place during the year. He commended the interest taken in the young men under them by the instructors, as well in athletics as in moral and intellectual matters. He continued:

"If professors have in them plenty of warm blood and interest enough to understand the games which their students play, so that they can talk them over intelligently and sympathetically, it will be surprising how soon this troublesome question of athletics will be solved. I have no wish to turn our educational institutions into country clubs, but I do not believe that our high ideals of scholarship or morals will suffer with any reasonable equipment for the gratification of the sporting instinct, provided the games and the studies are not arrayed against each other in hostile camps, but rather are parts of one general system in which there is co-operation and confidence."

The degree of Bachelor of Arts was conferred upon sixteen young men, and the degree of Bachelor of Science on six, making twenty-two in all. Three received the Master of Arts degree.

Parker Shortridge Williams made the class address, which was very practical. He especially emphasized the political obligation of an educated young man. After stating the popular conception of the political situation, he said:

"The reason for the conditions which these people deplore is that the business men, the honest, respectable citizens, who congratulate themselves on their high ideals, who offer thanks that they are not as other men are, have neglected their duty. They have been so busy enjoying themselves or trying to get rich that local government and State government and Federal government have gotten into the hands of those who have selected that as their business, their method of getting rich. I don't refer to all the men who hold offices, but to the 'bosses' who control so many localities, cities and States to their own personal and pecuniary advantage. But the man who sits at home and discourses upon how things ought to be knows little of actualities. What, with the erroneous impressions he so often gets from newspapers and the frequent demonstrations of wilfully or ignorantly misdirected zeal on the part of so-called reformers, he cannot estimate correctly conditions or possibilities of improvement, as to which he has no personal knowledge. And this neglect of personal knowledge and personal effort intelligently directed is the root of the evil."

THE REAL CRANK Is Plainly Marked.

A crank is one who stays in beaten paths when common sense tells him to leave.

The real crank is one who persists in using coffee because accustomed to and yet knows it hurts him. It is this one who always pays the penalty, while the sensible person who gives up coffee and takes on Postum Food Coffee in its place enjoys all the benefits of returning health.

A well-known manufacturer's agent, of New York City, visited the grocery department of one of the big New York stores not long ago, and there he tasted a sample cup of Postum made the right way. He said afterwards, "Just through the energy of that young woman who was serving Postum there I became a convert to the food drink, and gave up the drug drink coffee and got well."

"I had used coffee to excess and was gradually becoming a complete wreck, getting weaker and more nervous every day. I paid the penalty for using coffee, and when I tasted the delicious Postum I was glad indeed to make the change."

"So I gave up the coffee altogether, and have used Postum instead ever since. My family at first called me a crank, but seeing how Postum benefited me the first month they all got in line, and as a result of Postum's remarkable benefits to me we all drink it now entirely in place of coffee and we are well." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The New York Central Railroad is preparing to test the worth of beech, birch and maple woods as track ties. The company now uses Southern hard pine, but it has to be brought from far away, the supply is becoming low and it is proving too expensive. Trial will accordingly be made of these woods found in abundance near the line of the road. The plan is to season the birch, beech and maple ties and treat them to a preservative solution of some sort. It is believed that in this way a more durable tie can be obtained at less expense than the hard pine, which lasts about five years. If the experiment is a success, the company may buy Adirondack forest land and employ it on approved forestry principle, cutting away only trees of mature growth.

GENESIS UNKNOWN.

Grandpa Holley looked at his grandson with a mixture of amusement and reproach on his shrewd old face. It was dusk in the barn, a time for confidence.

"I dunno where in all the earth you got such notions, sonny," the old man said; "not from your ma's folks, or your pa's, either. There never was any talk o' belief in signs and superstitions in either the Holley or the Fawcett stock, that's sure. It must have come from that foreign lady they had to teach you, I expect."

"And you don't believe there's any harm in a bird's flying into the house, or breaking a mirror, or seeing a black cat, grandpa?" asked the little boy, earnestly. "And don't you care whether a pin sticks straight up in the floor, or which shoulder you see the moon over, or whether you get anything on you wrongside out? Not any of those things?"

"All foolishness," said the old man, with a reassuring pat of the hot little hand. "I'm glad ye've talked it out with me, sonny. Now you just put it out of your head, and I'll tell you what I'll do. When we go up to the house I'll give ye a little old penny I've been saving for ye for a lucky piece. You jest carry it in your pocket all the time—change it from one suit o' clothes to another—and see what 't 'll bring ye."

"Do they really bring luck, grandpa?" asked the little boy.

"Course they do," said the old gentleman, firmly. "When we get another spare time I'll relate to ye a few cases that's come under my own eye, of lives saved by 'em, and so forth. Course they do!"—"Youth's Companion."

NOTICE.

The commencement number of the "Earlhamite" is a very important issue. It is devoted chiefly to the inaugural ceremonies of President Robert L. Kelly, and contains the inaugural address in full, together with the addresses of the various university and college presidents and professors who took part. Among the speeches reported are those of Rufus M. Jones, Benjamin F. Trueblood and President A. Rosenberger. It is a document which every Friend should have. Send 15 cents in stamps to "The Secretary, Earlham College, Richmond, Ind."

LOW RATE TOUR TO DENVER.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account Christian Endeavor Convention.

For the benefit of delegates and others desiring to attend the Twenty-first International Biennial Convention of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, to be held at Denver, Col., July 9th to 13th, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will run a personally-conducted tour to Denver and return, leaving Philadelphia, Lancaster, Harrisburg, Altoona and Pittsburg and intermediate stations, Tuesday, July 7th, going via Chicago and arriving Denver, Thursday, July 9th. Returning, the tour will leave Denver, Thursday, July 16th, arriving Pittsburg, Philadelphia and intermediate stations, Saturday, July 18th. Special trains of the highest grade of Pullman equipment will be run on a fast schedule. Each train will be in charge of a tourist agent, chaperon, and special uniformed baggage master. Round-trip rate, covering transportation to Denver, Colorado Springs, or Pueblo and return, Pullman berth, and all necessary meals in dining car to and from Denver, will be as follows: Philadelphia, $71.25, two in one berth, $60.25 each; Lancaster, $69.85, two in one berth, $59.35 each; York, $67.50, two in one berth, $57.50 each; Harrisburg, $67.25, two in one berth, $57.25 each; Altoona, $64.50, two in one berth, $55.00 each; Pittsburg, $58.00, two in one berth, $49.50 each. Round-trip rate, covering all necessary expenses on going trip and railroad transportation only returning, on regular trains until August 31st, will be as follows: Philadelphia, $57.25, two in one berth, $51.75 each; Lancaster, $56.35, two in one berth, $51.10 each; York, $54.50, two in one berth, $49.50 each; Harrisburg, $54.25, two in one berth, $49.25 each; Altoona, $52.50, two in one berth, $47.75 each; Pittsburg, $47.50, two in one berth, $43.25 each. Proportionate rates from other points. Pullman accommodations and meals are included only while tourists are using special trains. Special side trips from Denver at reduced rates. For reservations of space, tickets, and full information, apply to nearest Pennsylvania Railroad Ticket Agent, or direct to George W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

INTERCOLLEGIATE REGATTA.

Reduced Rates to Highland-Poughkeepsie Course via Pennsylvania Railroad.

On account of the Intercollegiate Rowing Regatta over the Highland-Poughkeepsie course on the Hudson River, Friday, June 26th, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets to Highland or Poughkeepsie on June 25th and 26th, good to return until June 28th, inclusive, from Washington, D. C., and intermediate points to Philadelphia, inclusive, and all stations on the United Railroads of New Jersey Division and the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad, at rate of single fare for the round trip.

"Next Sunday evening, brethren," announced the minister, "I shall preach a sermon on 'Mount Ararat.'" And, after the services were over, Aunt Ann Peebles went forward to say good-by and wish him a pleasant voyage and safe return.—"Chicago Tribune."

Events and Comments.

In Kansas, where the disaster from recent flood was most severe, the estimated loss is $12,000,000.

An American was recently kidnaped by Chinese pirates while proceeding from Canton to Heungshan. Nine thousand dollars ransom is asked.

The Liberty Bell left Independence Hall on Sixth month 15, at 7.30 a.m., on its trip to Boston, where the relic will be a feature of the celebration of the one hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has been given permission to cut down about $100,000 worth of poles and wires, which the Western Union Telegraph Company has on the railroad company's right of way in Northern New Jersey, repeating what it did in Pennsylvania several weeks ago.

King Alexander of Servia and his queen Draga, together with a number of his advisers, were murdered in the royal palace at Belgrade last week. The tragedy was enacted by the soldiers, and was the result of a deep-laid plot. Prince Peter Karageorgovitch, the head of the rival house, has been declared king by the army, and this declaration will doubtless be confirmed by the Assembly, which has been called in compliance with the provision of a former constitution.

Howard Blackburn, who already has made two voyages across the Atlantic alone in small dories, started from Gloucester, Massachusetts, Sixth month 7th, in his 15-foot dory America in a third attempt to cross the ocean, with Havre as his objective point. His intention is to return via Gibraltar, Western Islands, Porto Rico and Cuba and exhibit his boat at the St. Louis Exposition. A large crowd on the wharves and craft in the harbor gave him a hearty send-off.

William Jessop, of Sheffield, England, head of the largest steel works in the world, announced his intention to recommend that his company found a branch in Canada. He believes that the steel industry in that country has a great future, and sees no reason why the plants at Sydney and the Soo could not prosper. Conditions, he contends, are the most favorable possible. His firm, he says, fears nothing from the Steel Trust, as that corporation comes into competition with them only in inferior grades. For their grades they still have to go to England.

Rules to be applied by the Department of Health to improve the supply and inspection of milk and meat in Philadelphia have been approved. All meat producing animals must be inspected by a veterinarian of the department before being killed, and all meat exposed for sale must bear the stamp of the Health Department. It is proposed to reduce the number of slaughter houses and increase the forces of milk and meat inspectors.

Plans for putting the new law in regard to barring adulterated food from entry at American ports into effect were taken up last week by Secretary Wilson and Dr. Wiley, the chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture. The committee of experts called to the aid of the department were at work for a fortnight making up a list of articles known to be subject to the law, and also of those which may properly be suspected of adulteration.

The big drydocks in process of construction of the League Island Navy Yard and at San Francisco are attracting the attention of Japanese engineers. Charles Schuster, who is superintending the operations at League Island for the Schofield Company, of Pittsburg, has received a visit from Dr. Genjivo Yamazaki, chief civil engineer for the Kawasaki Dockyard Company, at Kobe, Japan. The visitor's company has a contract to build a dockyard at Kobe under peculiarly difficult conditions.

The floods that are devastating large sections of the West and Southwest have engaged the attention of government officials who are in charge of the reclamation policy authorized by the recent irrigation law passed by Congress. It is likely that the scope of that policy will include the remedy, if possible, of the frequently recurring floods in the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys. Storage reservoirs not only at the headwaters of the large streams, but lower down, where extensive areas of rain drainage continually swell the water volume in the rivers, have been suggested as a means that would be effective.

The Enabling bill, which will be the charter of the new transcontinental Canadian Railroad, has passed through all committees of the Canadian Parliament. It provides for the organization of a separate company, to be known as the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Under this charter there will be built a line 3,860 miles long, reaching from Quebec to Port Simpson, on the Pacific Ocean, with several branches. The line will cost $75,000,000. It is asserted that the new route will provide the shortest line between London and the far East, and that it will also shorten the distance between many United States points and the far East.

The reported movement at Panama for a secession of the States of Panama and Cauca in case the Canal Treaty is not ratified by the Colombian Congress, and the formation of an independent republic, will be watched with deepest interest.

Under the present treaty "the rights and privileges granted to the United States by the terms of this convention shall not affect the sovereignty of the republic of Colombia over the territory within whose boundaries such rights and privileges are to be exercised." Thus the United States is bound to perpetuate the present government in Colombia, but if the people of Panama and Cauca should be powerful enough to prevent the ratification of the canal treaty and afterward to maintain their independence against the Colombian Government, then the entire situation in relation to the canal project would be changed.

In the section of organic preparations at the Chemical Congress held recently in Berlin, Professor Proskauer read a paper on the sterilization of drinking water with ozone and on an ozone water works, the German electricians having succeeded in producing at small cost a concentrated solution of ozone. Professor Proskauer, with Professors Ohlmuehler and Prall, of the Imperial Health Office, made exhaustive experiments with the solution in purifying water. The experiments included tests with water artificially impregnated with the deadliest disease germs, like typhus, cholera and dysentery. Such water was pumped through the so-called "ozonizing tower" and then rigidly analyzed. All the germs were found to be killed, whereas the ordinary method of sand filters left the germs living. Moreover, the water was greatly improved in quality through the increase of oxygen from the ozone.

NOT DRUGS.

Food Did It.

After using laxative and cathartic medicines from childhood a case of chronic and apparently incurable constipation yielded to the scientific food, Grape-Nuts, in a few days. "From early childhood I suffered with such terrible constipation that I had to use laxatives continuously, going from one drug to another, and suffering more or less all the time.

"A prominent physician whom I consulted told me the muscles of the digestive organs were partially paralyzed, and could not perform their work without help of some kind, so I have tried at different times about every laxative and cathartic known, but found no help that was at all permanent. I had finally become discouraged, and had given my case up as hopeless when I began to use the pre-digested food, Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had not expected this food to help my trouble, to my great surprise Grape-Nuts digested immediately from the first, and in a few days I was convinced that this was just what my system needed.

"The bowels performed their functions regularly, and I am now completely and permanently cured of this awful trouble.

"Truly, the power of scientific food must be unlimited." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There is a reason.

Healthful desserts are just as easy as the bad kind. For further particulars see the little recipe book in each package of Grape-Nuts.

A VALUABLE PUBLICATION.

The Pennsylvania Railroad 1903 Summer Excursion Route Book.

On June 1st the Passenger Department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company published the 1903 edition of the Summer Excursion Route Book. This work is designed to provide the public with descriptive notes of the principal summer resorts of Eastern America, with the best routes for reaching them, and the rates of fare. It contains all the principal seashore and mountain resorts of the East, and over seventeen hundred different routes or combinations of routes. The book has been compiled with the greatest care, and altogether is the most complete and comprehensive handbook of summer travel ever offered to the public.

The cover is handsome and striking, printed in colors, and the book contains several maps, presenting the exact routes over which tickets are sold. The book is profusely illustrated with fine half-tone cuts of scenery at the various resorts and along the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

On and after June 1st this very interesting book may be procured at any Pennsylvania Railroad ticket office at the nominal price of ten cents, or upon application to Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa., by mail for twenty cents.

REDUCED RATES TO ASHEVILLE, N. C.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Meeting National Music Teachers' Association.

For the benefit of those desiring to attend the meeting of the National Music Teachers' Association, to be held at Asheville, N. C., June 30th to July 3d, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets to Asheville from all stations on its lines, June 26th to 30th, inclusive, good to return until July 10th, inclusive, at reduced rates. By depositing tickets with Special Agent, at Asheville, not later than July 10th, and payment of fee of fifty cents, an extension of final return limit may be obtained to reach original starting point not later than October 10th.

REDUCED RATES TO GETTYSBURG.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account Fortieth Anniversary of Battle.

For the benefit of those desiring to attend the exercises to be held at Gettysburg, Pa., commemorating the fortieth anniversary of the battle, on July 1st, 2d and 3d, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets to Gettysburg from all stations on its lines in the State of Pennsylvania east of and excluding Johnstown; also from stations on the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad Division and the Buffalo and Allegheny Valley Division north of but not including Oil City, at rate of a single fare for the round trip (minimum rate, $1.00). Tickets will be sold and good going June 30th, July 1st, 2d and 3d, and good to return until July 6th, inclusive.

Women's New "Matinee Suits"

We show a decided departure from the usual style of house dress. We call it a Matinee Suit. The upper part is shaped like a dressing sacque, the lower part like a regular skirt; made of the same material throughout. The Matinee Suit is first and last a dress to wear about the house. It is certain to meet with general approval, for it has good sense and comfort in its favor; and it admirably supplies a want that has long been felt. We mention three numbers:

WOMEN'S MATINEE SUITS at 85c.

White ground with colored figures or stripes. Seven-gore skirt, with three-inch hem. Sacque has tight back and loose front; high neckband with turnover collar; loose sleeves.

WOMEN'S MATINEE SUITS at $1.00

Pretty stripe effects in black, pink or blue with white. Seven-gore skirt, with twelve-inch flounce. Sacque has plain tight back and yoke front; neckband with turndown collar; bottom of sacque, sleeves and collar trimmed with ruffle.

WOMEN'S MATINEE SUITS at $1.50

Of striped madras in pretty light effects. Seven-gore skirt, with deep flounce. Sacque has fitted back and yoke front, trimmed with lace edge; collar and sleeves finished with narrow ruffle.

LIFE.

O God!
How beautiful it is to live! To breathe
Air which is life and sweetness, and to feel Warm air breathe on me;
To breathe in fragrance—what? I do not know,
But that it is all sweetness!
To hear a thousand songs and rustling sounds,
I know not what,
But that they are all music!
To see unnumbered shades of color pass,
Changing in shade and color as I look,
Unnumbered forms as well, which pass and change,
And all in harmony, soft, tender, beautiful,—
And to enjoy all these the while I live!
How beautiful it is to be so strong,
Yet need not to be strong!
Ready to sleep if need were,
Yet not to sleep.
Willing to eat and drink if there were need,
And yet to need not drink or meat!
O God!
How beautiful it is to live in health!

The Care of Blankets.

Never let blankets remain in service after they are soiled; dirt rots the fiber and invites moths. Because of the peculiar saw-tooth formation of wool hair it is necessary that a pure soap, made of the best materials, be used; a cheap soap, especially one which contains rosin, will cause the blanket to become hard by matting the fiber.

To Wash Blankets and Retain their Softness.

Dissolve shavings of Ivory Soap in boiling water, add cold water until nearly lukewarm. Immerse a blanket and knead with the hands; rinse in clean warm water in which also some Ivory Soap has been dissolved. Dry in a place that is neither very warm nor very cold.

WHAT WE REALLY WANT.

Most of us think we know what we want. Our main trouble is that we cannot get the things we want. But is it not just possible that the trouble lies deeper? Are we certain that we do know what we want? Watch the little child and see how perplexed he is when he has to choose between two things. If there were only one possibility it would be easy enough, but life is never as simple as that. One of the most solemn periods in life comes when the school days or the college days are over. Does the young man cry with exultant joy, "Now I can be what I want to be"? Quite otherwise. His great problem, which disturbs his nights and days, is to find out what he wants to do. He can be a teacher, or a doctor, or a lawyer, or an editor, or almost anything else in the long list of occupations. But he cannot decide which he wants. He does not know his own mind. He has not discovered what he was made for and meant for. The difficulty is that when he takes one course he must give up all the others that were equally possible. It is impossible to choose one thing without rejecting all the other things, and this makes life a very tragic affair.

The same difficulty appears in the prayers of all of us. Shall we ask God to give us health—a thing which we all think we want? But may not the robust, vigorous health, which we are seeking, be just the thing which would make us self-sufficient and forgetful of our truer, deeper needs from God? How easy it is, when the red blood flows strong in the healthy system, to live as though blood and muscles and nerves were the only things worth having! Or, shall we beseech Him to give us freedom from the ills and woes of life—the dreaded enemies which sometimes pitch their tents about poor mortals? This peace and prosperity is the blessing which we think we want, to be sure. But if we could only see the whole of life, and could forecast "the far more speeding and eternal weight of glory," which accrues to those who learn to bear burdens and to face difficulties and to overcome hindrances and obstacles, should we not rather pray for a joyous and happy spirit under all circumstances, and a disposition to learn the true discipline of hardships?

We think we want ease and wealth and success. Like the foolish little child, we are eager for the painted air balloons, and we stretch out our hands and beg for them. What we really want, however, (and if we knew ourselves better we should all realize it)—what we really want is a redeemed and purified inward self, a genuine spiritual life. We want it, we mean to have it, we sometimes cry out for it, but we get so easily switched off on the siding where the train slows up to take on worldly goods. We do want the new life, but we find the conditions too exacting and severe. The choice of the heavenly crown cuts off too many of the other possibilities of life! The tremendous issues of life are thus settled by the final decision of what we want most. It is useless to say we want the highest, while we go on steadily living for some low thing. What we really want is settled by the steady aim of our life. The treasure is always where the heart is.

THE ADVANCE OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.

WE first realize facts when they are forced home to us in our own experience. We hear general statements, but they do not impress us very much. We have a concrete instance come into our own lives and we are convinced forever. The present writer came home last week to find in his family a case of diphtheria which was of such a malignant type that it would have been beyond the reach of medical skill a dozen years ago. Anti-toxin was at once administered, and in a few hours the power of the disease appeared broken. The treatment was continued for three days more, and the dreaded membrane disappeared, and recovery went on at a rapid rate, without a sign of evil effect from the anti-toxin. The discovery and perfection of this remedy for diphtheria is justly regarded as one of the greatest triumphs in the annals of medicine. It is, however, only one of the outcomes of modern medical science. Contagious and infectious diseases are all due to the presence of a foreign germ. The point of attack of the physician is to destroy the germ or to make its presence harmless. Vaccination, which is now more than a hundred years old, is performed to render the presence of the small-pox germ harmless, though it does nothing to destroy the germs themselves. Anti-toxin is an instance of the working of the other principle. It directly attacks the poison of the diphtheria germ, and, if applied early enough, it prevents it from spreading from the throat into the rest of the system. As its name implies, it is a poison destroyer. For years medical science has been at work to perfect a similar remedy for tuberculosis, commonly known to the layman as consumption. So far no completely-effective serum has been found, though two or three times the discovery has been prematurely announced. Pneumonia, it is well known, is a germ disease, but it still remains an extremely dangerous disease, only because science has not yet perfected a remedy to counteract its germ. The same can be said of scarlet fever and typhoid fever, though science has already revolutionized the treatment of all fevers, and it has done an enormous service in discovering the cause of them and the means for protecting communities from them. In Eastern countries disease is regarded as the work of evil spirits, and is treated by those who are experts in magic and superstition. There is no relation of cause and effect at all between the remedy and the disease. Not many centuries ago this was the case even in the most enlightened countries of Europe. Modern medicine is the product of the scientific movement, and its story is even more wonderful than the story of telephone or steam engine, wireless telegraphy or phonograph. It has silently transformed human life, but so gradually that few realize what a new world we are in. It ought to make us realize, more than we sometimes do, that all discovery of truth and of facts is a blessing to mankind, and that as soon as scientific knowledge is applied to the affairs of human life superstition goes and something better takes its place.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

A most important step toward the National Conference on the Liquor Traffic in 1906 has just been taken—the most important since the decision of the Five Years Meeting. The General Synod of the Lutheran Church in the United States, held in Baltimore last week, heartily endorsed the call for the conference, and arranged for delegates to be appointed to attend it. The Lutherans in the United States number 1,745,588 members.

Neglect of one duty often renders us unfit for another. God "is a rewarder," and one great principle on which He dispenses His rewards is this—through our faithfulness in one thing He bestows grace upon us to be faithful in another.—Ichabod Spencer.

THE HELP OF THE MINISTRY.

[A report of Edward Grubb's address in the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight of London Yearly Meeting.]

The general summary of the reports from the quarterly meetings was read so far as it related to the ministry.

Edward Grubb introduced the consideration of the subject, "The counsel and help of those engaged in the work of the ministry, especially of the younger and more inexperienced." He recalled the minute sent down last year calling attention to the need for "spiritual efficiency" in our meetings for worship, if the pure and simple truths of the Gospel are to be so presented as to win acceptance. This was the most vital question now before the Society—how to vitalize the ministry in our meetings, and to raise its quality. We were at a critical point, when the question was whether what we call the "priesthood of all believers" was to be made a practical reality or not. Could a wholly non-professional ministry be maintained in face of the altered conditions of life? It was important to have an affirmative answer to this question, important not for us only, but for the world. He earnestly trusted London Yearly Meeting would find a positive answer; but it would not find it by repeating ancient formulae, or following America, or letting things drift. The question was closely related to that of mission meetings, so closely indeed that Warwickshire Quarterly Meeting included in its report on the Second Duty a reference to what they had done respecting mission meetings. Much of our present confusion, as illustrated by the divergent views expressed the previous evening, were due to the presence of two ideals of mission work: (1) to bring people to the light of Christ, (2) to bring them to the special form of Christianity we call Quakerism. The presence of these two ideals was due in part to the narrow and self-centered policy of the Society in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, with the inevitable rebound when the fetters were burst. To the early Friends it was inconceivable that the preaching of Christ and preaching of Quakerism should be regarded as different things. There was but one Gospel for them—the "Truth." To them it was all-important, not only that men should become Christians, but the right sort of Christians, with such a conscious experience of the Spirit that professional pastors and sacraments were felt to be needless. For us, with the two ideals amongst us, let neither side try to rule out the other. For no Church could afford to discourage its evangelists, and no Church could afford to neglect the truths for which it stands. If we harp on one note we get out of tune. This discussion showed that the two ideals were beginning to merge, and our great hope for the future was that we might regain that unity of purpose which marked our early days. We were beginning to see that the really effective way to present our message was in practice rather than in talk about our "distinguishing views." A really good object lesson, such as those which gained Robert Barclay, Isaac Penington, and George Whitehead, was worth twenty discourses on our principles of worship. We must convince others that the Spirit is with us, as with the early Church and the early Quakers. The constant attention given to this question of late years showed that we were feeling our shortcomings. Nearly all realized the poverty and feebleness marking too many of our meetings, even our mission meetings. While, indeed, "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe," we had no Scriptural ground for thinking that men were saved by the preaching of foolishness. The foundation of improvement must be a deeper spiritual experience, raising the spiritual level of us all. But it was often said, of those who spoke of the culture of the ministry, that they wanted intellectual sermons. They certainly did not want to rule out from the ministry the unlearned, who would speak shortly and pithily of what he knows and understands. But there were those who wanted more than the unlearned testimony, yet loathed the idea of people coming to meeting charged with "conned and gathered stuff" which they were bound to let off on the congregation. Herein lay the futility of much chapel sermonizing. In his recent address at the meeting of the Congregational Union, Dr. Horton told how while laid aside for long weeks he had been bound to occupy the seat of the hearer. He then found "how little the hearer needs curious and ingenious discourses, or learned dissertations, or bursts of meditated eloquence. He found how irrelevant much of his own preaching had been, and how often the hungry sheep must have looked up and not been fed. He wanted the sincere milk of the word, the settled certainties of the faith, the manifestation of the Divine Heart, the power of the cross to break and to mend, to wound and to bind up." We wanted a genuine understanding of spiritual truth, preaching which was heart-searching and accompanied with heart-tendering power, having the insight of sympathy, a close touch with the facts of life, but with the vision that transfigures and glorifies them. We wanted in our ministers a genuine knowledge of the meaning of the Scripture, and of the many paths by which God has led and taught men in the past—a spaciousness of heart and mind that makes room for infinite variety in God's methods of dealing with His children now as in the past, a power to meet the questionings of this doubting age, not in controversy, but yet on even terms and not simply denouncing them or running away from them. We wanted to hear from those who were walking abreast of the living thoughts of the day, and not simply following them afar off, and picking up scraps about them from others. We wanted reason, knowledge, literary and artistic taste, all brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ to be used for Him. We needed to rouse up those possessing these gifts to consecrate them to this highest service. No meeting could thrive on an ignorant ministry, if that were all it got. Did we consider how many earnest souls we might have driven away by narrowness, when we might have won them by a larger and more Christ-like spirit? Some of the representations of Christianity were such that a hearer might go away with the remark, "If that is what it means to be a Christian, I would rather not." Or, "If I must begin by believing all these impossible things, I simply can't." "It was a stifling atmosphere," said one, after hearing attacks on the orthodoxy of a saintly Christian. What could we do? Elders were doing something; but we must not let them become a professional class; nor should a hard and fast line be drawn between those who speak in meetings and those who do not.

BUILDING A CHRISTIAN.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

"I never let fools or bairns see my work until it is done," said a famous Scotch painter. He knew that no production of human art could be rightly judged until it was completed. I remember that when I first saw Cologne Cathedral, nearly fifty years ago, it had a stumpy and unimpressive appearance, for it was towerless. The next time I saw the edifice it was disfigured by scaffoldings on which workmen were busy. But when, in the summer of 1894, I beheld the completed towers in their flashing splendor, I felt that it was a mighty and magnificent poem written in marble.

That illustrates the way in which the Master builds a true Christian. The Bible declares that the Christian is "Christ's workmanship created anew unto good works." Any one who looked at a company of church members in a prayer meeting might say that some of them were quite imperfect specimens of workmanship, as he could testify from intimate acquaintance. Very true; but if that same person wished to purchase a melodeon he would not go into the manufactory where the different parts were being fashioned; he would go into the salesroom and inspect the completed instrument. This world is the great workshop in which Jesus Christ by His Spirit constructs Christian character. "Ye are God's building," wrote the Apostle Paul to his brethren at Corinth. Of himself he wrote at another time, "Not as though I have already attained, either were already perfect." He was still in the hands of his divine and loving Architect. The scaffoldings were not yet taken down, and the work of grace was not yet completed.

It is easy to discover some flaws in even the best men and women; but the critic must consider what materials our Master has to work with in frail and fallen human nature, so often disfigured and defaced by innate depravity. Napoleon used to say that "he had to make his marshals out of mud." Certainly no power less than that of the Holy Spirit could have constructed such a conscientious and effective Christian as John Newton out of so hardened and desperate a sinner. A very eloquent and spiritually-minded minister once said to me, "Before I was converted I wonder how any one could live in the house with me." During my forty-four years of pastorates, when I received converts into the church, I often recognized the fact that one candidate for membership had been reared in a frivolous and worldly family, and another had a naturally violent temper, and another was constitutionally timid and irresolute, and still another had to contend with hereditary sensualities of temperament or practice. Some of the overhasty and headlong had to be held back and tested, and some desponding doubters had to be encouraged. A study of the experience of our blessed Lord in building twelve disciples out of the material that came to His hand is full of solemn suggestion, and one of those twelve tumbled into ruin under the very eyes of the Master Builder!

Character-building is like cathedral-building—a gradual process. No Christian is born full grown, else there would be no sense in the divine injunctions to "grow in grace" and to "press towards the goal of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." The corner-stone of every truly regenerated character is the Lord Jesus; other foundation can no one build on without risking a wreck in this world and eternal ruin in the next world. The first act of saving faith is the joining of the new convert to the atoning Saviour. Then upon that solid foundation must be added the courage, the meekness, the patience, the conscientiousness, the honesty, the loving kindness and the other graces that make for godliness. Let no young beginner be disheartened. Oaks do not grow like hollyhocks. A solid Christian character cannot be reared in a day; nor is it to be done simply by Sabbath services or by sacraments. Some poor pumice-stone has to be thrown out, and not a little bad timber rejected in spite of the varnish on it.

The Bible is the only plumb-line to build by; and it must be used constantly. All the showy ornamentation that a man can put on his edifice amounts to nothing if his walls are not perpendicular. Sometimes we see a flimsy structure whose bulging walls are shored up by props and skids to keep them from tumbling into the street. I am afraid that there are thousands of reputations in trade, in politics, in social life, and even in church life that are shored up by various devices. No Christian can defy God's inexorable law of gravitation. It is a mere question of time how soon every character will "fall in," if it is not based on the rock, and built according to Jesus Christ's plumb-line. It may go down in this world; it is sure to go down in the next. Let every one, therefore, take heed how he or she buildeth; for the last great day will test the work of what sort it is.

Finally, let us all bear in mind that if we are Christ's workmanship, we must let our wise and loving Master take His own way. We must allow Him to use His own tools. Oh, how much cutting and chiseling we often need! How keen, too, and sharp, is the chisel which He sometimes uses! The sound of His hammers is constantly heard; and with it are also heard the wondering cries of some sufferer who exclaims, "Why art Thou applying to me the file, the saw and the hammers?" Be still and know that whom He loveth He chasteneth! If we are Christ's building, then let Him fashion us according to His divine ideal of beauty, at whatever cost to our selfishness or pride or indolence or vainglory. Christ working in us, and upon us, and we working with Christ and for Him, that is the process that produces such structures as He will present before His Father and the holy angels.

Nothing is too small, and nothing is too great, that involves a Christian's influence before a sharp-eyed world. We are to be His witnesses. Jesus Christ builds Christians to be looked at and to be studied. He rears us to be spiritual lighthouses in a sin-darkened world. Michael Angelo said that he "carved for eternity." In an infinitely higher sense is every blood-redeemed Christian carved and fashioned and upbuilt to be a habitation of God through His Spirit, to His praise, and unto His everlasting glory.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

INAUGURATION AND COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT EARLHAM.

College inaugurals are a recent development, and Earlham proved her up-to-dateness in arranging for a fitting recognition of the installation of President Robert L. Kelly. One whole day, the 8th instant, was devoted to this event.

The forenoon was taken up with a symposium, in which Professor Robert L. Sackett was master of ceremonies. President William O. Thompson, of Ohio State University, spoke on "The Colleges and Universities of the United States"; President William L. Bryan, of Indiana University, spoke for the "State Institutions of Indiana"; Professor Moses C. Stevens, of Purdue, made a few remarks on "Indiana Colleges"; Superintendent W. A. Carr, of the Anderson public schools, spoke on "The High and Common Schools of Indiana," and President Church, of Buchtel College, Akron, O., bore greetings from his college to Earlham.

President Rosenberger, of Penn College, responded to the subject, "The Sisterhood of Friends' Colleges"; Ex-President J. J. Mills spoke on "The Friends' College"; Rufus M. Jones presented "The Religious Influence of the College," and Hon. C. E. Shiveley spoke in behalf of the city of Richmond. A few remarks were made by Charles Hubbard, the first student to enter Friends' Boarding School, afterward Earlham College.

The inaugural exercises were held in the afternoon, Timothy Nicholson, senior trustee, presiding and speaking for the trustees. Professor D. W. Dennis spoke on behalf of the faculty; Edmund Dickinson, president of the senior class, spoke for the students, and Benjamin F. Trueblood for the alumni. President W. R. Harper, of Chicago University, gave the installation address, and President Kelly made the inaugural address. The new president spoke on the place of the small college in modern education.

"The college," said President Kelly, "is the typical and unique American educational institution. It is becoming more and more clear that, whatever the functions of these other institutions, it is pre-eminently the function of the college to build character and inculcate conscience, to make men. The college has the conviction that, however much the world needs experts and automatons, however much it needs scholars and investigators, however much the glory of our generation is statable in material terms, the world still needs men.

"Earlham, then, is proud to be nothing less and aspires at present to be nothing more than a plant for the manufacture of men and women. She does not shrink from the inquiry as to whether there will be a market for her wares. As she understands the state of the market, there is a demand, a growing demand, for a certain type of product which she feels qualified to produce. It augurs much for the welfare of the republic that we have institutions of grand proportions which are engaged in proving all things. It is the function of the college to hold fast to that which is good."

The baccalaureate address was given First-day morning, the 7th, by President Bryan, of Indiana University, on "Education by Occupations." The tramp, who hates work; the jack-of-all-trades, who is never settled, and the crank, who is always trying to do things in a new and original way, were told off by the speaker as undesirable classes of workers. The efficient man has work that he can do, yet work that has unlimited possibilities in it; he takes delight in his work and does things that benefit the world.

An interesting feature of the week was the dedication of a tree to Joseph Moore by the Anglican Club of the college. Short speeches were made by members of the club and by Professor W. N. Trueblood, and a fitting response was made by Professor Moore. A bronze tablet, suitably inscribed, affixed to a stone near the tree, commemorates the occasion.

A reception for President Kelly was given in the evening of installation day in the library, which was beautifully decorated for the event.

The Haverford scholarship was awarded to Ernest D. Martin, and the Bryn Mawr scholarship to Ruby Davis.

Dean George E. Vincent, of Chicago University, gave the commencement address Fourth-day morning, the 10th. He spoke on "Education and Efficiency," emphasizing the elements of knowledge, resourcefulness and enthusiasm as chief factors in the efficiency that is the end of education. The speaker distinguished between mere information and organized knowledge, and between knowledge and the ability to meet practical situations, which is wisdom. Knowledge transmuted into wisdom must be energized by enthusiasm. The speaker closed by giving the three elements of knowledge their higher names of science, wisdom and religion.

President Kelly conferred degrees upon thirty young men and women, and the forty-fourth Earlham commencement was over.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

In Portland, Me., from the 12th to the 18th of Sixth month, occurred the 233rd Yearly Meeting of Friends of New England.

The visiting ministers present with minutes were Harry R. Keates; Fred and Olive Ryon, of New York; Robert Pretlow and Willis R. Hotchkiss, of Ohio; Anna May Pemberton and Parker James, of Indiana; Edward and Amy Cook, of Kansas. Gilbert L. Farr, of Jamaica, was present, but had not brought his minute.

During the yearly meeting there were five sessions of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, which were characterized by forcible gospel messages and careful deliberation as to methods of work. At one of the meetings the subject of "How best to encourage family worship" was considered. The discussion was opened by Harry R. Keates, who was followed by many from the body of the meeting. It was stated that the hope of the State was in the home, and the purity of the home could not be maintained without the family altar. In this day the strain of business is so great that family worship is often either neglected or becomes a lifeless form. In Christian homes where it is omitted, interested members of the Society should help in encouraging, and perhaps in helping to establish the family altar. Friends should seek to avoid a lifeless form, and to do so prayer and thought should be employed to make family worship a power in the life of each member of the home.

A paper was read by Mead A. Kelsey, on "Series of Meetings as an Effective Way to Win Men to Jesus Christ." It was conclusively proven that both in the history of the Hebrew people, and in that of the Christian Church, God had mightily used this method in turning men from darkness to light. That revival meetings have had their day was refuted by accounts which come to us of the recent wonderful ingatherings in Australasia and western parts of our own country.

The successful Lynn Conference for ministers and Christian workers, held at the beginning of the year, and the establishment of the Ministers' Circulating Library of one hundred volumes, proved that the work outlined one year ago had been carried out with marked results. Committees to continue this line of work during the coming year were appointed.

The educational work of the yearly meeting is in a more hopeful condition than ever before. The spiritual atmosphere of the two schools is healthful, and a guarded Christian education is being provided for the young people. George H. Jones, of Boston, Mass., with an efficient corps of teachers, will have charge of Oak Grove Seminary during the coming year. An appropriation was made by the meeting for the assistance of this school.

Through the illness of the superintendent of evangelistic work during the past six months, this department of work did not make the showing of one year ago, but series of meetings were reported from various parts with good results.

Statistics of membership showed that numerically the yearly meeting had just held its own during the year.

A sub-committee on church extension reported a concentration of energy in assisting the Friends at Salem, Mass., in remodeling their meeting house, and a collection of about $400 was taken in the body of the meeting to assist in this work.

Through the regular work of the ministry, lectures and the distribution of literature, the peace and temperance reforms have met with hearty support from all parts of the yearly meeting. The action of the Five Years Meeting in calling a conference of the Christian Churches, in the interest of the suppression of the liquor traffic, was heartily endorsed, and the earnestness and thoughtfulness manifested in this line of work plainly evidenced the fact that Friends of this yearly meeting are taking an active interest in this great and sorely-needed reform.

The work of the Bible Schools during the past year has been encouraged by the efficient services of a field worker, and during the coming year it is proposed to hold a conference of workers that better results may be obtained in the future.

The Christian Endeavorers have been aggressive during the year, and the Yearly Meeting Union has contributed over $1,400 for the Boys' Training Home at Ramallah, Palestine. A new feature of the work during the coming year will be that of a Look-out Committee, appointed by the Yearly Meeting Union, to bring into affiliation those members who are so located that they cannot belong to a local society, but who desire to be identified with the work of the Union.

Letters from Ramallah report a very successful year in the two training schools there, and the work appears to be on a more efficient basis than ever. Plans are being formulated for the speedy erection of a permanent home for the boys' school.

By the adoption of a constitution and by-laws this work will henceforth be carried on under the "Board of Foreign Missions of New England Yearly Meeting." This Board consists of an Executive Committee of ten members and eighteen advisory members, two chosen by each quarterly meeting.

The work among the Indians is being successfully prosecuted in connection with the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs. Workers and visitors from the field among our visiting Friends testified to the transforming influence of the Gospel in the lives of the Modocs.

The Committee on Freedmen reported the discontinuance of the school at Maryville, Tenn., and a proposal to transfer the property to private parties. It was also proposed that the committee be authorized to co-operate henceforth with some other yearly meeting in prosecuting their work for freedmen. These propositions were adopted.

The evening meetings were devoted to Christian Endeavor, educational, missionary and temperance rallies. These were well attended and the interest good.

Mr. Dinwiddie, of Washington, D. C., legislative secretary of the National Anti-Saloon League, gave a most interesting and instructive talk on the work of that organization, showing its effectiveness by results obtained in Ohio.

Among the interesting incidents was the sending of a message of love to our aged friend and minister, Phebe R. Gifford, of Providence, R. I., who for many years was so efficient in the work of the Society, and who has just passed her hundredth milestone.

The introduction of Dr. Abigail E. Goddard, of Lawrence, Mass., who is about to start for India under the Ohio Board, but supported by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of New England Yearly Meeting, was a very impressive occasion, many prayers being offered for her and the work which she is undertaking.

In order to enable teachers and scholars to attend the sessions of the yearly meeting, it was decided, as an experiment, to meet next year two weeks later than usual at Friends School, Providence, R. I.

During the discussion on the state of the Society, Friends were brought under deep concern in regard to individual responsibility and personal application to the work of the Church. Whereas there are many things to encourage us we were brought to a keen realization that we had fallen far short in performing the work entrusted to us by the great Head of the Church. Too many talents have lain hidden in napkins, and the zeal and consecration of our forefathers in the Church have been sadly lacking in the work of the Society to-day. Stirring words along this line were spoken by our visiting friends and by members of our own yearly meeting, and we were encouraged to press on more faithfully in prosecuting the work which Christ has entrusted to us.

The sessions closed under a precious sense of the covering of the Holy Spirit.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON I. SEVENTH MONTH 5, 1903.

ISRAEL ASKING FOR A KING.

1 Samuel 8: 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only.—1 Sam. 7: 3.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Sixth mo. 29.—Israel Asking for a King.—1 Sam. 8: 1-22.

Third-day, Sixth mo. 30.—Honoring the Lord. Prov. 3: 5-12.

Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 1.—Displeasing God. Num. 11: 1-10.

Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 2.—Result of God's displeasure. Num. 11: 18-20; 31-34.

Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 3.—Result of forsaking God. Jer. 18: 1-17.

Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 4.—Self destruction. Hos. 13: 9-15.

First-day, Seventh mo. 5.—Our duty. 2 Cor. 6: 14-18.

The lessons now return to the Old Testament. It will be well to read chapters 4-7 to get the connection, and also the whole of chapter 8.

The books commonly known as First and Second Samuel have a close connection with First and Second Kings, and really should be called First and Second Kings. Their name is taken from Samuel, who is the main character in the early part of the first book, and whose influence extends almost through it. First and Second Samuel originally formed an undivided whole. It is not known who was the author of the book. Samuel could not have written more than the first twenty-four chapters of 1 Samuel (see 1 Sam. 25: 1). It is generally agreed that the book is a compilation from earlier records, but who the compiler or compilers were is unknown. The sources, so far as can be inferred, were chronicles of Samuel, Nathan and Gad, probably supplemented by records kept in the schools of the Prophets. Compare 1 Chron. 29: 29; 27: 24; 1 Sam. 10: 25, etc. From the character of the Hebrew used, the compilation, it is inferred, was made at an early date. It was after the death of David (2 Sam. 5: 5), and probably soon after the division of the kingdom.

The period covered by 1 Samuel is little less than a hundred years. The exact dates are disputed. The present lesson, according to some, would be 1079 B.C.; according to others, 1037 B.C. The place was Ramah, which was Samuel's birthplace, where he lived, and where he died; it was about six miles northwest of Jerusalem. Possibly it was Arimathæa, where Joseph of Arimathæa lived. At this time Palestine had no capital. "Shiloh was gone, Shechem was gone, and Jerusalem was not yet come." Samuel was the last great Judge, and he saw the end of the theocracy. The monarchy begins with the present lesson.

1. "When Samuel was old." Probably about 60. He lived perhaps thirty years after this, but his active life and great responsibilities made him wish for help, and his sons were associated with him.

2. "Beersheba." This town was in the extreme south. Samuel probably kept the north for himself (1 Sam. 7: 15.)

3. "Lucre." This word always has a bad meaning in the Bible. "Bribes." (See Deut. 16: 19.) "Perverted Justice." American Revised Version. The crimes named are still common in the East.

4. "Elders." These represented the people, and indeed the term seems to be synonymous with people in verses 7, 10, 19, 20. "Come to Samuel." This shows his authority and the respect in which he was held.

5. The reasons given were: Samuel was old; his sons, who were his assistants, and possibly might be his successors, were unsuitable, and the Israelites wished to be like the nations around. To judge means also to rule. It does not mean that they wished their king to be like the kings around them. It was a head of the nation that they wished. Compare Deut. 17: 14-20.

6. "Displeased Samuel." This was extremely natural. No one since Moses and Joshua had done so much for the Israelites as Samuel, and this act seemed real ingratitude. After the Lord explained to him he must have seen that the real sin of the people was not in wishing for a king, but in their distrust of the rule of an unseen Jehovah. "Prayed." He took his difficulty and his trouble to the Lord. The people wished to hurry the Lord. He would have given them a king at the right time.

7. "Said unto Samuel." Probably in a vision. "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me." Because of this they needed discipline, which no retention of old forms could give. "The Jews were asking for the heavy punishments which they needed."

8. This verse in part explains the method of rejection of God. "The disciple is not above his Lord."

9. "Now therefore hearken unto their voice." Yield to their request. Nothing shows the greatness of Samuel's character more than this scene. He gives up at once, retires into obscurity, and lives the life of a private citizen. "Protest solemnly unto them." He was to tell them beforehand what would take place if they persisted in their request and it were granted. "The manner of the king." They were told how he would live, how he would oppress them, etc. In verses 10-18 we have the words in which Samuel described an oriental king, and there is no reason to think it exaggerated. The latter part of Solomon's reign was to a great extent of this character.

10. "Unto the people." Evidently the "elders" of verse 4, who were the representatives of the people, and so in telling them he was telling the people.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Pious parents do not necessarily have pious children, though the children of pious parents are far more likely to be pious than those of ungodly parents.

2. "Corrupt officials bring government into disrepute."

3. It is no remedy to turn from one evil to another.

4. "Pray always."

5. "Not what we wish, but what we want,
O let thy grace supply;
The good unasked, in mercy grant,
The ill, though asked, deny."

TOPIC FOR SEVENTH MONTH FIFTH.

ENDEAVORERS IN TRAINING FOR PUBLIC LIFE.

Gen. 41: 35-42; Acts 7: 35, 36; Dan. 6: 1-4.

Second-day, Sixth mo. 29.—A courageous minority. Num. 13: 25-30.

Third-day, Sixth mo. 30.—An astute judge. 1 Kings 3: 16-27.

Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 1.—A staunch reformer. 2 Kings 18: 1-8.

Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 2.—An unspoiled courtier. Neh. 1: 1-11.

Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 3.—A model captain. Acts 10: 1-8.

Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 4.—A sensible town clerk. Acts 19: 34-41.

Christians acknowledge their individual obligations to do the right as they are given to see the right, and recognize the same requirement as binding upon the Church; but when the collective body becomes governmental and is State instead of Church, we are too apt to allow considerations of policy and compromise to enter in.

Abraham made a plan for getting a wife for Isaac, and put the carrying out of it into his steward's hands. Eleazer suggested compromise, but Abraham had in his mind a vision of better things. Isaac was on no account to go back to his idolatrous kindred, even for a brief visit; and Rebekah came to him in Canaan. Achievements of good government can be wrought, but not by going down into the rings and cabals to met the tricksters in their own field. We are to support a banner that stands for purity and honor—everywhere. Its political recognition isn't always prompt. We are mostly Hebrew enough—or is it mere human perversity?—to say, "Who made thee a prince and a judge over us?" when some one suggests that we are wrong and need to get out of our bondage. It took forty added years of oppression to prepare the Israelites to follow Moses, but they got ready. It is a minority of the citizens in any city that are actually corrupt, and the hope is in the fact that when they are aroused they can correct the evil conditions.

It is good to think of Pharoah and Darius choosing Joseph and Daniel as rulers because of their wisdom and excellent spirit. In his "Abraham Davenport," Whittier tells us with an all too serious irony that "In the old days (a custom laid aside

With breeches and cocked hats) the people sent Their wisest man to make the public laws."

We are glad to believe that the custom is not so obsolete as these lines imply, but more "wisest men" need to concern themselves with the public interests.

It will not do to say that our citizenship is in heaven and consider the matter ended. Our residence is on earth, and we are bound by all the rules of brotherhood to make of our temporary abode the best and safest place possible. The better Christian, the better citizen, ought to be true. I think we may say it must be true, for no one who loves his neighbor as himself can contentedly endure any other than the best attainable conditions for him.

Good citizenship gives boys and girls healthful recreation, and provides wholesome competitors with the places of evil resort. When it dominates these snares and pitfalls are banished, just as infected clothing and buildings are destroyed to exterminate disease.

It keeps men and women from isolating themselves and developing into cranks and misfits from lack of social intercourse and a forgetfulness of their mutual dependence. Its concern is for the people and not for party or policy or the interests of office-holders. Paul let the ship go to pieces, but got crew and passengers to shore without the loss of one. It covers a wide field and furnishes scope for us all to work in. We can work "every man over against his house" if only we have a mind to work.

The real chosen people of God are those who will hear His word and obey.

A REPORT FROM NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

Fifth month 30th, 1903.

Our yearly meeting is supposed to have within its limits twenty-four Christian Endeavor Societies. We wish that we might give you reports from them all. The following is summed up from the reports of fifteen societies:

Total membership—active, 468; associate, 125; honorary, about 40. Twelve members have joined Friends' meetings; from seventy-five to eighty give two cents or more per week for mission work; about fifty tithe their income, and some others give systematically.

Five of these societies have contributed in the aggregate $189.53 for Home Missions. The fifteen have given $1,025.90 for Foreign Missions, and contributions for other purposes amount to $480.50, making a total of $1,695.93. Eight of these fifteen societies contribute toward the support of the Yearly Meeting Society, six take charge of mission services, and some conversions are reported.

One society has purchased a good organ, which is used in the Sabbath evening service, as well as in Christian Endeavor meetings. One, besides doing what other societies do regularly, assists feeble and aged by washing and cleaning. One sends Friends' calendars, each Christmas, to Bella Cooke, the famous New York invalid, which she distributes among her poor.

One society, however, reports faithful attendance at all church services, which is encouraging. Another has an evangelistic committee, which holds services in homes of people who do not attend meeting.

Quarterly Meeting Unions have been organized in Nine Partners and Cornwall Quarterly Meetings, which we hope will prove a great help to these societies. There is but one other union in the yearly meeting, so far as we know.

Most of the societies seem to be in a healthy condition, and some report growth spiritually and financially, if not numerically.

Our reports from eight junior societies are most encouraging. These have members to the number of 196. The superintendents of these societies must be well chosen, for they show so much life and activity. We feel that we have reason to be thankful for the training which the children are receiving, and are sure that if we endeavor to keep them interested we shall have some strong, earnest workers for our senior societies.

Their work at present consists principally of calling on the aged and sick, leaving flowers and fruit, sometimes birthday, Christmas or Easter tokens, and of sending scrap books to children's hospitals. They also contribute to both Home and Foreign Missions.

From one little band of thirteen active and twenty-one associate members, two have joined Friends' meeting. One society of twenty-five members has raised $13 for missions and church work, made fourteen scrap books and distributed nine hundred pages of literature. Another of twenty-five members has raised $25 for missions, besides paying running expenses. Another of sixteen members has raised over $14. Two societies have purchased hymn books for use in their meetings. "Sunshine," "Busy Bee" and "Profane Language" are the names of some of their committees, and suggest the kind of work which they are doing.

One encouraging feature is that these children attend their meetings regularly, and thereby set a good example for some of their seniors. We trust that this good quality may stand by them long after they are graduated from the Junior to the Senior Societies.

ETHEL CARTLAND PEASE, Secretary.

Like the seed which the wind wafts into hidden glades and forest depths, where no sower's hand could reach to scatter it, the subtle germ of Christ's truth will be borne on the secret atmosphere of a holy life into hearts which no preacher's voice could penetrate, where the tongue of men and of angels would fail; there is an eloquence in living goodness which will often prove persuasive. For it is an inoffensive, unpretending, unobtrusive eloquence; it is the eloquence of the soft sunshine when it expands the close-shut leaves and blossoms—a rude hand would but tear and crush them; it is the eloquence of the summer heat when it basks upon the thick-ribbed ice—blows would but break it, but beneath that softest, gentlest, yet most potent influence, the hard, impenetrable masses melt away.—John Caird.

Five minutes spent in the companionship of Christ every morning—aye, two minutes, if it is face to face and heart to heart—will change the whole day, will make every thought and feeling different, will enable you to do things for His sake that you would not have done for your own sake or for any one's sake.—Drummond.

Correspondence.

We cannot shut our eyes when God has opened them to facts. There has come before us, through the public papers, the fact that our Heavenly Father has permitted to land on our shores 60,000 emigrants, representing almost every religion and nation. They are living among us as our neighbors; they are placed in our schools with our children; we find them in our churches and hospitals. They have become the merchants with whom we deal, the laborers at our side. Now we know that like the nations of old whom the Jews found in the land, they do not understand our language or think our thoughts, some of them not believing in our God, or even eating our food. Now comes the great problem: How shall we have these strangers among us and not be injured by them? How can we be blest by their coming, and find that our Heavenly Father has placed within our reach a precious opportunity of handing the cup of cold water in the name of Christ, well knowing that we shall not lose our reward? For many years I have believed that there is no greater avenue for service than helping the children. A good old priest once said, "Give me the care of the child until he is twelve years old, and I will insure his character." To make a child true and good, there are two points in his education which cannot be neglected—first, strong religious influence, and second, right amusements. I wish now to appeal to every one to join in the effort to help the children. The first thing we must do is to see that they, the stranger children, are made happy.

I have some friends of whom I want to tell you, who have entered upon this work. We meet at the market house at Eleventh and Catharine Streets, Philadelphia, on Sixth-day evenings and Seventh-day afternoons. Can any of you, even as you face your own husbands and children, the work nearest and next you, do something here? I do not say you ought, but any who will patiently assist in aiding to give a welcome to the little people will be most useful.

CATHARINE M. SHIPLEY.

Eastern Quarterly Meeting, North Carolina, was held near Belvidere Fifth month 29th and 30th. Visiting Friends were Mills Raiford, from Virginia; Elizabeth Cooper, Edith Sharpless and Harry Moore, from Pennsylvania, and Cyrus Cooper and wife, from Ohio, the two latter being members of the separatist body. The quarterly meeting was held under difficulties, owing to the fact that one of the two monthly meetings composing the quarterly meeting has refused to accept the decision of North Carolina Yearly Meeting to adopt the Uniform Discipline. The other monthly meeting, Piney Woods, has been using the Uniform Discipline ever since its adoption in Eighth month, 1902, and many of its members prefer it to the old Discipline. Owing to the unwillingness of one meeting to act under the Uniform Discipline, the quarterly meeting decided to send no report on the state of Society, and no representatives to the next yearly meeting. Such reports as had no connection with the Uniform Discipline, as educational, foreign missionary, orphanage, Bible Schools, etc., are to be forwarded as usual to the Boards of the yearly meeting.

The situation in Eastern Quarter is a critical one, and much to be deplored. The Permanent Board of the yearly meeting was appealed to last Eleventh month to take steps to adjust the difficulties, and at a special meeting the Board addressed a letter to the quarterly meeting and its subordinate meetings, advising that all business should be transacted under the Uniform Discipline, but so far this has had no apparent effect.

ALICE N. WHITE.

Stella Quarterly Meeting was held at Newhope from the 5th to the 7th of Sixth month. The meeting of ministry and oversight was held at 10 o'clock on Sixth-day. In the afternoon the Doctrinal Conference was held, in which the subjects, "Why Should the Friends' Church Exist at the Present Time as a Separate Denomination?" "What Are the Positive Tests of Membership in the Society of Friends?" and "What Are the Negative Tests of Membership in the Society of Friends?" were discussed. These questions were of special interest, owing to the meeting where the quarterly meeting was held being composed almost entirely of new members, and the neighborhood is mostly unacquainted with Friends. The evening session was given to the subjects of peace and systematic giving.

In the meeting for business, on Seventh-day, the Friends' Stella Academy Board reported that John Howard had been engaged as principal for the Academy the ensuing year, and that the Academy will remain at Stella the coming year at least, as the proposition of last quarterly meeting to move the Academy to Cherokee on conditions that the Town Site Company and Commercial Club would give to the Academy $5,000 to erect suitable buildings and $5,000 endowment, has not yet been definitely accepted by the company. The quarterly meeting granted time until quarterly meeting in next Ninth month for the company to either definitely accept or reject the proposition; and if the proposition is accepted, and a satisfactory guarantee given to the Academy Board for the payment of the money, they are given until quarterly meeting in the Twelfth month to raise and pay over the money to the treasurer of the Board.

In the evening an interesting session was held, in which the subject of education was discussed by Nathan Brown and others, and the quarterly meeting union was held. Susie Allen was chosen president of the union for the ensuing year, and appointed delegate to attend the Territorial Christian Endeavor Convention, to be held at Guthrie in this month.

On First-day the quarterly meeting Sunday School was held at 9 o'clock, followed by three sessions of meetings for worship, in all of which the gospel was preached with power, and three or four professed conversion. The quarterly meeting in the Ninth month will be held at Friends Valley, eight miles southeast of Pond Creek.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Oscar Roberts has again started for work in the foreign field. He sailed the 20th instant.

Harry R. Keates, of Glens Falls, N. Y., was granted a minute by New York Yearly Meeting for service in Great Britain and Ireland.

Samuel Miles has held two meetings, with much blessing, in the meeting house at West Laurens, N. Y., which had been closed for two years.

La Crosse Monthly Meeting, held the 6th inst., at Hillsdale, near Hargrave, Kan., was an occasion of special interest. There were four requests for membership.

On account of the sickness of his wife, Daniel A. Williams has been compelled to leave the meeting at Buffalo, Kan., and return to his former home in Wichita, Kan.

The meeting at Springdale, Ia., is steadily progressing. Amos and Naomi B. Cook are doing excellent work in the meeting. Eleven new members have been received within two months.

Willis Bond is located as resident minister in the meeting at Watseka, Ill., and is doing excellent work. He delivered the baccalaureate sermon for the Watseka High School class on the evening of the 7th instant.

Headley Brothers are publishing a series of booklets on "Friends, Ancient and Modern," which sell for a penny apiece. "George Fox," by Georgina King Lewis, and "Samuel Bowley," by Frederick Sessions, which have been received by us, are very successfully done.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting, Ind., held the 12th to 14th inst., was attended by Gurney Dix, of Fairmount, Ind.; Jeremiah Hubbard, of Miami, Indian Territory; Wm. P. Angell, of New Castle, Ind., and J. F. Randolph and wife, of Kennard, Ind. The services during the meeting were edifying.

The epistle from London Yearly Meeting to New England embodied a minute from the meeting on ministry and oversight in reference to Harriet Green. New England Yearly Meeting endorsed the plan to raise an endowment fund in her memory and appointed a committee to receive subscriptions.

Dorwin Gidley, of Hargrave, Kan., recently visited and held services at the different meeting points in Hoisington Monthly Meeting, Barton County, Kan. The monthly meeting has procured a tabernacle, and meetings were opened in it at Hoisington on the 14th inst. Eliza P. Williams and others are laboring in these meetings.

New York Yearly Meeting has appointed J. Lindley Spicer superintendent of evangelistic and pastoral work. J. Lindley Spicer has, as is well known, recently spent several years in Cincinnati, but he was for years a member of New York Meeting, and he will feel at home with important work which the yearly meeting has now called him to take up.

A letter from Ramallah, Palestine, gives us information of such a convincing character that we want to warn our readers to be on their guard whenever they have to deal in any way with natives from the Holy Land, even though they may appear to bear well-known names and to speak glibly of their interest in religious things. They have learned to believe in the East that all Americans are gullible.

The Happy Grove Training School for Girls, which is conducted in connection with Friends' mission work in Jamaica, is in a prosperous condition. Five young ladies graduated this season after taking a five years' course. E. Emily Francis, one of the graduates, will not leave the school until Eighth month 12th, on the noon of which she will be married to M. Evan I. O. Schronder, son of Nathan A. Schronder, a faithful worker of Friends in Jamaica for many years.

The Christian Endeavor Societies of Stella Quarterly Meeting, Oklahoma, have organized a union, with Susie Allen president and Carrie Row secretary, both of Keith, Okla. Susie Allen attended the Territorial Convention at Guthrie the 16th to 18th instant. Several members from the union will attend the convention at Denver next month. Perry Hadley, superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Kansas Yearly Meeting, expects to spend some time in this quarterly meeting soon.

Amos Kenworthy, now living at San Jose, Cal., acceptably met with the Friends in San Francisco on the 3d inst. His messages did not lack in earnestness and power.

The Friends' Foreign Missionary Board of Ohio Yearly Meeting desire to bring to the attention of those whom God has called, the need for workers in the missions in China and India. In China there is need for a physician to take charge of the hospital for women at Nankin, and a housekeeper for the missionaries' home in the same city; also a single woman to assist Margaret Holm in general missionary work at the Lu Ho station. In India the special need is for a man and his wife to have the care of the older boys in the orphanage, teaching them trades and training them for Christian manhood.—Emeline J. C. Lupton, Corresponding Secretary, Adena, Ohio.

Friends' West Side Meeting, Chicago, is experiencing a steady growth. The meeting now has a complete organization, with officers and committees, and a staunch membership. During a little more than a year five persons have joined by request and eleven have been received by certificate. It is believed that nearly the whole of these would have been lost to Friends but for this meeting. A very valuable hospital work is carried on by a delegation from the Christian Endeavor Society, and the young people hold an open-air evangelistic meeting each First-day evening. It is hoped that by autumn the conditions will warrant the establishment of a monthly meeting, and that very soon a permanent location may be secured. At present all meetings are held in rented rooms at 774 West Van Buren Street, in the midst of a population of at least a million people. The address of all Friends, especially young people, moving to Chicago is earnestly desired, and may be sent to Charles Carter, 1303 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago.

PENN COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

Commencement week at Penn College was marked by an unusually large number of visitors. There were also numerous re-unions of classes, dinners and gatherings of former students. Good cheer and a hearty college spirit prevailed. At the closing chapel exercises, on the 10th instant, a crowded house greeted a musical program.

The freshman class gave their annual entertainment on Sixth-day evening, while on Seventh-day evening occurred the final meeting of the college literary societies.

President Rosenberger preached to a large congregation on Sabbath morning. It was a most inspiring topic, treated with an especial reference to students and their life work. In the afternoon A. Cato Kaye gave the baccalaureate address on the subject, "Culture and Service."

The Academy class numbered fifteen, and their graduating exercises occurred Second-day afternoon. The class address was given by A. M. Duboc. In the evening the Argonaut, a joint college literary society, rendered a musical and literary program.

Third-day evening Fred B. Tucker, Class of '96, gave the address before the alumni—a splendid effort, on the subject, "The Modern Knight Errant."

Oliver W. Stuart, of Chicago, gave the commencement address on Fourth-day morning, on the subject, "Christian Education."

Ten were admitted to the Bachelor's degree, and seven to the Master's degree. The Ladies' Auxiliary of the College Y. M. C. A. served the annual banquet at the close of the commencement exercises. Toasts followed, given by the orator of the day, Congressman Lacey, and others. John W. Casto spoke as the representative of the Class of '03.

The Haverford scholarship this year is awarded to Luke Lindley; the Bryn Mawr scholarship to E. Pearl Caldwell.

The summer term opened on Sixth month 22d. About thirty courses of study are offered in English, Normal, Preparatory and Collegiate branches.

DIED.

BENTLY.—At her home in Douglas, Kan., Sixth month 8th, 1903, Lona G. Bently, daughter of David B. and Artilla G. Burns. The deceased lived an exemplary Christian life.

HANSON.—At New London, Ind., Fifth month 22d, 1903, Emma Hanson, in her 52d year. She was the daughter of Ezra and Jane Williams, and the wife of Thomas E. Hanson. She was a consistent Christian.

THE SWEETS OF FREEDOM.

At one of the "homes" for children it was found very hard to keep the little inmates from taking food out of the garbage cans standing in the back yard. A visitor, on hearing the story, proceeded to question one of the worst offenders.

"Now tell me, Angelina," asked the visitor, "just why it is you like those dirty things in the garbage barrel, when you get plenty to eat at the table. You aren't hungry, are you?"

"Nope," came the answer, very sincerely.

"Well, then, what is it?" persisted the friendly inquisitor.

"Jus' 'cause," began the purloiner of garbage, hesitatingly, "just 'cause they's different things there, an' I can take any I like. Dinner-time I has to eat what's there or nuthin'; but in de garbage I can have anything I sees, and they tastes heaps nicer."

The visitor pondered on the "inalienable right" of choice and instinct of freedom, that, crushed to earth, crops up again forever, forbore preaching, and promptly sent Angelina and her sisters in restriction a box of as heterogeneously mixed candies as could be found.—Ex.

BRAIN BUILDING.

How to Feed Nervous Cases.

Hysteria sometimes leads to insanity, and should be treated through feeding the brain and nerves upon scientifically selected food that restores the lost delicate gray matter. Proof of the power of the brain food Grape-Nuts is remarkably strong.

"About eight years ago when working very hard as a court stenographer I collapsed physically, and then nervously, and was taken to the State Hospital for the Insane at Lincoln, Neb., a raving maniac.

"They had to keep me in a straight-jacket, and I was kept in the worst ward for three months. I was finally dismissed in the following May, but did no brain work for years until last fall, when I was persuaded to take the testimony in two cases. One of these was a murder case, and the strain upon my nervous system was so great that I would have broken down again except for the strength I had built up by the use of Grape-Nuts. When I began to feel the pressure of the work on my brain and nerves I simply increased the amount of Grape-Nuts, and used the food more regularly.

"I now feel like my old self again, and am healthy and happy. I am sure that if I had known of Grape-Nuts when I had my trouble, eight years ago I would never have collapsed, and this dark spot in my life would never have happened. Grape-Nuts' power as a brain food is simply wonderful, and I do not believe any stomach is so weak that it cannot digest this wonderful food. I feel a delicacy about having my name appear in public, but if you think it would help any poor sufferer you can use it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There are desserts and desserts. The delicious health-giving kind are told about in the little recipe book found in each package of Grape-Nuts.

IN painting the use of Turpentine saves labor and the use of Dryer saves time, but the excessive use of either destroys the paint.

Safety lies in using Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil, and having the paint thoroughly brushed out. This may require a little more time and labor, but it will pay. The paint will be satisfactory and it will last.

If interested in paint or painting, address

THE SICK CHILD.

He for whom the world was made
Cannot lift his heavy head,
All its pretty curls puffed out,
Burnt with fevers, parched with drouth.

He, the tyrant, whimsical,
With the round world for his ball,
In a dreadful patience lies,
Old since yesterday and wise.

Like a martyr on the rack
Smiles, his soft lips burnt to black,
While the fever still devours
His small body, sweet as flowers.

Dreadful patience like a sword
Stabs his mother's heart; dear Lord,
Make him naughty, wild and gay,
As he was but yesterday.

Little services he pays
With his kisses and his praise,
While his eyes are pardon still
That he's troublesome and ill.

He lies smiling with a fire
In his cheeks blown high and higher,
By the wind of fever fanned,
Lord, his kisses on my hand!

Give me back my boy, I pray;
Turbulent of yesterday.
Not this angel, like a sword
In his mother's heart, dear Lord!
—Katharine Tynan, in "The Spectator."

When four rowers are in a boat, with their backs to the bow, their simple office is to pull the oars. The steersman's office is to look ahead and work the helm. The moment that the rower turns steersman, and tries to look over his shoulder or outpull his fellow oarsmen, the boat loses headway. So you and I are placed with our backs to the future. In our hands are the oars of Christian endeavor. Let God steer the boat, and let us attend to the oars.—T. L. Cuyler.

Events and Comments.

Arrests for drunkenness during the first month of license at Rutland, Vt., numbered 68, compared with 4 in the month last year under the prohibition régime.

An English electrical engineer named Kamm has invented a typewriter that receives and prints wireless telegraph messages. It is called a zerograph, and can receive a message when no one is present to adjust it. Its inventor claims that it is impossible to intercept messages.

The duration of compulsory military service in France has steadily declined since the last empire. Under Napoleon III. the period of service was seven years; under the republic it was lowered to five, then to three, and now it is two years. If France keeps out of a serious European war it is probable that the period will soon be reduced to one year.

Agents of the American Society of Equity, a new organization, with headquarters at Indianapolis, are at work organizing local unions in different sections of the country. The society forms the farmers into a "gigantic trust" to control the prices of their products, secure equitable freight rates, influence legislation, aid in planting, market intelligently and do a banking and insurance business.

The Japanese Minister at Peking has filed a formal demand on the Chinese Foreign Office for the opening of Mukden and Tai-Tung-Chou to foreign trade. The Chinese officials replied that circumstances were not favorable to the opening of the cities mentioned. The American and British representatives are supporting Japan's demands. Minister Conger is also demanding the opening of Harbin, Manchuria.

The returns from last week's ballots in Germany show decided gains for the Socialists. Their most remarkable victories were in the kingdom of Saxony, where they elected 18 out of a total of 23 members of the Reichstag, and got rebalots in five districts. The political parties are already outlining their policies for the approaching rebalotings for members, and the situation begins to look dubious for the Liberal leaders.

On Second-day of last week Ambassador Clayton cabled the State Department that the Mexican Government had deposited to his credit $1,420,682 on account of the Pious Fund award. This promptness on the part of the Mexican Government in meeting its obligations has broken all records in arbitration. The money will be remitted to Archbishop Riordan, of San Francisco, the titular claimant, as there have been no assignments to attorneys in interest.

Notwithstanding the large reduction in the condition of the winter wheat crop during Fifth month, there is still promise of the largest yield ever known. On the basis of the government's figures as to condition and acreage, the statistician of the New York Produce Exchange estimates a crop of 781,908,000 bushels for both winter and spring, compared with 670,063,008, the actual harvest of last year, and 748,460,218 in 1901. The outlook for corn and oats is much more dubious.

Three hundred or more people lost their lives in a cloudburst that almost destroyed the town of Heppner, which is located in the Columbia River Valley, in Northwestern Oregon, one night last week. The flood came with such suddenness that the inhabitants were unable to seek places of safety, and were carried down to death by the awful rush of water. Huge boulders, weighing a ton each, were carried down by the current, and many persons were killed by being dashed against the rocky bluff.

The British Foreign Minister has announced that the Minister to Serbia had been instructed to withdraw from Belgrade for some time, on the arrival there of King Peter, and in the meanwhile to do nothing which could be construed as a recognition of the new government. France, Germany and Italy are maintaining an attitude toward Serbia similar to that of Great Britain, while Russia and Austria are prepared to recognize the new régime, although Russia appeared to have claimed that proper punishment should be inflicted.

The President of the United States received gifts from two European rulers last week. Signor Mayor des Planches, the Italian Ambassador, presented a personal gift from the King of Italy, consisting of twenty volumes of war reports of Prince Eugene of Savoy and a copy of Dante's "Divine Comedy." M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador, presented a gift from President Loubet, of France. It was a handsomely-printed and bound volume, containing the records of all Frenchmen who came to America to fight in Washington's army.

The railroads of the United States added 5,234 miles to their total mileage during the last fiscal year, a record of construction greater than for any year since 1890. Including side tracks, double tracks, etc., the total trackage is 274,195 miles. There were 41,228 locomotives and 1,640,220 cars, not including private cars, used during the year. Of these, 36,991 were in the passenger service. The total number of employees was 1,189,315. The amount paid in salaries and wages was $676,026,592. The compensation of the railway employees for 1902 is equivalent to 60.50 per cent. of the operating expenses of the railways and 39.16 per cent. of their gross earnings.

The foreign commerce of the United States will be, in the fiscal year about to end, the largest in the history of the country. Imports will, for the first time, exceed $1,000,000,000, and exports will be larger than in any preceding year except 1901. The figures which justify this assertion show the imports of eleven months ending with Fifth month, were $943,597,194, and the exports, $1,324,493,293. For twelve months, ending with Fifth month, the imports were $1,016,712,248, and the exports $1,413,733,776. As the largest imports in any earlier fiscal year were $903,320,948, in 1902, it is quite apparent the total imports of the present fiscal year will exceed those of any preceding year, and they will also pass the billion-dollar mark, since they have not fallen below $73,000,000 in any month of the past year, and were in eleven months within $57,000,000 of the billion-dollar line.

This mixed metaphor is attributed to an English clergyman: "The young men of England are the backbone of the British Empire. What we must do is to train that backbone and bring it to the front." A member of Parliament was responsible for the following: "Even if you carried these peddling little reforms, it would only be like a flea-bite in the ocean."—London Academy.

POWERFUL.

A Pure Food Drink Has Great Sustaining Power.

The sustaining power of Postum Coffee when properly cooked is greater than most people imagine, and it is well illustrated in the story told by a young Texas woman who says: "I almost lived on Postum Cereal Coffee for over a month, and there was over a week I did not eat anything at all but just drank the food drink Postum, and yet I grew stronger and gained weight.

"Our family physician examined Postum, and decided to use it altogether in place of coffee. We all think it has no equal as a nourishment for the sick, for beside being pleasant to the taste it is so strengthening. My father and mother have always been coffee drinkers, and suffered all kinds of troubles from the coffee until about a year ago a neighbor was praising Postum and mother decided to try it.

"They improved at once, and have drank Postum ever since, and mother, who used to be bothered with nervousness and sleeplessness particularly, is in splendid health now. She says the change came entirely from drinking Postum and leaving off coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Three Books You Should Have

We have three books written by the late DR. DOUGAN CLARK, Professor of Biblical Literature in Earlham College. Dr. Clark was recognized as one of the leading teachers on Holiness, and his books are full of spiritual food.

1. HOLY GHOST DISPENSATION.

This book sets forth with great clearness the joy and beauty of living in fellowship with the Holy Spirit. It should be read by all who are thirsty after the higher life. It contains 170 pages, finely printed, good paper, in strong cloth binding, price 50 cents. It treats of the following subjects: 1.—The Dispensation of the Holy Spirit; 2.—The Holy Spirit our Sanctifier; 3.—The Holy Spirit an object of Worship, Praise and Prayer; 4.—Intercessory Functions of the Holy Spirit; 5.—The Anointing and Sealing of the Spirit; 6.—The Holy Spirit's Guidance; 7.—The Striving of the Spirit; 8.—Sanctification not by Growth nor Death; 9.—Sanctification not Impeccability; 10.—Sanctification and Temptation; 11.—Be ye therefore Perfect; 12.—Preserved; 13.—A Plea for Orthodoxy; 14.—The Reckoning of Faith.

2. INSTRUCTIONS TO CHRISTIAN CONVERTS.

This book has passed through eight editions. It is one of the most valuable books to put into the hands of young Christians. The chapters are: 1.—Be Definite; 2.—Be Diligent; 3.—Be Faithful; 4.—Be Patient; 5.—Be Holy; 6.—Be Filled; 7.—Be Established. 133 pages; price 50 cents.

3. INNER AND OUTER LIFE OF HOLINESS.

This book was written just before Dr. Clark's death. In many respects it is his most spiritual work. The book has 200 pages well printed and bound; price, cloth 35 cents; leatherette 20 cents. The book treats first of INNER LIFE as a life of Peace, Faith, Full Assurance. Extinction of Selfishness, Communion with God, and Spiritual Growth. And of the OUTER LIFE: The Walk, Regulation, Habit, Meekness and Rule of Action.

SPECIAL OFFER.—The three books, in cloth binding, will be sent postpaid for $1.00.

NEED OF SELF-SACRIFICE.

As one looks round upon the community to-day, how clear the problem of hundreds of unhappy lives appears! Do we not all know men for whom it is just as clear as daylight that that is what they need, the sacrifice of themselves for other people? Rich men who with all their wealth are weary and wretched; learned men whose learning only makes them querulous and jealous; believing men whose faith is always souring into bigotry and envy,—every man knows what these men need; just something which shall make them let themselves go out into the open ocean of a complete self-sacrifice. They are rubbing and fretting and chafing themselves against the wooden wharves of their own interests, to which they are tied.

CHRISTIANITY AT WORK.

A RECENT student * of moral and religious conditions in the country districts of the United States gives, as a result of his investigations, a sad and depressing report. He says that each year sees many churches utterly die out, while the annual reports show that many others are barely alive. The struggle to keep alive is so hard that the little churches have no vigor left to carry a positive enlightening influence into the community. The aim is rather to keep in existence than to push the battle to the enemies' gates. The country church has come to be, he thinks, "something to be ministered unto rather than something to minister; something to be built up out of the community rather than something to build up the community out of it; a humble pensioner upon the people, hat in hand, begging for support, rather than a divine institution which is to bestow upon men the gift of God in Jesus Christ."

He points out that denominationalism has divided and subdivided the community into little organizations too weak to do anything more than barely live. Irregular and inefficient ministers have left the impression that Christianity is a poor, weak thing. Doctrine has been put above character until the church has sadly weakened its moral grip on men's lives. The exaltation of the clerical office has divorced the church from the common lives of the neighborhood, and finally the country church almost invariably sounds a pessimistic note. It forever dwells upon the wickedness and badness of things without making clear enough the "Good news." These are some of his counts against the country church as it is to-day.

Does he see things as they really are, or is his picture too dark? That is a question which can best be answered by the Christians in each particular community. It is probably true that there are communities where too many of these conditions prevail, and there is no question that in very many places the positive force of the Christian Church is pitifully small. But there are other communities where the little nucleus of Christians is the salt of the locality and the light of the neighborhood.

The difficulties of maintaining a vigorous spiritual church in small country districts are undoubtedly very great. The cities have been taking away from the country the flower of its youth. The farms have been falling into the hands of men who have little or none of the old Puritan blood. The hired labor of the small villages is largely immigrant. The men and the women who form the life of the church are hard-working persons, whose time is not free, and who are unable to prepare themselves for taking a large share in the aggressive and constructive work of a living church. It is not easy for those who have the work to do to read the books and periodicals which present more approved methods of Bible teaching, and the children often come up with a very feeble conception of spiritual truth.

All these difficulties are very real and hard to conquer. There is little hope of America if we cannot Christianize our country districts which feed our cities. But we must and can do it. There is a growing tendency to unite all Christians in small communities into one church. Everything must be done, as far as consistent, to encourage such unity, which means an increase of power. The larger churches must catch the spirit of the Gospel enough to share some of their means and spiritual life with the little struggling churches. How can it be done? It can be done as soon as the prosperous churches discover that it is their mission to do it. We must, too, as rapidly as it can be done, reform our antiquated methods of Bible teaching, and no longer waste our great opportunity to instruct the children, so that the Scriptures will become a real inspiration to them. That work is needed everywhere, and not alone in the country.

But, after all, the thing most needed is the preaching of a more joyous and convincing message. Few persons will continue to go to a place of worship to hear over and over again the long tale of woes and criticisms which come from so many who ought to be the heralds of "Good news." Preach the acceptable year of the Lord. Tell about beauty for ashes, and the oil of joy for mourning. Make men feel that they are in God's world, and that it is something glorious to be a Christian. Try the joy ministry, and show that Christ does something in your own life; and the plan will work either in the little community or in the great city. The common people were always glad to hear Him tell His good news of God's love and man's hope.

THE DELAWARE LYNCHING HORROR.

THERE is nothing in our world quite so terrible as a man when he is mastered by brutish passions, unless it is a mob of men who are so mastered. Many of us in this region are still too deeply shocked to speak calmly of the dreadful events which have given an appalling illustration both of the brutish man and the no less brutish mob. The depraved man who was the cause of the commotion committed an unspeakable crime. Of that fact there is no question. He was caught and lodged securely in jail to await the majestic course of the law. The honor of the State and the august power of the law might have been preserved had not a spark been flung into the tinder. While the tension of public wrath was high and every true citizen—not to say Christian—should have used all his wisdom to quiet the strained nerves of the people, a minister of the gospel fired the entire community to a white passion with a sensational sermon, during which he waved blood-spattered leaves of paper from his pulpit. His words set the town into an unreasoning commotion, and those who were eager to act felt that the benediction of the Church was promised upon the deed of vengeance at which we are still shuddering.

Lynching is always a horrible affair, but this particular case is one of the most dreadful in the long annals of lawless deeds by furious mobs. A half dozen persons were shot, a boy's life was sacrificed, and then the man who was being guarded until the law should pronounce upon him was dragged from the battered jail and chained alive to an iron stake and burned to ashes in the presence of the yelling crowd.

The world had just been shocked at the massacre of a king and queen in Servia, and we were saying to ourselves, "What a barbaric country Servia must be!" We had often read before of lynchings, but they were in localities where public sentiment was untrained and where moral ideals were not high. But this display of brute passion, of which we speak, was not in the heart of Bulgaria, it was not in a section where the spelling book is unknown. It was twenty-six miles from Philadelphia! It was prompted by a misguided man who professed to be a disciple of Jesus Christ. It was the work of men who have had the advantages of civilization, of education and of religious teaching. Altogether it is a most startling revelation of a danger which is creeping upon our country—the danger of lawlessness, the absence of fear or reverence for any authority above the will and passion of the individual or of the mob. If such an outbreak is possible here, it is possible in almost any town in these United States. There is nothing at this moment which can be said or done that can throw light into this dark side of our American civilization. It is no situation to be cured by a sudden editorial or by the resolutions of good citizens. But no thoughtful man who loves his country can afford to let such an event as this pass from his memory without leaving in his soul a new attitude of determination. The task which now confronts us is a gigantic one. If it were to call out the militia and stamp out a rebellion that would be a fairly easy matter. It is, however, the slow and gradual task of carrying the real gospel of Jesus Christ into the lives of white man and black man until we are safe from the passions of the brute embodied in human form—safe because the spirit of love and the power of self-control have taken its place.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

CALIFORNIA and Canada Yearly Meetings are both in session at this time of writing, one in the extreme Southwest and the other in the extreme Northeast of our great country. California is being held this year at El Modena, and Canada in Toronto. We shall watch with great interest to hear the outcome of the effort which was started one year ago to give Whittier College an endowment.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SEEN FROM A TRAIN ON THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

BY L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD.*

ONE can hardly keep awake all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but so much of interest presents itself on the way that one grudges the hours of darkness the secrets they conceal. Leaving New York in the evening via the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, Adirondack Division, we began our long journey overland by missing the beauties of the Valley of the Hudson, but an early riser gets a glimpse of Adirondack scenery and newly-cleared farm lands in the Empire State before crossing into Canada.

At the time of year when we made our start (March 16th) the sugar harvest from the maple groves was in full blast, and gave us an opportunity to see the sugar camps enveloped in clouds of steam which issued from the boiling sap kettles, making the camps look very spectral in the midst of their groves of gnarled old sugar maples. Passengers for the West over the Canadian Pacific Railroad, or, as it is generally called in Canada, "The C. P. R.," leave the train at Montreal Junction, so as to have plenty of time for the transfer of baggage, traps and the little belongings which may accumulate.

We had quite as much time as we wanted here, for after the train for the West from Montreal arrived at the junction it was held for two hours for the train from Halifax, N. S., which had a number of emigrants for the Northwest on board. Starting two hours behind time, which in no wise disturbed the mind of any one of the officials, we packed ourselves away for the long ride which would end with our first view of the Pacific.

The sleeping cars on the Canadian Pacific Railroad are as comfortable as such a contrivance can be, and seemed to us about six to eight inches higher and broader than the ordinary Pullman. The seats were lower, and one could sit up in the lower berth, when "made up" for the night, and have a very comfortable amount of room to spare between the top of one's head and injury in the shape of the hard-finished bird's eye maple of the upper berth. Another feature of the C. P. R. cars, which we soon discovered, was the triple windows. The ordinary double sash of the Pullman was supplemented by a third, which was fastened to the outside of the car with set screws, and made perfectly air and water tight. When we were passing through a temperature of 10 to 20 degrees below zero, on the prairies of the Northwest Territory, we found the three sashes, and the air space between, none too thick a partition to have between ourselves and the cold breath of such an atmosphere. Another advantage we noticed was that in spite of the intense cold, no frost ever collected on the glass, and we were at all times able to see quite clearly.

Our first day on the train found us looking out on a country which seemed to be very fertile, and from the small lots into which the farms were divided by the line fences, we judged the population must be French, with their custom of dividing the paternal acres among the sons, and fencing off each portion on a new division, in full force. The houses were largely built of logs, in most cases whitewashed, and with roofs picturesquely curved to hold the snow for the sake of warmth. Although the snow was nearly gone almost the only conveyances we saw were sleighs drawn by two horses.

In the more recently cleared portions fences made of stumps of trees, with the roots set on edge, added a picturesque touch to a nicely cultivated field, while the small farm houses built with all the outbuildings connected in such a way that one could pass from the dwelling house to the stable through wood house, chicken house and pig sty, during the heavy snows of winter, gave the homes a very compact appearance.

One has not progressed very far along the C. P. R. before the most beautiful characteristics of this charming route, east of Manitoba, manifests itself, and we see the beginning of the almost endless chain of lakes by which the road runs until it emerges on the flat prairies of the Northwest.

Soon after leaving Montreal Junction for some ten miles we skirt the shore of the lake of Two Mountains, where many Canadians from Montreal and Ottawa spend their summers, and this lake is followed by others, named and unnamed, in an almost continuous chain.

The small towns which we pass are either old French or of very recent growth, and mostly dependent on the C. P. R. for their existence.

Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion of Canada, naturally interested us very much, but from the train we could see little of interest except the very recent and hastily constructed wooden houses of the section over which the great fire had raged by which the city was so nearly wiped out. One great exception to these insignificant buildings which we could see was the imposing edifice of the Houses of Parliament, which, situated on the bluff above the river, makes a magnificent appearance as the train swings into the Central station. From Ottawa we continue our journey along the beautiful valley of the Ottawa River, which was still frozen, disclosing the winter roads of this section stretching over its smooth surface, and marked by rows of evergreen trees to indicate the sleigh tracks, which might be obliterated by fresh fallen snow. This is a charmingly wild district, with glimpses of the river here and there, or a tributary or lake, with now and again a little farm or a tiny village, till darkness shut us in from all the passing scenery.

Next morning found us on a siding in the midst of a wild region, with a report of a freight wreck some seventeen miles ahead, but a very complacent conductor and station agent, who entertained us with tales of the fish and game to be had hereabout. The country seemed wild enough for anything, with young spruce and hemlocks and balsam fir growing among the rocks and stumps, or the half-burnt logs of heavy fallen timber.

On reaching the wreck, which we did after a five hours' delay, we found a freight train had broken in two coming down a grade, smashed a car, and that some Manitoba wheat, with which it was laden, had been strewn over the tracks. As in nearly every other instance of delay, the length of time taken to straighten out the tangle seemed to us entirely out of proportion with the amount to be done. There seemed to be no strenuous effort made to accelerate anything on the C. P. R.

The wreck passed, we continued through the beautiful wild country, with charming views of lakes and forest—ideal places for camping in summer. Here and there a little town, grown up around some mill which had been established where abundant water power suggested an economical method of converting the Western wheat into flour on its journey to the East; or more often still where saw mills for the seemingly unending supply of logs to be drawn from surrounding forests have attracted some little settlement. Some exceptions to these manufacturing towns are found in the old centers of the fur trade as at Fort William, formerly an important post of the Hudson Bay Company, where the hunters and factors of the company used to meet and exchange their wares, and tell the tales of adventure and hardship which lend the glamour of romance to the very name of this old chartered company.

The glory of Fort William as a center of the fur trade has departed, and the company's old fur house is used as an engine house for the great coal docks, and some of the world's largest grain elevators overshadow the little old low buildings of the traders, while the busy stir of modern commerce, with the loading and unloading steamers, would present a strange sight to some Rip Van Winkle of the former days.

At Rat Portage is the outlet for the Lake of the Woods, and the latter, breaking through a narrow rocky rim, and falling into the Winnipeg River, creates one of the greatest water powers in the world. The Lake of the Woods thus forms a gigantic mill pond of some 3,000 square miles' area, and here have been established pulp mills, saw mills and flour mills of large capacity, and at Keewatin, a few miles further on, is the flour mill operated by the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, and which we were told was the largest single mill in the world, but we are not sure that our information was reliable.

From here the country traversed by the C. P. R. gradually flattens out into the prairie, and following the Red River we reach Winnipeg, the capital of the province of Manitoba, and spoken of with local pride and affection as "The Peg."

At Winnipeg we saw a splendid specimen of the Northwest mounted police, the body of frontier watchmen which furnished so many of the Canadian troops who made such a name for themselves in South Africa. The specimen we saw was at least six feet two inches in height, and well proportioned, with a striking uniform of fur cap and coat and gloves, mostly black with brown trimmings. Underneath he wore a heavy blue cloth uniform, with lighter trimmings, and made a fine figure of a man among the crowd of loafers on the station platform.

Winnipeg is now the chief depot of the Hudson Bay Company, and here are its stores and warehouses, and also a goodly number of thriving business concerns, for it is the center whence the development of the great Northwest of Canada is being pushed.

From Winnipeg we continue our journey over the prairies of Manitoba and Assiniboia provinces, where the train runs for days together across a country either quite level or gently undulating, with stations twenty or thirty miles apart, consisting in many instances of one house and a grain elevator, while for many a mile there would be absolutely no house in sight. Indeed, one station which was regularly on the time-table consisted of a sign board nailed to a telegraph pole, and a short siding with nothing else in sight.

Signs of cultivation were everywhere present in the golden stubble which we could see above the snow, stretching away from the black fire guard as far as the eye could see.

This fire guard consists of a strip of land some seventy-five yards wide on each side of the track, which is kept burnt bare of vegetation, and is designed to prevent the spread of fire from the sparks dropped by the locomotives. One can easily picture the terrors of a prairie fire when fields which in summer are covered with the waving grain, the only treasure of the inhabitants, are seen stretching in every direction.

Crossing these prairies the trains are nearly always delayed on account of the effect which the water found on the prairies has on the boilers of the locomotives, rendering it very difficult to keep up the steam pressure, and our train was no exception, finally getting what they called outlawed, which meant over twelve hours late.

Colgary is the last of the prairie towns of any size, and is charmingly situated on the Bow River, with a background of the foothills of the Rockies. Here among the cowboys and ranch owners, who are English, American, Mexican, half-breed Indians, and native Canadians, we saw some Russian peasants, who were pointed out to us as Doukhobors. Very strange they looked in their short-waisted, long-skirted coats, with unkempt hair falling from under their caps, round blue eyes set in weather-beaten faces, and a most picturesque if heterogeneous gathering they all made on the platform of this little frontier town.

And now comes the real treat of the long journey—the mountains. Just in the late afternoon we entered the gap, and as we follow the Bow River the grand peaks and ranges close in round us, obliterating our track and everywhere hemming in the view, till one wonders which way the railroad must turn to get any further.

Our train being so late we found that we would pass through some of the best of the scenery by night, so stopped off at Banff, intending to take the train which left Montreal on the day after us, and which was due at Banff in the early morning.

The C. P. R. hotel at Banff was still closed for the winter, but the "Sanitarium" welcomed us to the best of their ability, and the sleigh ride from the station of about three-quarters of a mile ended our day's traveling very pleasantly.

A plunge bath in hot sulphur water was a great luxury after the long days and nights on the train, and we enjoyed it to the utmost. The hot sulphur springs at Banff have made the place a famous resort for invalids, as well as mountain climbers, and we could well imagine a speedy recovery from any trouble which involved drinking warm sulphur water, especially when one had such air to breath as we found next morning at 6.30 when we were out to catch the first glint of sunlight on the mountain tops.

We were well repaid for the effort by the views of the mountains, with their tops glowing in the early morning sun, while later our path through the snow some two feet deep was made to sparkle as the sunshine found its way through the rocky barriers and fell on the valley below.

The hot sulphur pool, with its snow-laden, rocky edge, was a strange contrast, and the tales of snow-balling while bathing which we had heard seemed easier of belief.

The whole of this section of the Canadian Rockies has been turned into a national reservation, and here the Dominion Government keep their famous herd of buffalo, and fine specimens of elk, moose and other of our native animals which are so fast becoming extinct.

The obliging Canadian Pacific Railroad gave us ample opportunity to see all these things, for the train was so late that the first section reached Banff at 4 in the afternoon, instead of 7.30 in the morning, as we had expected.

We were fortunate in finding a regular freight train caboose attached to the first section of our train, and from the lookout box, in which the train crew obligingly gave us seats, we had every opportunity for seeing the magnificent views of Cascade Temple, Pilot and many other of the famous peaks which towered above us in all their grandeur of rocky sides and snow-clad tops, and dwarfing nearby objects, so that the train and track seemed very toys, and man and all his works but pigmy things.

No pen can adequately describe the wonders of this region, which succeeded each other in overpowering majesty as we passed on the way to the coast through Rocky, Selkirk, Gold and Coast ranges, all with marvelous beauties, similar yet characteristic. To be torn away from such picture spots as Logan, Field and Glacier was like being rudely jostled out of fairyland; but succeeding pictures of equal loveliness finally left on the mind a composite photograph of wonderful snow-capped mountains, densely wooded lower slopes and valleys, rushing mountain streams, and over all sunshine sparkling in the frosty air and reflected in dazzling radiance from the great fields of snow.

Indeed, the whole journey from Banff to Vancouver remains in our minds as a succession of marvels which no camera can ever reproduce, and which must be seen in their own magnificence if one would be able even to listen to a description of any one part intelligently.

We reached Vancouver and boarded our steamer to cross the world's greatest ocean, still in a sort of dream of the splendors we had just seen, and our eyes were continually turning back as we steamed out of the harbor, hoping for a last glimpse of snowy summits we had left behind.

TEMPERANCE IN THE CHURCHES.

BY ANNA MAY PEMBERTON.

How necessary it is that Christians be on the right side of all questions! It can scarcely be doubted that the slavery question could have been settled without the war of the 60's had the professing Christians, as a body, throughout the land, been on the side of right. Many ministers were afraid to express their conscientious convictions on the subject for fear of losing their places and salaries. Church doors were closed against anti-slavery speeches and lecturers, and efforts were made to exclude all discussion or agitation in reference to the subject. How gladly would some religious organizations blot out all remembrance of this now! There were multitudes that lost faith in the teachings of Christianity, for lack of practice, when it came to the great question of slavery. It had a tendency to drive men from the Church.

A certain professor, in a theological seminary, gave this advice to his students: "If you hope to be settled over intelligent, cultivated and prosperous parishes, you must be careful to keep aloof from the exciting questions of the day." In this respect, however, Friends have occupied a vantage ground. Kennedy, in "American Reformers," says: "The Quaker ministers were more free to speak their convictions, when and where they pleased, than the salaried preachers of other denominations."

The mission of the Church is to make the world better. Christianity means much only as it better human life and conditions of society. In no better way can the Church show to the world its real belief in practice than by espousing great principles and carrying them forward. Even opposing forces have more real respect for us, when we are pressing forward the principles we profess to believe in. They sneer at us when we sever our connection with each other for some trivial matter. We must stand together.

In anti-slavery days there was a kind of abolitionism that did not abolish slavery and would not have done so in centuries. So it is to-day. There are people that believe in temperance, and would like to see it succeed, but they do not lift their hands against the mighty evil. In a certain village some temperance people were making an effort in behalf of local work, when a minister in one of the churches stated plainly that he was afraid to work in the cause for fear of offending some of his leading members. How many a minister has shrunk from duty because he knew if he spoke the truth as God gave it he would make himself unpopular with the members of his church! In many places, the Church professing to follow the teachings of Jesus, is leagued with the liquor power, and its members are afraid to act. "The church cannot survive agitation on the subject," they tell us. "If we agitate, certain of our members will go elsewhere." Some churches become more interested in numbers than in righteous work. "We know that temperance is needed more than all else; but we could not accomplish anything if we should try," they say.

We are also told: "Do not be disturbed; it takes time. No great question is settled in a day." Settled in a day! People have talked this way for almost a century. Then they tell us: "We do not want temperance lectures in the churches. They make divisions. Some of the people are too radical and say things some do not like." Where are temperance lectures to be given if not in the churches? Shall we send them into the street or into halls, where a fee is required? What are churches for if questions of public reform are to be excluded? Temperance in the churches! The greatest boon that can come to the American churches is the blessing that shall result from having brought about a great reform. The greatest error is to be asleep on questions that have to do with the betterment of the State and the community. Let the churches proclaim silence on this subject and the liquor dealers have the greatest victory that can come to them. Let the churches arise to put down this great evil and the hope of its perpetual existence is gone forever.

A district judge was to be elected in a certain State. One candidate was a sworn enemy of temperance, and had been the means of defeating a bill of the temperance people before the State Legislature. The temperance people sent out letters, asking their people not to vote for this enemy of temperance, but to support their candidate, who was in sympathy with their efforts. The same day these were sent out the saloon element sent out letters, asking their adherents to vote for their candidate, regardless of party. They left party and did so. What did the temperance people do? They would not scratch their tickets and voted with their party, regardless of the temperance principle at stake. The enemy of temperance was elected and the liquor people said, "We knew they thought more of 'party' than their cause."

Partisanship, in our time, is, in a large sense, the enemy of liberty, of thought and action. Principle must be put ahead of party always. The temperance reform will advance swiftly toward victory when those interested in the great subject vote their principle. Parties change, but principles never. A party may represent one principle to-day, another to-morrow. James Russell Lowell says, "Man is more than institutions; better rot beneath the sod than be true to Church and State, while we are doubly false to God."

The liquor men will find that the temperance people will finally understand their interests and be true to them. Let the question be settled peaceably, so far as in us lies, by the churches marching forward under the banner of this reform.

Is there within the Friends' Church to-day a love for the cause that will aid effectually in driving this evil from the land? Do we, as a Church, have faith in God, to believe in its final overthrow, and to work successfully for the speedy abolition of the traffic? The liquor element cares little for our resolutions as long as there is not within us an element of strength to put it down. The American people and the American Churches have played with this question too long.

Who would be the one to say that the church is not the place for such agitation or discussion? Times change. One generation declares against such agitation, but future generations look with pride upon many things that men in the past have condemned.

There are two ideas of the use of church buildings—one is that they are a sort of holy place to meet to worship in on the Sabbath day, or do work distinctly connected with church lines. Another is that the church should be the place for all reform. We cannot separate reform and Christianity. Every church should be a center for work, where every temperance worker will find sympathy, and out from these places should go an influence and power that will put an end to the traffic.

We have nothing to fear from reform, even though some people may say things a little different from what we should wish. The Church has always had more to fear from deadness and disinterest on a should go an influence and power that will put an great question than from an overflow of enthusiasm or misdirected effort. If the enemy, by means of some poor misguided person, can prejudice or put to silence the influential part of the community or Church upon this question, and bring about an indifference and feeling of disinterest, we shall accomplish nothing.

Let the Friends' churches everywhere be open for this reform. Let the people not be afraid of discussion. Let us seek for divine wisdom, and, in all our work, give no unnecessary offence to any; but never let principle slumber on a question on which depends the happiness and well being of millions of our fellow men. We may differ some as to methods, but if we shall accomplish anything we must not only be uncompromisingly opposed to the liquor traffic, but determined upon the speedy abolition of the same. We must make no excuse for its existence at any time or place.

It is fair to ask, "How are we as individuals, members of Friends' Church, upon this subject?" Have we taken action, as a body, and called the attention of our sister Churches to this subject, simply to ease our consciences and to have the consolation that we are making an effort? Shall the evil still hold dominion over us? Are we prepared to do and die as martyrs for the cause if need be? Our measure will be the measure of sacrifice. The times call for men and women who will lay their all upon the altar of this reform, who will risk reputation, property and even life itself, if need be, for the success of this great issue, and who believe implicitly in the final consummation of victory.

Some Views on Present Topics.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE EVANGELIST.

BY E. HOWARD BROWN.

1. The place. 2. The duties. 3. Support. In Eph. 4: 11 Paul tells us that Christ gave some apostles, some prophets, some teachers, some evangelists and some pastors for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.

The evangelist is therefore a minister. His gift is the gift of the ministry. Timothy, although located at Ephesus as pastor, is urged by Paul, in his second letter, to do the work of an evangelist, and to make full proof of his ministry.

In the study of the word and the history of the early Church the evangelist was the forerunner of the Church. As John the Baptist was the forerunner of Christ, preparing the way of the Lord, so the evangelist has gone out and prepared the way for the organized Church. The evangelist was more of a missionary. He declared the way of salvation. He saw men saved and gathered into the Church.

When the Church was organized, the pastor, teacher and the exhorter fed the flock, edified and taught them. The evangelist is still a forerunner of the Church, and should fill his place—a home missionary, a winner of souls.

The evangelist is not and ought not to be the overseer of the church or home ministry, pastors or teachers. The duty of the evangelist is to enter new fields and outlying districts and hold gospel services for the unsaved. His ministry ought to be a full gospel—repentance, confession of sin, restitution, the new birth, or justification; the baptism with the Holy Ghost, or sanctification. There ought to be plain, definite sermons on sin, the Christian life, and entire consecration, so that the converts would not be one-sided, but would realize that in becoming a Christian they were renouncing the world, the flesh and the devil. This would no doubt save many of them from the modern sin of backsliding.

I have been running a Cypher's Incubator this summer, and have about 300 little chickens. I have learned some valuable lessons for the Church. In my first hatch the eggs were not warm enough, and at the critical time remained cool one evening too long. This caused a loss of many possible chicks. Some were weak and others crippled.

Evangelists must be spirit-filled. Revivals must have warmth enough to cause conviction. And then there is a critical time when, unless this fire is kept up, conviction leaves the meeting and there are no results.

On the other hand, my next hatch was kept too warm. The last few days were very hot, and we had chicks sooner, but many weak and crippled and soon died. Much as emotion and enthusiasm are needed, and spiritual power is prayed for, I am afraid it is true that many of our so-called "grand revivals" and glorious victories are caused by over-heating, too much creaturely activity, excitement, emotions, etc. Converts come out early, and seem strong, but a few days in the brooder (the Church), in a cooler atmosphere, under ordinary services, and they weaken and die.

There is need of fire, of enthusiasm, of emotion and tears, of spiritual power, especially and necessarily. But there is a regulator known as the Holy Spirit upon God's part, and one on our side known as common sense. A great deal of so-called spiritual power is undoubtedly excitement, as is proven by the results. Some have claimed that if the Church could keep up a revival the year round these converts would all live and flourish. You might as well talk of keeping the chickens in the incubator all summer with the thermometer at 103 or 104. After twenty-four hours from the hatching the chickens must be removed and placed in a warm place, but in a much cooler one, and gradually lower the temperature until they can stand outside air, sunshine and shade. What we need in revival work is good revivals, well guarded and spirit-led to get good results, and then a good warm meeting to feed and care for the converts. Within twenty-four hours get the converts away from the evangelist. The chick must learn that he is not a part of the incubator, but a separate living individual. So the convert must learn that he is just beginning a new life and needs to be fitted and tempered to suit his surroundings. The brooder is made on purpose, and is planned for the very best interest of the chicks. The Church is God's plan. It was planned on purpose, and is for the best interest of each convert. The sooner a convert learns that he will come in contact with cold, formal church members, with the scoffing world, with the tempter and deceiver, the better it will be with him. The Church necessarily cannot run and keep up such a high atmosphere, but most of our meetings could stand perhaps a few degrees and not injure us or the converts either.

The Church needs converts born of God, born from above, born from conviction and a need of Christ, and never will we see strong, healthy, spiritual converts that can stand alone and suffer and lack and give up as well as shout and sing and work until God's plan is carried not only through the revival, but into the Church.

The duty of the evangelist toward the work done is that of an organizer. He should carefully turn the hearts of the converted from himself to the workers who are to follow.

So often the "modern" evangelist carries the hearts of the converts entirely away, and during the meetings many become dissatisfied with the local workers. This ought not to occur. The evangelist, if he have a place in the Church, is not to estrange or separate the people from the local ministry, but to unite them. Each man should have his place and fill it, and no jealousy or strife should ever occur between them.

The evangelistic committee should control the evangelists. This will assist a man to find a new field and will make it unnecessary for an evangelist to jump from Ohio to California, or California to Iowa, or Iowa to New England for another appointment. It will also make it unnecessary for an evangelist to attend all the yearly meetings every fall so as to advertise himself for work. The committee knows the work, and under the new Discipline our committees may soon be able to know the evangelists, so that the two may be brought together without turning our yearly meetings into a kind of exhibit. Committees should support evangelists and see that they are well paid, but do not allow a meeting to put forth all its financial effort in one channel.

The Church ought to be under obligations to the evangelist as well as to the pastor; but at the same time should have the same authority over his movements.

Our meetings ought not to need the evangelist. The Home and Foreign Missionary work of the Church ought to use every evangelist. And if they could and would the gospel would be preached to all nations. If the poor, backsliding meetings of our country could look after themselves, and let the host of enthusiastic, spirit-filled evangelists be turned into these fields, instead of returning sad and discouraged from a year's work among backsliders and hardened, self-righteous sinners, they might be seen returning bearing many precious sheaves.

I believe it was and is God's plan for the evangelist to lead the organized Church into the uttermost parts of the world, as they went out into the West and carried Quakerism into the different States, saw meeting after meeting, yearly meeting after yearly meeting established, until John Henry Douglass, our veteran evangelist, standing upon the Pacific coast, can look back in his declining years and see that he with others have been the forerunners of the organized Church. May God save our Church from the professional evangelist, the church parasite. But may He make of our evangelists John the Baptists, forerunners and missionaries.

Pray for us as evangelists, that while we preach death to self and the baptism of the Holy Ghost, that we may be sure that we are dead and stay dead. I firmly believe a year or two in settled pastoral work would wonderfully help many of our evangelists both in their work and in the end to be gained.

It is not my strength that grows, so much as God's strength in me, which is given more abundantly as the days roll. It is so given on one condition. If my faith has laid hold of the infinite, the exhaustless, the immortal energy of God, unless there is something fearfully wrong about me, I shall be getting purer, nobler, wiser, more observant of his will; gentler, like Christ; every day fitter for His service, and for larger service as the days increase.—Maclaren.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON II.

SEVENTH MONTH 12, 1903.

SAUL CHOSEN KING.

1 Samuel 10: 17-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is our King, he will save us.—Isa. 33: 22.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 6.—Saul chosen King. 1 Sam. 10: 17-27.
Third-day, Seventh mo. 7.—Saul comes to Samuel. 1 Sam. 9: 1-14.
Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 8.—Saul indicated. 1 Sam. 9: 15-22.
Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 9.—Anointing of Saul. 1 Sam. 10: 1-9.
Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 10.—Samuel's exhortation. 1 Sam. 12: 6-15.
Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 11.—Laws for the King. Deut. 17: 14-20.
First-day, Seventh mo. 12.—Christian loyalty. 1 Pet. 2: 11-17.

The date of the occurrence of the episode described in the present lesson is uncertain. Probably about 1079 or 1037 B. C. The place was Mizpeh, which was probably not far from Ramah, and therefore within about six miles north or northwest of Jerusalem. There were several Mizpehs in the Old Testament. Samuel was about 70 years old, Saul about 40, and David about 12.

In chapters 8 to 10 we have an account of some incidents in the life of Saul which give an idea of his fitness for the position of king. They illustrate his character and show him to have been persevering, modest, prudent, trustworthy and religious. As a warrior, and as a physically strong man, he was pre-eminent. Saul was the son of Kish, who seems to have been a small farmer who lived at Gibeah, in the tribe of Benjamin, about 4 miles north of Jerusalem and 2 south of Ramah.

Having described the incidents which happened to Saul, and the circumstances by which Samuel became acquainted with him, the narrative of how Saul became king is resumed where it was dropped in chapter 8.

17. "And Samuel called the people together." The assembly which through its representative elders had asked for a king. (1 Sam. 8: 4.) It was composed of all male Israelites of 20 years old and upward. (Num. 1: 3.) "Its functions were rather to accept the will of Jehovah than to originate measures of its own." Compare 2 Sam. 5: 1; 1 Chron. 29: 22; 1 Kings 12: 20; Jud. 20: 1, etc.

18. "And said." Doubtless only a very brief summary is here given. "Out of the hand of all the kingdoms that oppressed you." Revised Version.

19. "Rejected your God." Not formally, but in reality. This was done by wishing for a king, in accepting whom the direct rule of God would be cast off. "And ye have said unto him." This was done in speaking to Samuel (1 Sam. 8: 19); and this was virtually speaking to God, as Samuel was recognized as being God's representative. "By your tribes and your thousands." The nation was naturally divided first into tribes, and these into families. The "thousands" probably corresponds to families. Compare Jud. 6: 15; Josh. 22: 14.

20. Samuel knew the warning he had given would not be heeded, but it was needful to give it in order to place the responsibility where it belonged. He now proceeds without further delay to go on with the choice. While not told in so many words that the selection was made by lot, that method was evidently meant to be understood in the narrative. The method may have been something like the following: the names of the tribes were written on separate stones or pieces of parchment, and then all were placed in a bag, and then the priest thrust in his hand, and in the presence of all drew out a stone or piece of parchment. The one first drawn forth in this instance bore the name of Benjamin. The fact that this tribe was a small one prevented any jealousy between the great tribes.

21. The same process was repeated until the family of Kish was reached and Saul's name was brought out. The account is evidently condensed. Why should this method have been allowed when Saul was already chosen? The only answer is that it probably was necessary in those days that the people should have some visible token that Saul was the chosen man. The method by lot was widely recognized in antiquity. Compare Prov. 16: 33; also Prov. 18: 18; Joel 3: 3; Luke 1: 9; Acts 1: 26. With the present amount of revelation such methods are not only not needed, but are positively hurtful. "He could not be found." Probably a natural feeling of modesty made him act thus.

22. "Enquired of the Lord further." Through the Urim and Thummin (Ex. 28: 30; Num. 27: 21). It is not known how this was done. "Is there yet a man to come hither?" Revised Version. The idea is they were almost in despair. "The stuff." The baggage of those who had come to Mizpeh to attend the assembly.

23. "He was higher," etc. Compare 1 Sam. 9: 2. In antiquity the heroes are all represented as of large size. In modern times intellect is the first qualification. Napoleon, Wellington, Grant, Gladstone, were all men of average height or under.

24. "And Samuel said," etc. Compare Deut. 17: 15. "God save the King!" Literally, "Let the King live." Compare the French "Vive le Roi!"

25. "The manner of the kingdom." That which answered to what we call a charter or constitution. "Laid it up before the Lord." Possibly put it beside the ark.

26. "Went home." There was nothing to call him out just at that time. The simplicity of life at this time is thus shown. "A band of men." "A host." Those whose hearts had been touched by God so that they gave their allegiance to Saul.

27. "The children of Belial." Not a proper name, but meaning worthlessness. There are always some such. Not to give presents indicates a rejection of Saul. He wisely paid no attention to this.

Every word, thought and deed has its influence upon the destiny of man. Every life, well spent or ill spent, bears with it a long train of consequences, extending through generations yet unborn.—Samuel Smiles.

TOPIC FOR SEVENTH MONTH TWELFTH.

WHAT THE HOLY SPIRIT CAN DO FOR ME.

John 16: 5-15.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 6.—Anointing me. 1 John 2: 20-27.
Third-day, Seventh mo. 7.—Guiding me aright. Isa. 58: 9-11.
Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 8.—Witnessing my adoption. 1 John 5: 7-12.
Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 9.—Making me rejoice. Acts 13: 48-52.
Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 10.—Giving power for service. Luke 24: 49-53.
Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 11.—Is a divine Being. 1 Cor. 3: 16, 17.

The true messenger makes conspicuous not himself, but his message. God was revealed to man in the old dispensation through the Spirit (1 Cor. 2: 10; 2 Pet. 1: 21), and became known to man by this revelation, while the Holy Spirit was Himself less known. In the present time, He is the abiding representative of the Godhead, and the Gospel of John is a letter of introduction for this Divine Ambassador. Active before, He was not fully recognized until this wonderful discourse of Christ described His relations and work.

People still disagree in some particulars concerning Him, but the teaching seems clear that He is the first visitant to the heart of man, convicting in respect of sin, demanding righteousness, and bringing to view an impending judgment (16: 8-11). Those who accept and are born of the Spirit (3: 5) receive Him (Acts 19: 2: "When ye believed," not "since" as in the old version), as an abiding Comforter (14: 16). They believe and are baptized with the one saving baptism (Mark 16: 16; Eph. 4: 5). Thus baptized with the Spirit, they are called to walk in newness of life, being continually renewed unto knowledge after the image of Christ (Col. 3: 10; Rom. 8: 29.) Ignorance or weak faith may defer the filling with the Spirit, yet it is intended to be both immediate and permanent (Acts 6: 3, 5; 11: 24), and is to be received by all (Eph. 5: 18).

As Comforter or Helper, He empowers for witnessing (Acts 1: 8), and for work (Acts 2: 4, 14; 3: 6). As Guide, He leads into all truth (—, 16: 13), and into fruitful fields of service (Acts 8: 29). He is Teacher of the heretofore unrevealed mysteries of the kingdom (16: 12, 13), thus continuing His work of former times (1 Cor. 2: 10). Not only so, but that which is to come is declared (16: 13) to those who "have ears to hear," and to each there is an apportioning of the things that our Lord would bestow (16: 15).

And in all things Christ is glorified; so that the proof of guidance by the Spirit—the fruits whereby the truly Spirit-filled shall be known—is the exaltation of Him who sends the Spirit forth, and who is Himself revealed continually in all that He does.

Whether we ourselves shall be so baptized, filled and empowered depends upon our choice, whether we will—or will not—have this Man to reign over us; and "no man can serve two masters."

Correspondence.

Perhaps some of the readers of this may have been expecting to hear from us for some time. But the days in England were busy ones. Much of our time was prearranged, and we found but little time for writing. We arrived in England from Dublin by way of Holyhead, and went immediately to the home of Wm. King Baker, the author of the "Life of John Dorland." While there we had good service in the morning meetings for worship, as well as in the adult school for men and women. We spent the time preceding the yearly meeting in London, having services at Acton, Willesden and Tottenham. Then to the long-looked-for time of yearly meeting, in which we were much interested. About ten days of sittings. After yearly meeting we visited Saffron Walden, Tunbridge Wells and Brighton, leaving for Norway the morning of the 9th inst., and arrived in Stavanger at 4 a. m. of the 10th. We were kindly met at the steamer by the son of Thorstein Bryne, who had waited for the arrival of the boat from 11 o'clock p.m. We were late. A strong north wind delayed our vessel, although she was an exceedingly fine one. But the wind was very boisterous, and the old north sea seemed very angry that night. So wild was it that we could not be on deck, for the sea entirely covered it at times. We realized we were nearing the land of the Midnight Sun, as it did not grow at all dark, only a little dim, while the full moon rose over the Eastern stretch of water, bringing with it a halo of light. The white-capped waves plunged and foamed after each other in the silvery light, when suddenly there arose just ahead a great light, from, it seemed, beneath the waves. It rose and fell with the sea, now seen, then again out of sight. Presently we were near enough to see that it came from a small sailboat known as a "pilot-boat." They had ventured out far from land, with a coast pilot, ready to furnish any vessel with safe men for the guidance into the harbor. But we had our shore pilot on board, and did not need to take another. So our engines began to move, and soon we had left the little craft in the dusk and storm. Our hearts nearly misgave us when we saw it was left alone, but we were assured they were accustomed to such treatment, and were not at all afraid out on the great waters. It spoke a very sweet lesson to our soul; we thought they must be frightened, but no, they had been tried so often, they did not mind it now, like one, who at his Master's call, ventures out on the great sea of life, having with him the great Captain of our salvation. Many ships he may hail; some may already be prepared, and some may feel they do not need a pilot, passing him by. But, like the North Sea pilot-boat, he only lies by till some other storm-tossed one may be sighted. Yet, again, the lesson came. When the sea is most stormy and the waves most boisterous, it is then, if not at other times, the wayworn mariner may desire a pilot. How needful that he who bears the precious message should be where the storms are hardest. Being injured himself, and confident, he is able to outstride the waves of life, and lend a hand to struggling souls for the haven of rest. We said, "O Lord, do thou let us grow more confident in trial, until thou canst send us forth as messengers of thine. And do thou be with us and we shall not fear." So we landed in Norway. Sea-tossed and weary, we were conveyed to the meeting house of Friends, where kind friends were waiting to receive us. We had the acceptable company of Joseph G. Alexander, an English Friend, who came to attend Stavanger Annual Meeting, and spend a short time visiting meetings in Norway and Denmark. Also John Lundquist, who came from Douglas, Alaska, to be with us during the summer months, acting as our interpreter. Our party of four is comfortably located in pleasant rooms of the meeting house, where Stavanger Friends have so kindly sent us a woman Friend to care for us, and are so pleasantly entertaining us. We will attend the annual meeting, held at Stavanger, to-morrow, and soon will be sailing to the northward, where we purpose visiting the people of Lofoden Islands, returning southward as the winter approaches.

There is a wide open door for service in Norway. Friends have expressed their appreciation of our prospect of working amongst them this summer. While in the North, I, with my interpreter, expect to be among the fisherman, while our wives will be in their homes among the women and children. We have had much encouragement to go to these open-hearted people, and we go in His name, trusting that many may receive the glad tidings of salvation, and be established in His word. We much appreciate the prayers and sympathy extended us by our dear friends in America while on this mission of service for our Master in Norway and Sweden.

Letters will reach us while in Norway in care of Thorstein Bryne, Stavanger, Norway.

CHARLES AND MAY REPROGLE.

Stavanger, Norway, Sixth month 12th, 1903.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Allen Jay, of Richmond, Ind., preached at the funeral of Asa Talbert, at West Elkton, Ohio, on the 7th ult.

The present issue of the "British Friend" is the best we have ever seen. It is a great number every way.

Emory J. Rees and wife, who have for sometime been engaged in mission work in South Africa, are at home at Ridge Farm, Ill.

George McGraw attended the regular First-day morning service at Fountain City, Ind., and attended an evening service at New Garden, the 21st ult.

Nellie, wife of Levi D. Barr, with her youngest child, is visiting with her parents, who live in Newberg, and will attend Oregon Yearly Meeting.

Prof. Willard O. Trueblood, principal of Vermilion Academy, Vermilion Grove, Ill., is taking work at Chicago University during the summer vacation.

Fred Groff, of Newberg, Oregon, who has been in Los Angeles the past winter, has been quite sick for three or four weeks, but is now convalescing.

Evi Sharpless is laboring in the limits of Sterling Quarterly Meeting, Kansas. He attended and had acceptable service in the meeting at Sterling the 7th ult., and is now at Hoisington, Kansas.

Abram Fisher, of Rich Square Monthly Meeting, N. C., sailed for the British Isles on the 23d ult. He holds a minute for service, and expects to visit meetings in Dublin and London Yearly Meetings during the summer.

John Snavelly, of Cherokee, Okla., will be absent from his home for a month or six weeks, attending to work on his farm east of Pond Creek. During his absence William Wooton, of Wichita, will fill his place in the Cherokee Meeting.

At Whitewater Quarterly Meeting, held in Richmond, Ind., the 6th ult., Frances W. Thomas, an aged minister from Dunreith, Ind., preached with great power. He acceptably attended East Main Street Meeting on First-day morning.

The Friends at Earlham, Ia., have begun work on their meeting house. They are remodelling the old house and erecting an addition, which will make the building quite modern. They are arranging to heat it with a furnace and light it with gas.

John Wilhelm Rowntree, after spending eight weeks in Chicago undergoing very severe medical treatment, sailed for home by the Celtic on the 26th. He is still suffering somewhat from the treatment, but his sight has been materially improved.

Three members were received by letter at the last monthly meeting at Los Angeles. Two were young women, one from the Methodists, and the other from the Church of Christ. T. J. Kelley, a returned Methodist missionary from Guatemala, was the third.

Harry R. Keates sailed for Liverpool on the S. S. Campania the 27th ult. He expects to return in about three months and take up work in America as the Lord may direct. Letters may be addressed to him care of Isaac Sharp, 12 Bishopsgate Street, Without, London, E. C.

New Garden Monthly Meeting, held at Beach Grove, Wayne County, Indiana, the 20th ult., was attended by George McGraw, a minister from Nebraska, whose Gospel service was with power and very acceptable. The meeting adjourned to meet at Fountain City, Seventh month 18th.

Under the direction of Levi R. Lupton, of Ohio, a camp meeting will be held at Marion, Ind., from Seventh month 17th to the 26th. The circular of announcement states that "the full gospel of justification, sanctification as a second work of grace, divine healing, the pre-millennial second coming of Christ and systematic tithing will be preached."

Albert Syze is now located in the meeting at Bolton, Mass., having recently removed his family to that place from Yorktown Heights, N. Y. His services are much appreciated, since prolonged illness in the family of Alice M. Dow has prevented her from attending the meetings for some time.

At the spring meeting of College Park Association, San José, Cal., Joel Bean read a paper in which he set forth what College Park Association stands for. It is kindly in spirit and at the same time firmly states the writer's own point of view concerning the principles and practices of Friends.

Children's Day at New Garden was observed the 21st by Fanny Elliott giving an interesting and helpful chalk talk in the morning; then, after a basket dinner, the children rendered a splendid program to a very attentive audience of over 400. A collection of over $9.00 was taken for missionary purposes.

The annual commencement sermon of Whittier College was delivered by Levi Mills on the evening of the 7th ult. The annual Athenaeum entertainment was held in the college hall on the evening of the 9th. A class reception was given by the faculty Sixth-day afternoon at the homes of A. C. Johnson and Levi Mills. An alumni banquet was given on the evening of the 17th ult.

John Wilhelm Rowntree read an instructive paper on "Modern Thought and the Gospel" at a gathering of Chicago Friends at the home of Professor Hill, of Chicago University, the evening of the 22d. About fifty Friends heard the paper, which was an excellent presentation of a difficult subject, and which clarified a number of knotty points. A social time preceded and followed the paper.

Friends of Philadelphia are taking steps to open in this city a boarding home for young men Friends who come to the city to engage in business or for other reasons. The following committee of managers has been appointed: Joel Cadbury, Benjamin Vail, Benjamin F. Whitson, Elizabeth K. Hutchinson, Deborah P. Lowry and C. Virginia Sellew. John Way, 409 Chestnut Street, is the treasurer, and will receive subscriptions.

We have received from California a copy of "The Witness," a paper mainly devoted to missions and the training school for Christian workers. It contains much matter of interest and value, and it will doubtless help those for whom it is issued. Those who are publishing it clearly want to help Christ's cause, but we are sorry to note in some of its editorial articles a spirit of harsh criticism and a lack of true Christian perspective.

Seneca H. Stevens sent us a graphic sketch of his recent visit to the Blue Ridge Mission, N. C., from which we glean the following: The Sabbath School and meetings for worship are well attended by the people of the community who seem very eager to receive the "good news." The day school is doing good work under the care of M. and M. Lindley, with their faithful teachers. The good fruit from the mission is manifest already in many of the workers it has turned out. Some are evangelists, some teachers, and some thrifty farmers. All are useful citizens.

The commencement exercises of Vermilion Academy, Vermilion Grove, Ill., occurred the 19th ult. There were twelve graduates, eight girls and four boys. President Absalom Rosenberger, of Penn College, gave the class address. Lindley A. Wells preached the baccalaureate sermon. The past year was a very successful one for the Academy. A larger endowment is being added to the funds now possessed. Prof. Willard O. Trueblood will remain next year as principal; Caroline Clare Stanley as first assistant; Estella Rees as instructor in music. Emory Ratcliff, of Earlham College, has been secured as instructor in history.

Levi Rees has met with keen disappointment in his plans and labors in the meeting at Noblesville, Ind., the cause being a severe attack of la grippe. During the early winter months he did excellent service, and the outlook seemed unusually bright for an aggressive campaign in the meeting. His personal influence was deeply felt by the membership, and his presence made a strong impression upon the community. He was taken sick the latter part of Twelfth month, but recovered sufficiently to preach on three Sabbaths in First month. He then suffered a relapse, and was confined to his room for a long time. He now expects soon to be able to remove with his family to California.

Third-day of last week was a great day at Friends School in Providence, R. I. The commencement exercises were held, the new gymnasium was "dedicated," and the one hundred and nineteenth anniversary of the founding of the school was celebrated. A class of fifteen graduated, eight of them delivering original orations and essays in the presence of a very large audience. Among the guests on the platform was Frances A. Bartlett (Barrows), in her 95th year, who was a pupil when the school opened in Providence in 1819; also Peter Neal, one of the oldest graduates, and Charles M. Bailey and William O. Newhall. Addresses were delivered by Lucius F. C. Garvin, Governor of Rhode Island, and Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Boston. Interesting after-dinner speeches were given in the gymnasium by a number of the alumni and old scholars.

WILMINGTON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement exercises of Wilmington College were held the 19th ult. The large auditorium was filled with the friends of the college, and the exercises were particularly gratifying. There were nine members of the graduating class, six young men and three young women, who delivered orations. Five of the class received the degree of B.S., and four that of A.B. Henry Painter was granted the degree of A.M.

After the conferring of degrees, President Unthank delivered a very able address. In severing his connection with the college, after having served it so faithfully and well for twenty-nine years, he gave a short review of its material advancement in courses of study, equipment, buildings and endowment. Since he came to the college over sixty thousand dollars have been raised for it, not including property. He then made a strong plea for its future welfare, and urged the friends to continue to keep Wilmington College uppermost in their hearts.

Prof. J. B. Wright then addressed President Unthank on behalf of the Board of Management, assuring him of their deep appreciation of his services. At the close, Albert J. Brown, president-elect, was introduced by the retiring president. President-elect Brown made a few remarks, which were warmly received by the audience.

F. S. LAMAR.

BORN.

BEWLEY.—At Cincinnati, O., Fifth month 25th, 1903, to C. Arthur and Isabelle H. Bewley, a son, Thomas, Jr.

CADY.—Born, to Charles and Sylvia Gregory Cady, at Berkeley, Cal., Sixth month 14th, 1903, a daughter, named Lois.

MARRIED.

JOHNSON—WILSON.—At Richmond, Ind., Sixth month 24th, 1903, Albert Johnson and Anna J. Wilson. They will be at home to their friends after Seventh month 9th at Lynnville, Ia.

KELLEY—LAWRENCE.—At the Training School for Christian Workers in Los Angeles, Cal., Sixth month 20th, 1903, T. J. Kelley, a returned missionary from Guatemala, and Mida Lawrence, a returned missionary from Alaska. They expect to spend their lives in mission work in Central America.

DIED.

ELLIOTT.—At the home of his daughter, Lourana Hiatt, Okaloosa, Iowa, Sixth month 7th, 1903, Nathan Elliott, in the 86th year of his age. The deceased was a native of North Carolina, but lived in Iowa forty-nine years. His chief characteristics were the praise of God and love of his fellow-men, at all times bearing faithful testimony to salvation through Christ.

HAWORTH.—At her home in Quaker, Ind., Fourth month 14th, 1903, Miriam, widow of George T. Haworth, in her 70th year. She was a lifelong Friend, and for many years was an active worker and an elder in her home meeting.

HOCKETT.—At his home, near Earlham, Ia., Sixth month 2d, 1903, David Hockett, aged 72 years. He was an earnest Christian and a devoted Friend.

TAYLOR.—At North Fairfield, Me., Sixth month, 1903, Frances Louisa Taylor, in her 68th year. She joined Friends by request, and in all the relations of life lived a pure, exemplary Christian.

Events and Comments.

It is noted as a curious fact that out of 11,199 rural free delivery routes established the past five years, 3,792, or over 33 per cent., were in the four adjoining States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa. Doubtless this is due to the peculiar fitness of this service for the thrifty agricultural class, which constitute such a large part of the population in these States.

The statistics of library gifts during the year ending Sixth month 1st, in America, shows that the money thus disposed of amounted to $10,306,407, of which Andrew Carnegie's donations were $6,679,000. These figures include books and buildings. While Andrew Carnegie has made this field peculiarly his own, it is evident that many bequests and gifts from others are constantly being reported.

The popularity of American flour in China is attracting attention on both sides of the globe. The British Consul-General at Canton, in a report sent from China to London and published in that city, states that the demand for flour among emigrants returned from the United States is so great that the quantity of flour imported in 1902 exceeded that of 1901 by 95,831,328 pounds, and was also some 78,400,000 pounds in excess of the average for the past five years.

President Diaz of Mexico now receives still another election as chief magistrate, in his 73d year. He will probably serve for life, inasmuch as his name insures that stability in public affairs which Mexico has enjoyed for a generation, greatly to its advantage. That these continued elections are demonstrations of true republican principles could not be maintained, yet there is every reason to believe that they represent the will of the Mexican people as a whole.

At a recent session of the National Colored Immigration and Commercial Association the Committee on Resolutions adopted a resolution recommending the chartering of vessels during the year 1904 for carrying colonists to the Republic of Liberia, Africa. A petition to President Roosevelt and the National Congress, citing the wrongs from which the negro race is said to suffer, was adopted. An appropriation of $100,000,000 was asked from Congress, to be used for securing the transportation of members of the race who desire to settle in Liberia. The petition, it is explained, does not recommend a wholesale deportation of negroes.

Arrangements have been made for the President to formally open the new cable to Manila on the morning of the Fourth of July. He will send a despatch from Oyster Bay to Governor Taft, congratulating him and the people of the Philippine Islands on the fact that at last they are to enjoy the benefits of telegraphic communication with the rest of the world, and his message will convey to the people of the islands a sentiment appropriate to the day. Manila has been connected by wire with Europe and America for years, but the new cable route will be direct and the shortest one available. An all-American cable clear around the earth will still be something that Americans cannot boast of. Only the British own a world-girdle of that description.

The White Star liner Cedric, 700 feet long and of 21,000 tons, is the biggest afloat, and the Hamburg-American line is to surpass the Cedric with a new liner to be 725 feet long and having a tonnage of something like 25,000. Despite her bigness, it is expected that the new steamship will be one of the fastest boats in the transatlantic service. She is to have the novelties of a roof garden and a topmost promenade deck, and one room will be devoted exclusively to the handling of wireless telegraphy. By such relentless pursuit of "progress" is repose being routed off the face of the earth. The old and chief value of the voyage across the Atlantic lay in the impossibility of getting "news"—rest and frivolity were the only two resources. Thus is man being made the desperate victim of his own inventions.

In an address before the Henry George Association recently Clarence Darrow, the labor leader and attorney for the miners during the anthracite hearing, warned union labor that strikes and unreasonable demands were ruining them and the unions. Promiscuous boycotting and strikes, the mad rush of crafts to increase their own wages without thought or care for the rest of mankind and the limiting of production by trade unionists, the speaker said, were the present perils of trades-unionism. Any system of organization or invention which will increase the production or anything that tends toward the equitable distribution of wealth, are suggestions he makes for the aims of unionism which shall make it lasting and triumphant in the end, instead of dissolving, as he predicts it will, when the bubble of speculation in this country bursts.

The contract for building and equipping 413 miles of the Alaska Central Railway from Resurrection Bay north through the Cook Inlet country and up the Sushitna Valley to the Tanana River, 150 miles above its junction with the Yukon, was recently awarded to a Chicago company. The Agricultural Department of the United States Government has carried on agricultural experiments for the last five years in Southern and Central Alaska, and has demonstrated that any vegetation can be grown successfully there which can be grown in the Northern States of the Union. The climatic conditions are about the same as in England and Southern Norway. In addition to the resources of gold, coal and timber, the new railroad will penetrate a copper belt, which has been pronounced by government mineralogists to have the most extensive and highest grade copper deposits known in the world.

There is a strong sentiment against the bill which is pending before the Philippine Commission, granting to the highest bidder a monopoly of the opium traffic in the islands. In fact, the bill has roused protests almost as vigorous as those that followed the forcing of the opium trade on China by Great Britain. The plan was devised by the Philippine Government in an effort to restrict smuggling in opium and to prevent its sale to and use by Filipinos and Americans. The opposition says that the requirements of the measure are ineffectual, and many are asking that opium be entirely excluded from the islands. This is Japan's successful policy.

SURE NOW.

The Truth About Coffee.

It must be regarded as a convincing test when a family of seven has used Postum for five years, regaining health and keeping healthy and strong on this food drink.

This family lives in Millville, Mass., and the lady of the household says: "For eight years my stomach troubled me all the time. I was very nervous and irritable, and no medicine helped me.

"I had about given up hope until five years ago next month I read an article about Postum Cereal Coffee that convinced me that coffee was the cause of all my troubles. I made the Postum carefully, and liked it so much I drank it in preference to coffee, but without much faith that it would help me.

"At the end of a month, however, I was surprised to find such a change in my condition. I was stronger in every way, less nervous and at the end of six months I had recovered my strength so completely that I was able to do all of my own housework. Because of the good Postum did us I knew that what you claimed for Grape-Nuts must be true, and we have all used that delicious food ever since it first appeared on the market.

"We have seven in our family, and I do the work for them all, and I am sure that I owe my strength and health to the steady use of your fine cereal food and Postum (in place of coffee). I have such great faith in Postum that I have sent it to my relatives, and I never lose a chance to speak well of it." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ice-cold Postum with a dash of lemon is a delightful "cooler" for warm days.

REASONABLE DOUBT.

A man was being tried recently in New South Wales for stealing a watch. The evidence was conflicting; but before the jurors left the hall the judge remarked that, if there were any points on which they required information, he would be pleased to assist them. Eleven had left the box; but the twelfth remained standing, as if absorbed in thought. "Well, sir," said the judge, "is there any question you would like to ask me?" "I would like to know, my lord," came the reply, "if you could tell us whether the prisoner stole the watch."—"New York Tribune."

THE LIVING AND PROGRESSIVE CHURCH.

"If the Church wants to be saved," remarks a prominent minister, "it must become contemporary." That is to say, if the Church expects to be a powerful factor in the life of the world it must always understand the needs of its time, it must use methods that are adapted to new conditions, and it must learn to utilize every force which can make it more effective. Jesus Christ is the same, yesterday, to-day and forever. The great central truths of religion are permanent and abiding. With all the changes and flux of the centuries the supreme facts which the apostles preached are as true in New York as they were in Rome and Ephesus. The cross of Christ is as dynamic in the twentieth as in the first century. The progress and sifting of the ages have only made it more certain that the things which are unshaken are to remain. God's love and forgiveness; the divinity of Christ's Person and the atoning power of His self-sacrifice; the awful import of sin; the work of the Holy Spirit; the spiritual power of the Holy Scriptures—these things are surer with each new generation. The digging only shows how infinitely deep the foundations of our faith go down. Nothing can ever be discovered which will destroy the value of such facts. In a world like ours, in which pain and loss are always near, in which death comes with every tick of the clock, and in which every heart knows its need of more than human help, we shall never let the glorious news of God's salvation fade away and die out of mind. No, we shall not lose the faith.

The great danger always is that we shall apply it in such an antiquated and blundering way that it will not accomplish its work in the world. A great thinker has recently said that in proportion to its importance, religion has been the worst managed of all humanity's undertakings. "The variety of contending faiths, the cruel mutual misunderstandings that the followers of opposing faiths have cherished toward one another, the religious wars, the multiplication of sects, the confusion of the essential with the trivial in religious life, the substitution of conventionality in religious practice for spirituality in religious experience, the enormous waste of energy over confused thinking"—are the evidences which he gives for the truth of his statement.

The moment a new discovery is made the physician asks, How can this help me to cure disease better? The practical engineer asks, How can we use this to facilitate the intercommunication of men around the globe? The sociologist learns his lesson from it, and even the politician will make some use of it.

Those who are "children of the light" are not always as wise as the "children of their generation." They do not enough follow the advice of the Master to bring out of the storehouse things new and old. We feel at once the power of the man who knows how to deal with the situation before him. "He knew what was in man," is the significant word about Christ, and the writer might have added, he understood the condition of society, and saw how the men about him were living, and what they were thinking and expecting. The successful Christian worker to-day, whether evangelist, or minister or missionary, has a large task on his hands. He must not expect the world to run and meet him with a "God bless you for coming." He must patiently learn how to go to the heart of the world's troubles and pour in the oil and the wine which will heal and refresh it.

THE MINISTRY OF ORDINARY PEOPLE.

It is all very well to preach a great moving sermon for people to talk about after it is done, but there are a great many other ways of sowing the seeds of the kingdom which may do just as much good. We are apt to say, after listening to the great sermon, "Yes, it was great, but then he has preached so much and had so many opportunities that he ought to be able to speak like that. Anybody can do a thing well which he is doing all the time!" It is a fact, is it not? that few persons are really brought to a change of life by listening to what are usually called great sermons.

Most of us remember that the thing which affected our lives most, and really changed our hearts, was some personal word spoken directly to us, some close appeal which we could not shake off. We do not discover our need or cry out for mercy while we are listening to the fine discourse or the solid logic of some trained preacher. The tears are much more apt to well up, and the heart to soften under some broken testimony of a brother or sister like ourselves. Few things count for so much as the simple word spoken by the roadside, or at a casual meeting—the word which comes all fresh and unstudied from a tender, loving heart that has had its great experience.

A sinner can stand almost any amount of public preaching and go on his way unchanged, but he can seldom rise the same man from a close, intimate, face to face talk about the issues of life. It is more convincing when a person just like ourselves comes to speak to us. We know it is done for nothing else than for love's sake, and it is hard to resist such an attack upon our inner fortress.

The best Christian ministry is that done by the "unordained" persons, who have, however, had "the mighty ordination of the pierced hands." To go quietly about one's ordinary tasks and callings, and to use the little daily chances for witnessing to the power of the Saviour is to do the best sort of ministering. It makes one happy to know that all about us, with no official robes upon them and no tiaras on their heads, there are many of these ordinary saints who are unaware that their faces shine.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

WE heartily endorse and commend to our readers the proposition made by Prof. Dennis, in his article on "The Harriet Green Memorial Fund at Guilford." He asks that 15,000 of us shall send $2 each toward this memorial, so that it may be the united work of the Church. The facts are all known. We are well aware what Harriet Green did for Friends in America. We know what an influence will come from the proposed memorial. Now the thing needed is action. One Friend has given $1,000; another, $500. Large sums will be needed, but we cannot too strongly encourage the proposed plan for a general contribution. We have already received under this plan the following amounts:

D. W. Dennis	$2.00
Mrs. Dennis	2.00
Total	$4.00
Previously received by THE AMERICAN FRIEND	$1,026.97

It is intended that we shall accomplish all, through law, that we can accomplish for ourselves. God gives every bird its food, but does not throw it into the nest. He does not unearth the good that the earth contains, but He puts it in our way and gives us the means of getting it ourselves.—J. G. Holland.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE HARRIET GREEN MEMORIAL FUND AT GUILFORD.

BY PROF. D. W. DENNIS.

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

The Friends' schools in Indiana, prior to the year 1884, were as well equipped as the very best in the State. There were as many in the faculty at Earlham, and at the various academies—Bloomington, Spiceland, Blue River, etc.—as in any competing schools. In libraries, laboratories and museums no schools had more than we had. During the period referred to we educated many men who are eminent to-day in public service in all walks of life. Prominent among these is the Hon. Joseph G. Cannon. We should take great satisfaction in the fact that nowhere in the State could they have had advantages of any kind superior to those we furnished them. The Church ought to know that we cannot say this to-day of the material advantages we offer. At least two colleges in Indiana are far richer than Earlham is, and there are many high schools equipped as none of our academies are.

Besides this superior equipment these schools are all tuition free, while it is necessary for us to charge considerable tuition in order to keep our schools open at all. That is, we cannot compete for the education of our own youth on equal terms with other schools in our midst. Our fathers gave a "guarded education"—emphasis on every letter. There is some danger of our giving a "guarded education." We must, it seems to me, at our peril, restore this emphasis.

I do not admit that we are giving an inferior education to our youth; but this has been due in the last twenty years to a number of causes that we cannot expect will continue indefinitely. Our membership has unflinchingly and in the faith of our fathers, paid the tuition and the necessary deficit; devoted teachers have worked for much less than their services were worth on the market, and careful administration has furnished a better living for the money than I have ever seen done otherwheres in the State. Add to these a cause that must continue and grow if the future needs of the Church are to be met. Liberal Friends have greatly increased our endowment. The proposition does not need to be discussed, that a proportionally smaller faculty, on smaller pay, and with less adequate equipment, cannot for long maintain the amount and standard of its work. I have referred to education in Indiana, because I know the conditions here. I believe they are the same throughout the West and South.

GUILFORD COLLEGE.

I have just returned from Guilford College, and it affords me great pleasure to say that I found there a compact organization and a spirit of harmony, determination and faith, of which I am proud. It is the old spirit, the one born from above, the one that hitherto hath led us. I saw the same self-sacrifice and conscientious economy and care with which I have been acquainted in our Friends' schools from childhood. The college buildings are substantial; they are beautifully and healthfully located, and the whole place is permeated with an air of work and enthusiasm. A professor of the University of North Carolina said to me: "No students come to us better prepared than those from Guilford." And I thought I should like to see what we could do if we had an equal chance.

I am convinced that the conditions above mentioned for Indiana are quite the conditions in North Carolina. There is a renaissance in education everywhere in the South. This is especially true of North Carolina. Rich schools are springing up in various parts of the State. One of these, occupying a somewhat different field, a woman's normal, is within a few miles of Guilford. It is plain that Guilford College cannot compete in the future with the outfit of the past.

THE FUND.

The definite proposition now on hand there is the endowment fund for a course in Biblical instruction, to be known as the Harriet Green Memorial Fund. It is proposed with this fund to create a library and establish and maintain a chair in the study of the Bible. It is now agreed—it was lately given out as a dictum by a national educational meeting in Chicago—that the Bible offers material for culture equal to that of any course our schools offer. We should know that this is so from the fact that it has been the chief life study of many cultured men who had little other training.

If our own needs as a Church were the only consideration, I do not see how a wiser expenditure of money could be made. It was the one wish of our dear friend for us, it was this for which she gave all, that we might know more of "the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God." We cannot, I am sure, better carry forward her life work than by making this fund adequate.

It was at Guilford that she gave up her life for us. A friend took me to her place of rest. From a forest near by a wood thrush sang the sweetest notes ever heard in an American wood. Nature, here, is at her best, and grace ought to have an equal chance.

If this fund is raised, who will profit by it? In general the Church will profit; and this is why we are all interested, rich and poor alike. Personally, those who attend Guilford will profit, and through these we all shall. When just one student has been equipped for the best service, we cannot tell where the good will stop. But those of us who are in limited circumstances will reap the chief, individual and immediate gain. The wealthy can avail themselves of distant and expensive opportunities. Most of us cannot. We ought, therefore, to manifest our interest. If 15,000 Friends, as soon as they hear of this call, which seconds in special form the one which lately appeared in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, would send $2 each to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for this purpose, we should have the nucleus of a satisfactory fund. It would impoverish nobody. If friends with means saw that we cared enough to do this they would, I believe, more than double the amount. We all owe this to the fund on account of what we have received. We owe it to the future that "our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as cornerstones polished after the similitude of a palace; that our garners may be full." I believe we would do this now if each one of us believed all the others of the 15,000 would do so. I shall send my $2 with these notes, in the hope that all the others will. Send yours without waiting to see what the others will do. Let every minister of the Society bring this matter to public attention at once under the most favorable conditions. Between Gerizim and Ebal one man read the law. His voice was weak because it was the voice of one. The people all responded, and the shout of the multitude created an enthusiasm that has crossed all the centuries since it occurred.

THE SAME WORDS.

BY ALEXANDER MCKENZIE.

It is pleasant to find the people of Antioch in Pisidia, after they had listened to St. Paul, as he taught them of Christ and His resurrection, asking that the same things might be told them on the next Sabbath. The truths were novel, and the preacher could present them with rare power. But there was more than this, in that the truths themselves were interesting. Yet we are almost amused at the request which was confirmed on the next Sabbath, when almost the whole city came to hear the preachers again. Yet it is in our nature to like the old, old friends, old books, old truths and forms of truths. We like to sing the old hymns. If these truths have a special association with some experience in our life, they are doubly precious. When Cromwell was on his dying bed he asked to have read to him the words of this same apostle—I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me. He said, "Those words saved my life nineteen years ago."

We like old things in nature, and the old principles in which they consist. Much of our research is for the discovery of antiquity. Those who come steadily to church desire to hear the words, that is, the truths, which they have heard before, and they expect this. It might be thought that it would be wearisome to hear the same things over and over. This is possible, but it would result from the smallness of the mind, the lack of desire and imagination. For we are very far from exhausting the most familiar truths.

It is improbable that the truth which we hear or read should be the same to us at different times. For we change. We are older than we were and wiser. We bring new light to the words and read them in the light which other readers throw upon them. The condition is different and the temper of the mind very much depends on the personal relation in which we stand. Change of position changes that which we look upon. Professor Thayer said that "words are converted as well as men." It is very true, and the conversion of the man is the conversion of the words.

In the teaching of Christ Himself there was little which was entirely new. But he made everything new, illumining and illustrating. It seemed new, for He spoke as never man had spoken. It was new to those who listened. "Come unto Me and I will give you rest" can never be an old promise. To be weary is always a new experience, and rest is as new as if it had never visited us. His definitions are always new, because we have not learned them, and the life which is framed upon them is new. Eternal life, worship, duty, heaven, old as they are, are new as He describes them, and we commit His words to our life. With all our fondness for variety our chief dependence is in the old. We turn where we have been before, knowing what is there. There are countless varieties in architecture; but one rule is unchanging—that architecture is good only when it founds the house upon the rock; and this whether it be a house of stone or the house of thoughts and deeds.

If we are diligent we make discoveries in well-known places. We are to expect this when on the alert. The merit of age is not to hinder us from receiving the new, nor is the attraction of the new to allow us to cast away the old. The centuries of good thinking have had substantial results, and these must be secured if life is to advance. We know in part, but in part we know, and this part is the basis for more. The scientific method is correct. Science is conservation. It clings to facts; but it is fearless and eager, always seeking enlargement, addition. Thus knowledge grows from more to more. It has been remarked by a scientific scholar that "the one thing nature insists upon is equilibrium." It is a large demand, and he is wise who can well balance the old and the new.

The truths of the old Scripture are able to make men wise unto salvation. Thus Paul assured his son Timothy. These remained. But they were fulfilled, explained, extended by the New Testament. This is still to be read, though we have read it from childhood. One of the finest Biblical scholars of our day wrote not long since, "We've lots to learn yet." The truths of the gospel are final; but we have not attained to final knowledge, a final obedience. There is need that we hear them and read again and again, Sabbath after Sabbath, day after day, and when the end comes there will yet be many things to learn. We rejoice in our knowledge. We should rejoice in its increase. The truths of life are to have a larger apprehension, appreciation, application, and through this process they will retain their youth. They are to have more control over us, and to give us more gladness. Perfection is yet remote, but the Christian is on the one road which leads to it, and this he is not to leave. The advance from the old covenant to the new is marked. We may expect an advance in the new. We can scarcely doubt that the Christianity which is to be, while resting upon the Incarnation and Redemption, will be a new Christianity, not in its truths, but in the life which they produce.

Evidently we must take the truths to our heart. In our reading we should read till we come upon some truth, or thought, we have not before discovered. We should seek deeper knowledge and expect new light and new teaching which will be not the less new because the words are old. Not new things, but things new, are promised. We must affirm or reaffirm the changeless facts; search them more thoroughly, obey them more diligently, and truth will be new and full of life, and we shall grow in our knowledge of "the central and all-conquering truth of Christianity—personal loyalty to a personal Master, the crucified, risen, reigning Christ."

THE CAPTAIN OF OUR SALVATION.

BY F. B. MEYER.

God's method appears to be always to choose two or three men in a generation, to richly gift and endow them, that they may be the depositories of blessing for their followers. Of course, He might, if He chose, communicate to each individual soul the whole fulness of His blessed grace; but, as a matter of fact, throughout the history of mankind it has been His plan to gift men, endowing and setting them apart as the captains and leaders of the rest.

When He wanted to possess a people for His own possession He elected Abraham to be the captain or leader of the Hebrews. When he desired to bring them across the Jordan and into the promised land it was as one great army beneath the leadership of Joshua. When He desired to bring His people back from exile He chose Zerubbabel, Ezra and Nehemiah, that they might be captains and leaders of the march. So in the early Church there was a Peter or a John, a James or a Paul, who was the file-leader (for so the word means) of the rest.

In our time, when God wanted to bring out a great multitude of dark-skinned slaves from the sugar plantations of Jamaica, He gave Wilberforce to be the captain of their salvation. When the time had come for the myriads of the interior of Africa to be freed from the awful slave trade, He gave Livingstone to be their captain, to discover their wrongs, and heal the open sore of the dark continent. Let your mind pass over all great discoveries that have blessed our race, whether in the social or economic side of it, or in the medical-surgical side, and deliverance has always been by some great captain and leader whom Divine Providence has raised up.

So when God wanted to lift our race from the abyss into which it had fallen, and to make it what He intended it to be at its creation, both victorious and royal, and having dominion over His works, He gave as Captain His own beloved Son—the true Joseph, who passed through the pit, was sold into the hands of His enemies, but ultimately rose to sit upon the throne and be the true bread-giver to men.

Let us dwell on this word to-day—"Captain of our salvation." It is a very precious word and occurs four times in the New Testament—twice in the Acts, and twice in this book. Let us press close to Him as He goes down to death; let us follow as He climbs up on the Easter side; let us never lose sight of the plume of His helmet as He precedes the foremost ranks against the foes that resist Him. God has made the Captain perfect, and He will make us perfect also. The Captain sits upon the throne and we shall sit there. "It became Him to make Him perfect through suffering, that He might perfectly sympathize with and succor us."

What a wonderful story is the story of the evolution of God's creative scheme! that great spiral law by which God's purpose has climbed up towards its consummation. But that mighty plan which began myriads of ages ago, has been working forward to the present moment and is not yet concluded, has been at the cost of awful suffering. Open up any of the great pages of the rocks, and you will find them filled as you turn page after page with the bodies of the animals which have evidently been overwhelmed by some terrific cataclysm, had been swallowed up in order to give way to other and higher races. All the pyramid of human life is built up on the blood and tears of subject races. The march of human life has been like the caravans over the sand, strewn in its road with those who have perished. All human progress is marked by suffering and pain. There is not one benefactor, teacher, or leader of humanity who has not acquired at great cost of personal suffering priceless boons for his fellowmen.

What is true in all the world around is true pre-eminently of the Divine Redeemer of men. He must suffer. The race could only progress through suffering, and He who is to lead must suffer most of all. Men look on leaders with envy. They say: "If only I were captain and chief!" Ah! but they do not know the sleepless nights, the anxious days, the pain, the obloquy, the storms of pitiless hate. But if this be true on ordinary and lower levels, how pre-eminently it must be true of Jesus Christ, who, in a world where suffering predominates, where suffering is the law of progress, became the prime Leader and Captain of salvation. Think how much He must have suffered upon whose heart fell every hissing dart of the enemy, and upon whose back fell the strokes due to human sin.

From out the hallelujahs, sweet and low,
Lest I should fear, and fall, and miss thee so,
Who art not missed by any that entreat.

THE HIGH ROCK.

BY JAMES E. C. SAWYER.

It was a precipice on a hillside, at the summit of which was the edge of a virgin forest. At other points the hill was steep, in places very precipitous, and at points were isolated jutting pinnacles of rock back of which were stunted spruces and hemlocks. The "High Rock," as we children called it, was a perpendicular precipice about fifty feet high, on top of which was a narrow level platform backed by a ledge rising above it some ten feet like a terrace. The "High Rock" was not a mountain, but its top was seventy-five or a hundred feet above the pond outspread before it, on the other side of which were the stores of the little village. It was very lofty to childish eyes, and the terrace at its summit was perpetually fascinating. A photograph of the view from the top of the "High Rock" was sent us recently by a friend. It takes in the tops of the trees before the cliff, the pond, the village, in which still stand the buildings most prominent forty years ago, a winding stretch of the picturesque little river, the old union church between the two villages, and quite a wide area of the landscape familiar to our youthful eyes. The photograph is of priceless value, but it does not take in the widest view that we had from the "High Rock."

That rock was consecrated to ideals and visions. Imagination and hope saw a long way from its summit. There boyhood's purest and noblest ambitions were nurtured. It was related to family prayers and Sunday services and my favorite books. Not a giddy height, it was nevertheless lofty enough to be a lifelong inspiration to both mind and heart.

It is doubtless largely owing to its influence that I have had an abiding passion for steep and lofty places, have accordingly scaled many spires and towers and climbed to many lofty mountain summits. The wide views thus obtained are glorious and inspiring memories. The picture has sometimes included not only lakes and streams and forests and the spires of towns and cities far away, but also a surrounding world of mountains. From a summit by the sea I have looked afar over the ocean dotted with innumerable sails and down upon the picturesque rock-bound islands and harbors of Maine, and from an Alpine peak I have gazed upon countless icy sublimities glowing like gold and amethyst. But I am not sure that I did not see as far from the "High Rock" as from the loftiest of the heights since visited. It commanded a vision of future years and all the wide realms of eternity.

Like the "High Rock" and the mountain summits have been life's most precious privileges and its greatest trials: a few great books, the friendship of true and noble hearts, some lonely seasons of mysterious and almost agonizing perplexity, the solitude of a few great sorrows, the hours of extraordinary spiritual visitation, the delight of conscious communion with God. Great joys, great privileges, great anxieties, great sorrows are lofty places in human life; they command a wide view and inspire the vision of faith. We are to be thankful for anything that ministers to our longing for the infinite, that sets our feet in heavenly places and helps us to behold things unseen and eternal. The believer lives in a wider world than other men. A heart full of love and faith is optimistic in its expectation. Spiritual life is heir to all things, at home in all worlds, sovereign over all circumstances. To life's loftiest places only God can lead and lift us. The Psalmist prayed, "Lead me to a rock that is too high for me to reach."

Life's loftiest summits fit us for service in its lowliest places. It is good to climb the Mount of Transfiguration; it would be selfish to desire to remain there. In the heights the hearts of men are strengthened for life's daily work. "Those who have touched the summit know the sunshine and the cloud at every elevation." We need to be holy that we may be more fully human. Social affection, sympathy, self-sacrifice result from seeking "the things that are above." That man is most brotherly who has been up Calvary with Christ. The manly man is the godly man.

The real high rock is Christ. All other summits only point to Him. In Christ we are superior to all life's storms. All things are under His feet. God "hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Thus exalted, our vision is enlarged to the breadth of God's thoughts and extended to behold the abiding glories of the spiritual and eternal world. The truth as it is in Jesus answers all questions, illuminates all mysteries.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

OUR TITLE-DEED, AND WHAT IT CONVEYS.

There is more in God's word than mere beauty. There are hidden mines of untold treasure. There is food, raiment, life, inspiration. Wealth of this world may purchase some things; but it cannot purchase the "peace of God that passeth all understanding." So, poverty in the things of this earth may deprive us of some conveniences here; but it cannot shut us out from the joy of a redeemed and blood-washed soul.

God's word is, as it were, a title-deed to the riches of His grace. When we accept it, we may not know just how much it contains; but as we study it, we begin to see how much was conveyed in the transfer of title; just how large the farm is; just what the improvements are; how great the possessions, and what the resources. We may not be able to "enter" all the land at once, but it is ours whenever we are ready to take possession. As fast as it is surveyed and "entered," it becomes an established possession; and we get an abstract of title: "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son" (1 Jno. 5: 11), "whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds"

(Heb. 1: 2); "and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Heb. 5: 9); "who is the author and finisher of our faith" (Heb. 12: 2); "who hath also sealed us, and given us the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts" (2 Cor. 1: 22); "which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1: 14); "for ye are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ" (Gal. 3: 26); "and because ye are children, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father: wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ" (Gal. 4: 6, 7); for "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8: 16, 17).

"He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. 8: 32.) "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" (Rom. 8: 35). "Nay in all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8: 37-39).

Here is an abstract of title, guaranteeing to us upon the conditions of faith and obedience, the full and undisturbed possession of sanctification, higher life, deeper experience, broader service, promised-land possession, mountain-top visions, valley consolations, walk with God, companionship with Jesus, hidden manna, honey from the rock, the finest of the wheat, the glory of the Lord, the beauty of holiness, waters in the wilderness, streams in the desert, the Rose of Sharon, the Lily of the Valley, the joy of the Lord, the diadem of beauty, health, strength, songs of joy and gladness; and, "in the ages to come," the revelation of the "exceeding riches of God's grace, in his kindness toward us through Jesus Christ" (Eph. 2: 7.) Could we ask for more? If so, it is all in the deed.

If we enter at once into what we see, then each opening path will lead on to the more perfect experience; every blooming flower will prove but the bursting bud of another more beautiful; each happy communion with Jesus will but invite into more sacred and intimate fellowship with him; the leafy bowers, redolent with perfume wafted from the everlasting hills, will but intensify the desire to press on to the enjoyment of eternal felicities in the paradise of God.

Would that we all might enter at once into all that we desire at the hand of the Lord, that our souls might delight themselves in fatness. Would that the Church might step into her place of privilege; that throughout her membership she might receive a new inspiration, a new impulse of divine energy, a second Pentecost; that she might realize more fully than she does now the glory of her calling, the greatness of Christ's love, and the certainty of the final triumph.

The International Lesson.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON III.

SEVENTH MONTH 19, 1903.

SAMUEL'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

1 Samuel 12: 13-25.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Only fear the Lord, and serve him in truth with all your heart. —1 Sam. 12: 24.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 13.—Saul's valor. 1 Sam. 11.

Third-day, Seventh mo. 14.—Samuel's farewell address. 1 Sam. 12: 1-12.

Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 15.—Samuel's farewell address. 1 Sam. 12: 13-25.

Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 16.—The blessing and the curse. Deut. 30: 1-10.

Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 17.—Life and death. Deut. 30: 11-20.

Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 18.—God's mercy. Isa. 55: 6-13.

First-day, Seventh mo. 19.—The value of prayer. James 5: 13-20.

The time of the present lesson is soon after the beginning of Saul's reign (1039 or 1037 B.C.). The place was Gilgal, not far from Jericho. See Josh. 4: 19, 20; 5: 9. Samuel was probably more than seventy years old, and though giving up his political position continued to occupy a position of influence. Saul was about forty. The account of Saul's first exploit is given in chapter 11. After this Samuel delivers to the people assembled at Gilgal a solemn farewell address. It is given in chapter 12. The first part of his address is personal (verses 1-5); the second part relates to the dealings of God with the Israelites in the past, and how he had raised up deliverers again and again, whenever the people had repented of their sins. Everything indicates that Saul was very popular, the victory over the Ammonites having confirmed them in their opinion that what they needed was a king.

13. "Now therefore." What he had said was the necessary introduction to what was to follow. "Has set over you." Their desire has been fulfilled. Note that Samuel refers to two elements which were concerned in the choice of a king (1) the people, "ye have desired," (2) the Lord, who set Saul over them.

14. "If ye will fear," etc. The translation of the Authorized Version is not very clear; it should read, "and not rebel against the commandment of the Lord, and both ye and also the king," etc. Note the five points Samuel mentions (1) Fearing the Lord, (2) serving Him, (3) obeying Him, (4) not rebelling against Him, (5) following Him. If the people do these things it will be "well." Revised Version.

15. "But if ye will not obey," etc. In stating what will follow disobedience, Samuel mentions only two of the five conditions in verse 14, but these two practically cover all. "Then shall the hand of the Lord be against you," etc. This would follow of necessity. "Your fathers." Samuel had just brought up the deeds of their fathers, and the results of their sins.

16-18. A miracle would emphasize Samuel's words, and bring conviction home to the hearts of the people, and possibly be a means of helping them to obey the Lord; therefore Samuel "called unto the Lord." "In ordinary seasons, from the cessation of the showers in spring [latter part of April], until their commencement in October or November, rain never falls, and the sky is usually serene." "Wheat harvest" is in May and June. This unusual sight of a thunderstorm startled the people and brought them to a sense of their sins. It meant disaster to their crops as well, and this the people would regard as a punishment.

19. "Pray for thy servants." Samuel is referred to as a type of successful intercession in Ps. 99: 6; Jer. 15: 1; and the people believed that Samuel stood in a special relation to the Lord. "This evil." Asking a king.

20. "Fear not." The people were now in a condition suitable for Samuel to reassure them. They were now repentant. "Serve the Lord with all your heart." The first great requirement is a wholehearted service.

21. "Turn not aside." The second requirement—service must be continuous. "For then would ye go after vain things which cannot profit nor deliver for they are vain." American Revised Version. "Vain things," that is, idols and false gods. Compare Is. 41: 29.

22. "For," etc. The Lord will not forsake them because (1) they are "His people," (2) He has undertaken to make them a people for Himself. "For his great name's sake." Jehovah is known among the nations as the God of Israel and if He were to forsake Israel His name would suffer among the nations. Compare Ex. 32: 12; Num. 14: 13-16; Josh. 7: 9; Rom. 11: 1, 2.

23. "Moreover as for me." The prophet is ready to do his part, and he indicates two ways in which he will do it, (1) by prayer. To neglect this opportunity would, for a man in his position, be a heinous sin. His office as a prophet made this duty incumbent; it would also be a sin against the people who looked to him to do this very thing. (2) Samuel would "instruct them in the good and the right way." This again was the duty of a prophet.

24. "Only fear the Lord, and serve him." This was essential. Samuel might pray and teach, but all would be in vain unless the people did their part, which was obedient service, with a single heart. The motive which should impel them was gratitude for all that the Lord had done for them and their nation.

25. "But," etc. It was possible that gratitude would not be enough, hence the second motive of fear is added.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Sin has many forms."
2. "Sin is foolish as well as wicked."
3. "Pray for others."
4. Instruction must be accompanied by obedience and service in order to be profitable.

Christian Endeavor

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Lindley D. Clark, 1429 New York Avenue, Washington, D.C.]

TOPIC FOR SEVENTH MONTH NINETEENTH.

RELIGION BETWEEN SUNDAYS.

Acts 2: 42-47.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 13.—Steadfast in works. Heb. 10: 23-25.
Third-day, Seventh mo. 14.—The "greater works." Acts 5: 14-16.
Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 15.—Week-day fellowship. 1 John 1: 3, 4.
Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 16.—Daily rejoicing. Ps. 89: 1-16.
Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 17.—Continual praise. Ps. 34: 1-7.
Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 18.—All to His glory. 1 Cor. 10: 28-31.

We find nothing in the Bible about a Sunday religion, but, on the other hand, much that emphasizes the daily life, in both the Old and the New Testament. God gave the manna fresh each day except on the Sabbath, thus teaching the Israelites their daily dependence upon Him no less than that He wished one day to be set apart as a day of rest, "a holy Sabbath unto the Lord."

"As thy days so shall thy strength be" implies that each day has its own needs, its own burdens, for which new strength will be required and supplied. All our trials and temptations will not come on Sunday, and if we expect to meet them as victors we must have a close walk with God each day of the week. We need His help in the household, in our business relations, in our daily intercourse of whatever kind with our fellow men, no less than on the Sabbath day.

"If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me," are the words of Christ Himself, and He taught His disciples to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."

"God broke our years to hours and days
That, hour by hour, and day by day,
Just going on a little way,
We might be able all along
To keep quite strong."

It should be true of us, as it was of the Christians of whom our lesson tells, that day by day we continue steadfast in fellowship, in singleness of heart, in praise, in prayer. If, as Endeavorers, we expect to offer true and acceptable worship to God in our prayer meetings, we must prepare for it by daily communion with Him. If our message is to be helpful to others, it must be received from Christ Himself; and if we have given our whole time and thought through the week to other things, we cannot expect to be ready to do much for Him on the Sabbath. Not that we should neglect our secular duties. We should perform them as God-given tasks, but they must not so absorb us as to turn our thoughts away from Him, or to so occupy our time that we have no quiet hour for the study of His word.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION.

The year just closed has been one of activity among the Endeavorers of New England Yearly Meeting, and much practical work has been accomplished. There are at present twenty-eight societies in the union, of which twenty-five have reported. The total membership is as follows: Active, 695; associate, 121; honorary, 62. Seven have united with the Church from the societies during the year; 214 pledge two cents or more per week for missions.

The Boys' Training Home at Ramallah, Palestine, which is the special foreign mission work of the union, has prospered during the year. Here twenty boys are cared for and given a Christian training which will fit them for useful lives. Beside their regular English and Arabic studies the boys are taught carpentry by a competent instructor. Fourteen hundred and thirty-four dollars and seventy-eight cents have been given for this work. The societies have contributed $48.38 for home missions and $262.08 for other purposes.

The banner which is given to the society contributing the most for home and foreign missions was awarded to Boston, Mass., which has given $2.30 per member. Bolton, Mass., which has increased 35 per cent. in membership, received the other banner.

At the annual meeting held at Portland, Me., Sixth month 13th, it was decided that Christian young people of the yearly meeting residing where no local society exists may be members of the union on the recommendation of the Lookout Committee, appointed to have special oversight of this work.

The Junior work has been very encouraging. There are now nineteen societies, with 202 active and 134 associate members. Seven Juniors have united with the Church. The societies have given $16.50 for home and $44.61 for foreign missions. The zeal and earnestness of the children in carrying on practical Christian work have been an encouragement and also an example to the Senior societies. Before long these Juniors will be holding the important places in the Church. If they are fitted for the duties of the Christian life in the Junior and later in the Young People's Society, the future of the Friends' Church in New England will be assured.

FROM KOTZEBUE MISSION.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

The sun of day remains with us up here in the Arctic zone almost as many hours out of the twenty-four as it does with our friends in the home land, yet none of the usual evidences of approaching spring-time greet us. Snow to the depth of about 4 to 20 feet lies all about us. We have not seen the ground for about five months, and don't expect to see it for at least two months more. Ice will not leave the sea so that vessels can reach us until about middle of the Seventh month. With the exception of ptarmigan, we haven't seen a member of the bird family for five months. A few of those great fluffy Arctic owl inhabit this region, but so far none have visited us this present season.

A year ago this month our mail carrier froze to death, and three weeks later the thermometer reached a temperature of —36 degrees, or 68 degrees below freezing point. Of the animal kingdom man may be "lord of the earth" in temperate climes, but up here in Arctic zone he does not seem to be settled on his throne. Ice is king and man is simply a wanderer upon its surface, an isolated reindeer herder, fisher or hunter.

The only animal that it is possible to domesticate here is the reindeer, and Sheldon Jackson has, I believe, solved the problem of the future food supply of the Esquimaux, in the introduction of this animal. There are several hundred in this district. No females can be killed for a period of 25 years, so that the prospect is that the country will be thoroughly stocked with them. They require no shelter or prepared food, living in winter season on willow branches or a species of Arctic moss. The latter is tasteless and without odor to a man, but the reindeer will detect its presence through several feet of snow, and paw its way down to its favorite food. Such is its keenness of smell that it is said that an instance has never been known of a reindeer failing to find this moss where it dug down for it.

The dear Master has been richly blessing all branches of the work here of late. Last Sabbath evening one woman gave herself to God, and two of our boys received the baptism of the Holy Ghost. At this week's prayer service nine people gave their hearts to God, six of them having been married native fashion, but consented at once to Christian marriage. We now have a good standing membership of above 170. We do not count the very small children, only those who can learn and repeat texts each Sabbath. Indeed little ones of six are often the teachers of their parents who cannot read, and after they have learned their own texts they teach some to their fathers and mothers. We call the roll of membership each Sabbath and Fourth-day prayer meeting. Each one is supposed to testify or speak some text, and it is quite amusing to note the look of discouragement or patient resignation in some little "tot's" face when her father has failed in his text. Truly "a child shall lead them."

In our last mail we received twenty-two letters from outside friends, the freshest one having been 91 days on the way, but now that days are so much longer, doubtless mail carriers will make better time. This leaves all well here. We are happy and contented in the knowledge of being in His sweet will.

May His grace and peace abide with all.

Faithfully in His service,

DANA THOMAS.

Kotzebue, Alaska, 3d Mo. 5th, 1903.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Our last winter mail will leave for Nome City within a few days, and I will take advantage of that fact to let our friends know that the Kotzebue missionaries have "wintered" fairly well, are happy and contented, and thankful to the great Giver of all good for so richly blessing our work during the past season. About ninety Esquimaux have been converted or baptized with the Holy Ghost. Bless His dear name. To Him be all the glory. We have at present 186 names on our membership roll. We believe their names are on His book. We try to impress upon them the chief thing is a changed heart, and we are thankful to see many evidences of changed hearts in the new life lived.

These people have very tender consciences. Not long ago one woman only recently converted confessed in open meeting that she had been "cross." We inquired the circumstances, and found that her little daughter had been lost for some time, and when one of the Esquimaux found the little girl lying at the bottom of an ice crevasse, into which the little one had fallen to a depth of several feet, the half-frantic mother, in pushing her way through the crowd, had spoken crossly to some children in her way, and this sin had bothered her so much that she was not at ease until we assured her that God had forgiven her for the fault. This is only one of many such instances. Indeed, I doubt much if there are many here who would not have confessed as this poor mother did such a slight fault as this. So you can well understand that we have a very peaceful Quaker-like little community. At present there are only four in the village who are unchristian. They are old, superstitious people, but even they were all at divine service last First-day, every native in the village being present, as frequently happens, even in the mid-week prayer service.

Although we have sunshine about sixteen hours each day at present, little impression has been made upon the great ice and snow fields. Although May time will soon be here, we have had zero weather every day this month, and this morning the thermometer registered several degrees below zero. Snow lies to an average depth of about 7 feet, and in drifts about the mission home we have a snow depth of 20 to 25 feet. Indeed, it lies far above our doors and windows, and we have had to be dug out many times this past winter, after the ceasing of blizzards, kindly natives clearing our windows and doors of snow, and as I write this so far as the eye can reach an unbroken vista of snowy whiteness greets the vision, unrelieved by any patch of green or grown. It may be easily understood that this is very trying on the eyesight, and we dare not venture forth with eyes unprotected by colored glasses. The poor Esquimaux who are not well provided with eye shields suffer greatly, but at present they are all sitting out on the ice, the women with children on their backs, fishing through holes for smelt and tom cod. At present they are catching sufficient for each day's needs, and we are very thankful it is so, for they have been sadly short of food, and for some time we had to supply almost the entire village with small quantities of food.

We have about 50 or 60 little fawns out at the reindeer camp. Although many of them were born in blizzards and with a zero temperature, only about 20 per cent. of them have died, showing how very hardy these animals are, and how well adapted to this region's climate.

The first steamers will reach Nome about 1st of Sixth month, but they do not venture this far north until about six weeks later, so about ten weeks will elapse before our next mail arrives. Our latest "outside" mail was postmarked in San Francisco, 24th of last 12th month, so that we are hardly in touch with recent happenings in the United States; but our lives are brightened and cleansed by the same blessed Saviour, and we also feel the protecting care of the same loving Father and the blessed guidance of the same blessed Holy Ghost as are the dear ones in the home land.

Faithfully thine and His,
DANA THOMAS.

Kotzebue, Alaska, 4th Mo. 22d, 1903.

The weariness and sadness of life come from persistently closing our eyes to its greatness. . . . There is no life so poor as that which through too close a grasp of visible things has lost all conscious hold upon unseen realities. Lifted into the atmosphere of Infinite Greatness, the soul itself grows great; enfolded within the Perfect Love, the life itself becomes love.—Lucy Larcom.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Minnie Bassett attended the meeting at Raysville, Ind., the 28th ult.

Irving King has been elected to the position of teacher of psychology and history of education at Pratt University.

Lindley A. Wells and family recently visited their old home meeting at Rose Hill, Kansas, and had excellent service. One soul was led to decide for Christ.

J. Edgar Williams has recently removed with his family to Greensboro, N. C., where he is now located in the meeting. His health has improved some since going to the State.

The meeting at Wabash, Ind., is prospering nicely, seventeen new members having been received this year. The Sabbath School is also doing good work, it having almost doubled its enrollment during the year.

Tilman Hobson, who was recently engaged with Chicago Friends in a series of meetings, spent the past week in delivering temperance addresses in the limits of Westfield Quarterly Meeting, Ind. He began a series of meetings with Friends at Paoli, Ind., the 8th inst., and will continue till the 25th, when he expects to attend quarterly meeting at Blue River, and continue in a series of meetings.

We publish herewith the resolution of the Lutheran Synod in favor of the Conference on the Liquor Traffic: "Resolved, That we heartily second the call of the Five Years Meeting of Friends for a conference of representatives of religious denominations in Washington in March, 1906, to consider how the Church can best exert a united influence in this cause, and on what proposition a practical agreement may be obtained, and that 10 delegates represent this body and the district synods select one delegate to such conference."

J. L. Spicer's collection of minerals, relics, fossils, shells, stone and bone implements, etc., has been accepted by Wilmington College. The trustees will build a special case to hold the specimens, which will be kept together as "The Spicer Collection."

George C. Wise, Jr., of Baltimore, visited Bellefonte, Pa., Friends in the love of the Gospel, on the 25th ult., and remained until the following Second-day. He was greatly favored in his ministry in the meetings held in Friends' Meeting House, in the jail, and in the homes of some of the members of Center Monthly Meeting. His remarks in the Christian Endeavor meeting, held in the Presbyterian Chapel, were appropriate and helpful.

Fourth month 26th an Endeavor Society was organized among the young people of the Friends' Mission at Gibara, Cuba. The members are taking great interest in the study of the Bible and in the work of the Church. All are asked to join in prayer that from among these young people there may be raised up preachers of the Gospel and Christian workers. Three young people were publicly received into membership Sixth month 7th, while a few weeks before three old people, aged 49, 75 and 90 years, respectively, were received.

Our friends, Luke and Elvira Woodard, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage at their home in Fountain City, Ind., on the 18th of last month. It was a very happy and auspicious occasion. About sixty were present, and many more from this country, from Canada and from Great Britain and Ireland sent them congratulations. A large number of presents were sent to them from friends and relatives, far and near. They said again the beautiful words which made them husband and wife fifty years ago, and many words of love and appreciation were spoken. Luke Woodard read a poem which he had composed for the occasion.

J. Lindley Spicer, who for nearly five years has been the superintendent of home finding and child placing for the Children's Home of Cincinnati, will leave that position Eighth month 3d to take up his new duties as superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work for New York Yearly Meeting. The Friends of Cincinnati tendered him and his family a reception the 17th ult., which was well attended. During his connection with the Children's Home work he traveled 112,981 miles, found homes for 597 homeless boys and girls, made 2,275 visits, and investigated and settled 351 complaints. His new address will be Poughkeepsie, N. Y., care E. D. Gildersleeve.

DIED.

CARMAN.—At Mecklenburg, N. Y., Fourth month 9th, 1903, Thomas Carman.

CARPENTER.—Near Macksville, Kansas, Fifth month 28th, 1903, William J. Carpenter, aged nearly 54 years. The deceased united with Friends in 1893, and remained a true and faithful member.

HOBSON.—At Crestline, Cherokee County, Kansas, Sixth month 16th, 1903, Hannah (Bales) Hobson, widow of Edward K. Hobson, in her 70th year. The deceased was a lifelong Friend, an earnest Christian, a faithful wife and a devoted mother.

WALTHALL.—At her home in Quaker, Ind., Fifth month 27th 1903, Olive Rees Walthall, daughter of Isaac and Arminta Rees, and wife of Allen J. Walthall, aged 30 years. She surrendered her young life to Jesus, and parted with friends and family in this world, sweetly trusting in the divine will.

WILLIAMS.—At Rancocas, N. J., Third month 8th, 1903, Samuel Williams.

WILLSON.—At her home, in East Everett, Mass., Sixth month 19th, 1903, Ellen L. W. Willson, widow of the late Samuel S. Willson, and daughter of Moses and Sarah H. Whittier, of Dover, N. H., aged 76 years. A beloved member of Boston Monthly Meeting of Friends.

WOODY.—At the home of Moses Maxwell, Thorntown, Ind., Sixth month 17th, 1903, Malinda Woody, in the 76th year of her age. She was a lifelong Friend, and lived a Christian life. She was a member of Sugar Plain Monthly Meeting at the time of her death. Interment at Walnut Grove Burying Ground.

BOOK NOTICE.

I. K. Funk, of Funk & Wagnalls, has recently issued a rather remarkable little book on the spiritual life and the coming of Christ. The book bears the title "The Next Step in Evolution." The kingdom of the spiritual man is its real subject, and it is a book which, though read in a single sitting, will make one think for many a day.

THE LIFE OF AN ANT QUEEN.

How long may an ant queen live? In their natural habitat some queens doubtless have short lives; but by reason of the protection afforded them, and the seclusion enforced by the workers, they probably live much longer than other members of the community. Within artificial surroundings they attain a comparatively long life. The oldest emmet queen known to science was one preserved under the care of Sir John Lubbock, later Lord Avebury. A number of years ago, during a visit to this distinguished naturalist at his country seat, High Elms, Kent, the writer for the first time saw this venerable sovereign, living in the ingenious artificial formicary which had been prepared for her. She

BABY WEATHER.

Little Fellows Don't Like the Hot Days.

Mothers should know exactly what food to give babies in hot weather.

With the broiling hot days in July and August the mother of a baby is always anxious for the health of her little one, and is then particularly careful in feeding. Milk sours quickly and other food is uncertain. Even in spite of caution, sickness sometimes creeps in and then the right food is more necessary than ever.

"Our baby boy two years old began in August to have attacks of terrible stomach and bowel trouble. The physician said his digestion was very bad, and that if it had been earlier in the summer and hotter weather we would surely have lost him.

"Finally we gave baby Grape-Nuts food, feeding it several times the first day, and the next morning he seemed better and brighter than he had been for many days. There was a great change in the condition of his bowels, and in three days they were entirely normal. He is now well and getting very strong and fleshy, and we know that Grape-Nuts saved his life, for he was a very, very ill baby. Grape-Nuts food must have wonderful properties to effect such cures as this.

"We grown-ups in our family all use Grape-Nuts, and also Postum in place of coffee, with the result that we never any of us have any coffee ills but are well and strong." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The reason Grape-Nuts food relieves bowel trouble in babies or adults is because the starch of the grain is predigested and does not tax the bowels, nor ferment like white bread, potatoes and other forms of starchy food.

was then in the prime of life, as it afterward appeared, being seven years old.

In the summer of 1887 Sir John was again visited, this time at his town house in London. After greetings, he was asked about his royal pet.

"I have sad news to tell you," he answered.

"What? Is the queen dead?"

"She died only yesterday. I have not had the heart to tell the news as yet even to my wife."

Having offered my hearty condolence, I asked to see the dead queen. Sir John led the way to the room where his artificial nests were kept. The glass case which contained the special formicary in which the old ant had lived was opened up. Lying in one of the larger open spaces or rooms was the dead queen. She was surrounded by a crowd of workers, who were tenderly licking her, touching her with their antennæ, and making other demonstrations as if soliciting her attention, or desiring to wake her out of sleep. Poor, dumb, loving, faithful creatures! There was no response. Their queen mother lay motionless beneath their demonstrations.

"They do not appear to have discovered that she is really dead," remarked Sir John. Afterward he wrote me of another queen which died at the age of fourteen. The ants dragged her body about with them when they moved until it fell to pieces.—H. C. McCook, in "Harper's Magazine."

A teacher was recently giving instruction to her pupils on the modern history of Italy, in the course of which attention was called to the Vatican as being the residence of the Pope. This lesson was followed by one on chemistry, when the terms solid, fluid, and vacuum were adequately defined. A review of the lessons on the following day brought out a startling revelation. The question was asked, "What is a vacuum?" To which one little girl gave the astonishing reply, "A vacuum is the place where the Pope lives."—"Friends' Intelligencer."

Events and Comments.

As we go to press reports reach us concerning the serious illness of Pope Leo, and, doubtless, the Roman Pontiff will have passed away before this reaches our readers.

During the fiscal year just closed 132,829 claims were allowed by the Pension Bureau and 113,720 rejected. The number of allowances exceeded those of last year to the extent of 1,115.

What is said to be the first municipal tuberculosis sanitarium in this country was opened recently at Cleveland. All patients in the city hospital under treatment for tuberculosis will be removed to the new institution and treated according to the latest scientific methods.

A summary of the business transacted by the Patent Office for the fiscal year ended Sixth month 30th, shows that 33,229 patents were granted and 54,256 applications filed. The receipts of the office were $1,595,125. The year has been one of the most prosperous in the history of the Bureau.

Trustees of Rush Medical College have succeeded in raising a fund of $1,000,000, which will be tendered to the trustees of the University of Chicago this week, thus assuring the gift of $6,000,000 promised by John D. Rockefeller and the construction in Chicago of a magnificent medical institution.

A new order of the British Board of Agriculture has been issued, which revises previous orders, and prohibits the landing in Great Britain of any hogs from the United States. It also restricts the importation of cattle from New England. The order goes into effect on Eighth month 1st.

A meeting of burghers for the purpose of discussing important public matters was held at Heidelberg, Transvaal, last week, and adopted resolutions regretting England's proposed introduction of Asiatic labor, and asking the Govern-

A Santa Barbara, Cal., dispatch says that an oil well in the northern part of the county, which has just begun to flow, proves to be one of the most remarkable wells yet discovered on the Pacific Coast, the first flow being estimated at 40 barrels a minute. The oil shot 50 feet above the top of the derrick. The depth of the well is about 2,000 feet.

The carpets of the adjusting rooms of the United States mint at San Francisco have been taken up and treated to a process for removing the gold dust. A bar of gold valued at $9,000 is the result. The carpets were laid six years ago. In the adjusting rooms the coins are filed down to proper weight and the finer gold dust sinks into the carpets.

Eleven Fall River cotton mills were closed last week on account of the corner in cotton. For the same reason a Huntsville (Ala.) mill has suspended its night run, the Eufala (Ala.) mills have closed for two months, the Princeton mills at Athens, Ga., have shut down "for a few weeks," and the Georgia Manufacturing Company at Gainesville has shut down, not to resume operation again "until fall."

The price of coal advanced 10 cents a ton the 1st inst., in accordance with the circulars sent out by the Reading Coal and Iron Company. On Eighth month 1st another 10 cents will be added, and a further advance of the same amount will be made in Ninth month. By Tenth month 1st the price will be back at the basis which prevailed after the strike, $6.75, to local customers by retail dealers.

A London letter under date of Sixth month 21st reports the hotels of that city crowded to such an extreme that some travelers were actually going to Paris in order to secure a bed-room. Americans constituted the mass of visitors, with more of the French in evidence than London knows just how to account for. Evidence of how prosperity has carried our people abroad is afforded in the fact that one tourist agency in London is receiving an average of 1,000 letters a day from Americans asking for accommodations.

Veterans from the North and men from the South who wore the gray gathered for the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg. The program provided for special exercises on Seventh month 1st, 2d and 3d, commemorative of the battle, and on the 7th an Independence Day celebration, with a big firemen's parade. On the opening day a bronze statue of John Burns was unveiled by Virginia O'Neal. We contrast this picture with the one of forty years ago, and rejoice in the change that has taken place.

Edwin Rhoads, an instructor in physics at Haverford College, was drowned, the 4th inst., while attempting to run the Turkey Hill Rapids, in the Susquehanna River, below Columbia, with a canoe party of Philadelphians. A fisherman directed them how to run the rapids, in which many lives have been lost. But he got his bearings mixed, and directed them to run the wrong side of the river. The canoe in which Prof. Rhoads was seated was swamped and capsized. Prof. Rhoads, though a good swimmer, went under at once, and was never seen again.

Medical circles in Vienna are greatly interested in a report, communicated to the Viennese Society of Physicians, to the effect that a long-standing case of cancer was cured by radium rays at the clinic of the late Prof. Gussenbauer. The patient, who was 61 years of age, had long suffered from cancer of the palate and lip, and had repeatedly been operated upon fruitlessly, until the autumn of 1902, when one physician determined to try radium rays, and treated the afflicted parts by exposing them to the light of radium bromide, the strongest radium preparation in existence. He was rewarded by a gradual and complete disappearance of the tumors.

The ship building trust was declared insolvent last week by a New Jersey Court, but the action was anticipated and the stock market was scarcely affected. The receivership will probably amount to no more than to bring the projected reorganization of the concern under the direction and judgment of the court. There will be no suspension of work in the various shipyards involved, and probably no dissolution of the combination. The downfall seems to be owing wholly to the reckless extravagance—to use no harsher term—of a lot of scheming promoters. But there are many trusts laboring under just such a load as has wrecked this combination.

"DABSTERS."

People Who Do Things by Piecemeal.

Many people are convinced coffee is the cause of their sufferings, and stop its use from time to time to get relief. During these periods when they are not drinking coffee they feel better. They are getting well in small installments.

"How much better it is to stop short on the coffee and shift to well-made Postum and get well once and for all. As soon as this is done the destroying effects of coffee are stopped and a powerful rebuilding agent is set to work. Health comes back by bounds, and so long as the right food and drink are used and improper food is left alone the cure is permanent.

A lady of Readfield, Me., says: "I was always a great lover of coffee, and drank it so steadily that I would have to stop it at times on account of dizziness in my head, gas in the stomach and other troubles. I would leave off the coffee for a few weeks until I felt better, then would go to drinking it again.

"I continued this for years and paid dearly for it, until about a year ago I read a Postum Cereal article, and bought and carefully prepared some. It filled the place of coffee from the start so far as flavor and taste go, and it has righted my stomach troubles. I have improved so that my friends notice the change. I have exchanged sickness and misery for health and happiness. Through Postum I have got well all at once." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ice cold Postum with a dash of lemon is a delightful "cooler" for warm days.

THE NEW GYMNASIUM AT Friends School

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

FRIENDS SCHOOL GYMNASIUM.

A fine new building with complete modern equipment, swimming pool, running track and lockers. To be used by boys and girls at different periods. Another mark in the progress of this school that has been growing for more than a hundred years. The spirit has ever been to add to equipment and methods that which would tend toward the mental, physical and moral growth of its pupils.

Conducted on a wisely arranged plan of co-education. Furnishes a sound thorough education, fitting for business and for college entrance. A quaint building called "The Three Oaks Studio" is set apart for classes in drawing, painting and wood carving. Special courses in music and art. Open to all denominations. Liberal endowments make low tuition. Modern buildings heated by steam. Large and beautiful grounds for outdoor sports. For catalogue address

IN UTTER DARK.

*In utter dark, in bitter pain,
I reached a vague hand out for strength.
It pressed a hand that pressed again,
And all my tumult calmed at length.
The darkness brightened slow around;
I looked to see what friendly hand
My need had grasped, and lo, I found
My foe of foes in all the land.
One angry look of strange surprise,
Then, "Take we what the Master sends;"
He holds me to his heart and cries,
"Brother, the Lord hath made us friends."*

THE TENDERNESS OF GOD.

"THE most comforting word to me in the Bible," said a dear aged saint, recently, "is tenderness. I never say over those words, 'His tender mercies,' without having the tears stream down my face." The dear soul was right. She has had what the world calls "trials" all through her long journey. She has had as full a taste as anybody of what are frequently called "bitter cups," but she has reached through the mystery of pain and suffering and has found the eternal fact that "GOD IS FOR US," and that "HIS TENDER MERCY IS OVER ALL." Any person who has learned that, and who has actually lived by that faith, through sun and shadow, has attained the most genuine and abiding success that is attainable.

It is one thing to talk in a comfortable way about the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God—even the heathen do the same—but it is quite a different thing to discover the fact anew in one's own life that He is my Father, and that His whole being is full of tenderness and love. Those who know it in this intimate and personal way can never speak of it as just one fact among many facts. It will make the tears flow and the heart beat and the throat fill, as in the case of our aged friend.

Who does not know the difference between the way the popular lecturer speaks of the duties of motherhood and the tenderness and power of the real mother herself. An ounce of mother weighs more than a ton of theory which has been learned out of books, because the mother has the ineffable wisdom of love and tenderness which breaks down everything before it. And those of us who have mothers in heaven melt down when we remember how through all the patient years of training and guidance and discipline we discovered the tenderness which almost made us forget the cost of her sacrifices for us.

Our lives would surely be better than they are if we only had in our hearts some real sense of the tenderness which is too great even for comparison with the mother's—the tenderness of God. Some of us stupidly admit that we get as good as we deserve. "As good as we deserve!" Where would any of us be if we got only what we deserve! God never treats us along the line of deserts. He is the God of all grace and outreaching love, who saves us by giving and bearing and suffering with us and for us. If we have not found the fact of His tenderness, and have not had our hearts melt over His sacrifice, we must beware lest we are too much wrapped up in our own merits, and too near the danger line of phariseeism.

EXCAVATIONS IN BIBLE LANDS.*

During the last fifty years ancient and mediæval history has been reconstructed. The sources from which information can be obtained have greatly increased. The past as it was known by our grandfathers was largely traditional, and consequently inaccurate and more or less mythical. It was the intellectual inheritance which had been handed down through the centuries, and had been modified and reinterpreted by the generations through which it passed. The perpetual duty of the learned was to "commit to faithful men who shall be able to teach others also." This process obtained in all countries, and during the last fifteen or twenty centuries was almost universal throughout the world. But the method had its limitations. Opinions and comments were confounded with facts. Conclusions were deduced from meager and inaccurate data. They were shaped by prejudice and local training, and handed down to posterity as the truth and the only truth. Such was the content of ancient and mediæval history a century ago.

But a kind Providence has not trusted the past to tradition alone. Each generation left its mark upon the country in which it lived, while many of the more ancient nations spent much of their time carving their records upon stone or writing them in clay. They prepared memorials to perpetuate their deeds. Thus they used a method fundamentally different from tradition, a method the veracity of which depended upon the changelessness of matter, while the hope of tradition rested in the faithfulness of men.

It is to this field of archæology that the modern historian has gone for new data. His method does not ignore tradition, but it strives to make each generation tell its own story. As a result a new era has dawned in this department of thought. Desolate ruins and silent tombs have been made to relate the deeds of those who lived thousands of years before the Christian age. In place of uninteresting catalogues of kings and long lists of forgotten dynasties we are furnished with the records of their origin, development and decay. We are able to appreciate, to some extent, their national and domestic life, and to share their emotions, their ambitions, and their religious aspirations.

This modern historical method has yielded a rich harvest during the past century and especially the last twenty-five years. Much has been found which throws new light upon the New Testament, and a broader and more vital conception of the life and mission of the Master has been obtained than that which was strained through "the dim light of the sanctuary" of the middle ages. Much also has been found to aid in the interpretation of the Old Testament scriptures, and it is in this line that "Excavations in Bible Lands During the Nineteenth Century," recently edited by Dr. Hilprecht, of the University of Pennsylvania, is most helpful. It gives an account of the early expeditions into these lands, together with brief sketches of the discoveries and the conclusions of Christian scholars after carefully comparing their work. The greater part of the book, however, is from Dr. Hilprecht's pen, and is a history of the four Assyrian expeditions sent out by the University of Pennsylvania, the most prolific and satisfactory efforts in the whole range of archæological research.

In this account the author gives a description of the excavations at Nippur, which is one of the oldest cities mentioned in the Scriptures, being "Calneh, in the land of Shinar," of Genesis 10: 10. He tells of the finding of the records of twenty dynasties, with annals reaching back into the fifth millennium B.C.; and also of the unearthing of thousands of tablets and inscriptions which reveal the history of civilizations which were already ancient when Abram migrated "from Ur of the Chaldees." The practical use of these finds is not alone the revelation of mathematical, astronomical and historical data, but in the service which they render in helping modern scholars form a conception of the spirit of the civilization which produced them.

Another admirable feature of the work is that it emphasizes the perspective of history. In many minds Rome, Greece, Babylon and Egypt are grouped together as ancient nations, without any clear conception of their relative antiquity. But the truth receives a new emphasis when we realize that Babylon and Egypt were buried beneath the ruins of centuries long before the Greeks gathered at the Olympian games, or the Latin cities formed a league in central Italy. This lack of perspective was a source of much error to former historians. Comparatively modern ruins were constantly mistaken for those of greater antiquity, and not until the systematic investigations of the last few years have these errors begun to disappear.

The great value of this field of investigation is slowly forcing itself home to an increasing number of our people. The secular and religious press is constantly agitating questions relative to the subject. Liberal contributions for the purpose of carrying forward research, and the establishment of chairs on this and kindred lines in many of our institutions of higher learning, speak well for the movement, and insure larger results for the future. At the present, however, many are asking for a reliable and general statement of the subject, and nothing could be more opportune than the present work, coming as it does from a thorough and fair-minded Assyrian scholar, and a man whose sound Christian character places him beyond the suspicion of the most conservative thinkers.

Bible students gain much from such a study, since a lack of perspective has allowed error to obtain in Biblical exegesis. The symbolical writings of the ancient Hebrews have long been interpreted by the same standards as the philosophical works of their more modern descendants. Also the lack of appreciation for the spirit of the numerous civilizations which found their echo in the thought forms of Israel during the different periods of her history has robbed the Scriptures of much of their original force. We are coming to realize more and more, however, that the Bible, being a product of many centuries, must be interpreted in the historical settings of its origins before the full significance of revelation can be felt.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THERE has been much startling evidence, since our editorial on "Lynching" was written, which indicates that our statement upon the growing tendency toward lawlessness is only too true. Mob violence has in all ages shown a tendency to spread almost like an epidemic, and in the last few weeks there have been outbreaks which show that the popular mind is in a dangerous state of nervous excitement. We should do everything within our power to offset it by practicing calmness and by showing in the smallest details of our lives a genuine appreciation of the worth of human life. Let us treat every man with whom we have dealings as a brother; let us really practice brotherhood and avoid all harshness and bitterness. This will always have a wholesome effect, and we can thus make no small contribution toward restoring quietness and toward raising the sense of the value of human life in popular estimation.

EACH year California Yearly Meeting makes real progress. The sessions this year seem to have been of a high order and full of interest. There was no lack of evangelistic and missionary zeal, and at the same time there was a proper concern for the edification of the membership in life and truth. The high water mark was reached when the longed-for endowment of $50,000 for Whittier College was secured. It is very greatly to the credit of the yearly meeting that so much of this endowment was subscribed by its own members. The yearly meeting has gained about 180 members during the year, and there is prospect of steady increase. A full report of the proceedings is printed elsewhere in this issue.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A PRESENT DAY INTERPRETATION.

BY DELIA REES.

What are the vital proofs of the value of the gospel of Christ? Or, in other words, what are the essential elements of true religion? Or yet again, what is man's fundamental need? What may we safely declare will meet that need?

This question put in different forms is interesting us all more and more. And the repeated interrogation springing from every side of life proves a wholesome sifter of our religious ideas, and tends to bring us ever nearer the simplest expressions of the gospel of Christ. Paul's proof of the value of the gospel, and his reason for preaching it, were, first, personal and inner evidence. And though the gospel was, as yet, a small factor in the world's history, he was not ashamed to be its advocate because he knew it was an effective force. He had finally discovered the fundamental need of his own life and being and that need had been satisfactorily met in the gospel of Jesus Christ. He also understood humanity sufficiently to safely reason that his need was the need of mankind. And this formed the basis of his life work. He certainly allowed and admitted some elements in his religion that were not essential, but he did keep what was to him fundamental to the fore—a personal deliverance from sin through the revelation of Jesus Christ in him. He had had a fierce and real conflict with what he called the "flesh," and the battle had gone against him time and again. But when it pleased God to reveal His Son in him he had realized victory. He no longer battled alone. Christ was within and imparted real strength, enabling him to work the works of righteousness. Hence the gist of Paul's gospel is a fundamental and real union of Christ with man. "Christ in you." "It is God that worketh in you." "Christ liveth in Me." "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God," are some of his characteristic expressions, and to him life was hid with Christ in God. It was this conscious union of the human and the divine that made him such a glad apostle. It was his conscious certainty of God that made him always the rejoicing man, and it was this living with Christ in God that gave him eyes to see the eternal things over against the temporal things. This union of the inner man with Christ it was that transposed his valuation of things and caused him to set a far higher value on the unseen than he set on the seen.

And it was in this union that he found his incentive to preach the gospel, and from the growth and development of this union grew his forms of expressing the truth. In other words, his creed grew out of his inner life. He brought all of his intellectual or traditional beliefs under the clear and steady light of this life hid with Christ in God and discovered their real or pretended value. He declared to others what had under this new inner relationship been declared to him. He does not dwell so much in his epistles on Christ crucified as he does upon Christ risen, who will now live and work in men. He knows that Christ was crucified, but the joyous foundation of his victory was the discovery of Christ's resurrection. He had conquered death and was alive forevermore.

This is the fundamental need still both in and out of the Church. Man needs God, needs a conscious touch with the divine. This only will save and set him free for service to his brother man. And I am more and more persuaded that religion consists in this inner union with Christ. That it does not consist in any forms or statements of belief which we may hold, though I grant the great importance of correct statement and sound form. And farther, I believe that this living and fundamental union with Christ will enable us to give new and fresh expression to the truth. I utterly fail to see any value in holding to forms of truth which are but a memory. I believe with all my heart that the gospel of Jesus Christ is capable of being expressed in the language which men use and understand to-day as truly as it was expressed in the language of Palestine twenty centuries ago. The gospel does not drag men backward in time. It simply requires that man be right in his relations with God, that he be in union with the divine and that he let this divine union work out into right relations with the men and life of his day.

A knowledge of the past we every one need if we would have a true perspective and rightly understand the present problems of the Church and of life, and such a knowledge is well worth all our pains; but we shall make fatal mistake if we seek with such knowledge to resuscitate old forms of truth in the minds of men. The truth may be revived in our midst—God grant that it may!—but it must be by the way of individual union with Christ, and it must have present day expression if we would make the people feel its force and see in it their help.

The form of expression that satisfied the fourth or the tenth or even the eighteenth century will not satisfy or move the mind of the twentieth century. The truth, in as far as it is Jesus Christ, is the same yesterday, to-day and forever; but man's mode or form of expressing the truth is an entirely different thing. Jesus refused to give to Pilate a fixed form of words as answer to his inquiry, What is truth? for truth lives and grows and takes on many forms of expression. As for all other forms of life, so for religion there has been found an effective expression for every age. And the life of to-day with its tremendous momentum of activity cannot be held while we discourse in forms of theology or doctrine that were effective two hundred years ago. Does it follow, then, that men to-day cannot have eternal life? That they are too busy? That they do not hunger for it? They surely do hunger, and it is to be doubted if humanity even at any age so hungered for the truth as at the present. And they cannot change or turn backward the onrushing tides of life. They must themselves keep moving if they would live, and the struggle is a fierce one. They need just that simple and clear interpretation of Jesus Christ that will enable them to let Him take His rightful place in them, giving them spiritual rest in the rush of outward life and toil, imparting to them His serene strength in the midst of the friction of the wheels of life, breathing through them His peace in a world of turbulence, and giving them a sure grasp of eternal values over against the flow and ebb of earthly interests. The truth which set men free hundreds of years ago will set men free to-day, but it needs to be so expressed that it will quickly find their needy place, clothed in language that appeals to their every-day manner of thinking and feeling.

I fully believe that such an interpretation may be effectively given to-day, but the messenger must speak with an authority that comes from inner union with God, and must be willing to become all things to all men if by any means he may save some.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

CORRECTED EYESIGHT.

BY SAMUEL MILES.

Some years ago, while crossing the Atlantic, and having now been some days out of sight of land, a voice was heard in the early morning which sent a thrill through our veins, which we cannot soon forget. It was this: "Land in sight."

I hastily dressed, went upon deck and cast my eyes all around the clear horizon, but could see nothing but the rolling billows as they met the sky in the distance. I realized then that there were eyes trained differently from mine. It was some time before I could distinguish a faint streak, as a range of hills made their appearance on the Irish coast. I am now convinced that some people can see more than others. My father was a lover of nature, and he looked not only upon the stones and rocks which to him were a source of great delight, but he took pains to count the wild flowers as he passed along the road, and found forty varieties in a short time. It is likely that not one person in a thousand would have seen as many.

The story is told of an old Scotchman who was standing in the road with uncovered head, when a passer-by made inquiry concerning his motive. He replied that every morning for forty years he had taken off his bonnet to the beauty of the world.

Stephen exclaimed, "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." To most of us such a sight is never ours to behold, but Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." When and how shall we see Him? Shall we have to wait until the pearly gates are open, and the ransomed of the Lord are ushered in with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads? With trained eyes we will be able in a sense to see Him in His handiwork.

While there are so many with defective eyesight, and specialists find constant employment, how needful that the eyes of our mind or understanding be enlightened; then shall we be able to see His hand in the opening of vegetation in the springtime, in the ceaseless flow of the mighty waves as they beat against the shore, or the waterfall, like a perpetual motion, in the volcanic eruptions, and in a thousand other ways, but more especially in the intelligences created in His own image. These are to represent Him in the various departments and miseries of what we call "Life."

We recall what Job said, "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee"; and also the apostle, when he said, "Now we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor."

Monkton Ridge, Vt.

THE STRENGTH THAT IS BEAUTY.

BY JAMES E. C. SAWYER.

At the recent dedication of the new edifice of the Grace Memorial Reformed Church, Washington, President Roosevelt made a brief and most practical address, the leading thought of which was that "we can serve the Lord by the way we serve our fellow men." "The man who is not a tender, a considerate husband, a loving and wise father, is not serving the Lord when he goes to church."

Such words as these are a wholesome religious tonic. There are many good people who are spiritual epicureans. They are luxurious and fastidious with reference to their spiritual environment. Even their ideal of holiness is that of a largely selfish spiritual enjoyment, or at the best a refined degree of self-culture. Their spiritual endeavors center in themselves and they are prone to fancy how pleasant it would be if they had nothing to do but to take care of their souls.

There is some of this in most of us. We imagine that it would be much easier to be holy if it were not for the hindrance created by the various distractions, perplexities and troubles that continually attend us. Many a man imagines that it would be easier to be a Christian if it were not for the monotony and hardship of his daily toil. Many a man of business thinks it impossible for him to be the best kind of a Christian in the midst of the activities and trials of his business life. The wife and mother gets weary of the tiresome sameness of the unending round of her home duties, and thinks she could be more spiritual were it not for them. Sometimes we find a man or woman who neglects ordinary but important secular duties in order to have more leisure for meditation or attendance upon religious meetings.

Religion is self-development, but not that only or chiefly. The true ideal of a Christian life is the character of Christ. His goodness was always active. He had indeed His seasons of retirement for meditation and prayer, but from the Mount of Transfiguration itself He came down to cast out devils and heal the sick, and press His way to His final suffering on Calvary. If we set Him always before us as the ideal of our spiritual life, we will be led out into the world for service. We will hear His voice saying unto us, "As My Father hath sent Me into the world, even so I send you also into the world."

Moreover, cloistered piety is likely to become morbid. The study of one's heart is well, but the study of the needs of others and of the ways in which we can serve them is healthier for us. Too much self-examination is like the foolishness of children who pull up the young plants in their gardens to see how they are growing.

Our hindrances are often our best helps. The very routine of our daily work may be a salutary spiritual discipline. That is not the purest soul which is sheltered from all exposure to temptation, but the one that is continually braced in an attitude of resistance to the manifold forms of evil about it. Inward peace is not the result of quiet hours, of lonely brooding, but of the coming of a divine life into the heart with power to bring all of its affections into perfect harmony with the divine will. We do not find the noblest type of piety among those races which have their home where every prospect pleases the eye, and where the means of existence are to be had without effort, but among those active peoples who have conquered adverse natural conditions and are constantly stimulated to endeavor by the difficulties that they have to overcome.

Spiritual beauty is to be greatly desired, but it is loveliest when it is the crown of strength. The best illustration of a Christian life is not a carefully tended exotic in a conservatory; better far is it represented by the rose that blooms amid the Alpine cliffs and at the edge of the glacier, or by the vine whose fruitfulness results from frequent pruning by the husbandman, or the oak that wrestles with the tempests and grows the tougher and the more glorious by the conflict. Strength becomes beauty when love consecrates it to service.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

California Yearly Meeting convened at Whittier, Cal., Sixth month 23d, and closed the 30th. The sessions throughout were characterized by a deep devotional spirit and absolutely harmonious action in all matters that came up for decision.

There were no ministers from other yearly meetings with minutes for service except John and Nettie Riley, who have been engaged in evangelistic work for several months on this coast. President Rosenberger, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, and Bertha Pinkham, of Cleveland, Ohio, were present a portion of the time.

Two sessions of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight were held. While there was a feeling of deep thankfulness for the favor of God upon our meetings, there was also earnest consideration of the difficulties and dangers to be met. There was a lively concern that the entire membership of our meetings should feel the responsibility of our meetings for worship, and that they should not feel themselves too easily excused from vocal participation therein.

The report on the state of Society was encouraging. Nearly all the meetings seemed in a healthy condition. There was an increase of membership of about 180. The importance of family worship was urged upon Friends. It was felt that the unusual pressure of business life brought great temptation to neglect in this respect, at the same time that it increased the need of it.

The report of evangelistic and pastoral work showed that effective work had been done both in the regular pastoral oversight and in special evangelistic meetings. John Riley and wife had held special services in many of our meetings, which had been blessed of the Lord to the strengthening of the Church. A strong evangelistic committee was appointed, and about $1,300 pledged for the work.

Friends have been active in temperance work, and much has been accomplished through co-operative work in connection with the Anti-saloon League. An excellent address was given by Edwin C. Dinwiddie, of Washington, D. C.

Great interest was taken in the educational work in connection with Whittier College. The reports showed a very prosperous year. President Rosenberger gave an inspiring address. The effort to raise the endowment fund of $50,000 was crowned with success, about $8,000 being pledged at one session to complete it, and $1,000 at another to meet current expenses. Our friend, Washington Hadley, made another offer of $10,000 toward another $50,000. It is his desire to see the college firmly established with ample income.

The missionary session is always one of great interest. The report of work at the Kotzebue station, in Northern Alaska, was very cheering. The natives show great readiness to receive the gospel, and a charming persistency in living it out, not only at the mission station, but also in their extensive wanderings throughout that region, and sometimes under great temptation. There are now about 160 members of the mission church in good standing. Beside the foreign work the home work is full of interest. The Sunshine Mission, at San Francisco, was reported by Esther Smith and Nannie Arnold, and the Spanish Mission work by Ervin G. and Margaret Taber, who have been sustained in this field the past year. There has been raised nearly $3,000 for these various fields the past year.

The action of the Five Years Meeting in the call for a Temperance Congress was endorsed, as was also the amendment to the Discipline.

The morning meetings were heart-searching seasons. Amos Kenworthy and John and Nettie Riley were favored in the presentation of the truth, and many hearts were reached and quickened in their religious life.

NOTES.

John Henry and Mirriam C. Douglas were able to be present at nearly all the sessions. He has been appointed Evangelistic Superintendent for the coming year.

Thomas Armstrong, who has been pastor at Long Beach for several years, is retiring from active pastoral work. He is much beloved by all Friends. He was regularly in his place at the head of the yearly meeting.

John C. Chawner, who has been our efficient clerk for many years, was absent from several sessions on account of sickness. The reading clerk, R. Esther Smith, ably presided during his absence.

Many Friends of other yearly meetings, who were visiting on this coast, were acceptably present at yearly meeting.

The new meeting house at Whittier, with its large and comfortable auditorium, and its ample accommodations for meals in the basement, was much appreciated. Nearly all Friends took their meals there, and this added much to the pleasure of the meeting by its opportunity for social intercourse.

The entire college endowment except about $3,000, was pledged by Friends of California. This, with the funds necessary to carry on the work of the departments, is about all Friends have cared to handle at present. It is to be hoped that some generous Friends elsewhere will feel an interest in supporting Washington Hadley's offer toward the second $50,000 for the college, to be raised this year.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING.

Canada Yearly Meeting was held this year in the meeting house on Carlton Street, Toronto, from Sixth-day, 26th of Sixth month, till the Third-day following, inclusive.

The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight began on the Fifth-day, preceding the yearly meeting, at 10 a.m. The burden of the first session was (1) Our Message—"The Gospel of Christ"; (2) Our Preparation—"Be filled with the Spirit"; (3) Our Attitude—"Be ready." Verbal reports were given at the afternoon session of the work and workers from the different parts of the yearly meeting, showing that whilst in some places the meetings are small, still on the whole our work is encouraging, and in many places has a more permanent appearance than ever before.

The great question coming up from many parts being: "How can we get the children and young people in our homes and Bible Schools to feel that they have a work to do for Christ, and in our branch of the Church?"

At 10 a.m., on Sixth-day, the yearly meeting gathered, with the clerk, William I. Moore, and one of the assistant clerks, John R. Webb, at the table. A wave of deep feeling passed over the meeting as the place so long occupied by our dear friend, Hannah J. Cody, was seen empty. Later in the meeting a memorial of our dear friend was read, and many loving tributes to her memory were spoken. She was for many years a faithful elder, and has occupied a seat at the table of the yearly meeting, either as clerk or assistant clerk, ever since its organization thirty-six years ago.

William I. Moore was again appointed clerk this year, with Marianna Treffry and John R. Webb as assistant clerks.

The ministers in attendance from other yearly meetings were: Willis R. Hotchkiss and William M. Smith, from Ohio; Oliver Frazer, from Western; Rufus M. Garratt, from Iowa, and Oliver White, from Indiana. Epistles were read from all the yearly meetings with whom we correspond, also a letter from the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight of London Yearly Meeting, and one from the yearly gathering of Friends in Japan.

The report of the Home Mission Committee showed that nearly $2,000 had been raised for that part of the work of the Church during the year, a gain of $300 above last year. More meetings have been started, a number of others have been helped and strengthened. Rockwood Preparative Meeting has become a monthly meeting. Some more of our meetings have adopted the pastoral system, with marked increase in attendance and influence, as well as in spiritual life and power. The Hartney Meeting, Manitoba, under the care of Alma Dale, has grown to be a strong cause, and it is expected will next year be self-supporting. William I. Moore, chairman of the Home Mission Committee, was liberated to visit our scattered members in Manitoba and the Northwest, with a view to starting a Friends' Colony in the near future. This is felt necessary, because so many of the Friends go to the West and become so scattered as to be largely lost to the Society; whereas if a Friends' Colony were started they would undoubtedly settle together, where they would be a mutual help to each other, both temporally and in the work of the Church. Our brother starts for the West on the 4th of Seventh month, and goes followed by the prayers and best wishes of many Friends.

A subscription of $532.50 was raised in the meeting as a beginning for the Home Mission Fund for the coming year; also a $300 appropriation from the yearly meeting treasury.

The Temperance Committee presented a very satisfactory report. A letter was also read from the Ontario branch of the Dominion Temperance Alliance, thanking the Friends for their interest and help in the great work of reform, and asking the yearly meeting to appoint delegates to the next meeting of the Alliance, to be held in May of 1904.

The Pickering College report shows a net gain on current account of $895.94 over expenditures. The Endowment Fund, although not large, is increasing steadily, and a considerable amount, made up mostly of small sums, is promised to be paid annually towards the fund. Through the kind liberality of the principal and a few Friends, an acetylene lighting plant, worth $1,000, has been put in, which adds very much to the appearance of the college buildings by night, as well as to the convenience and safety of all concerned. It is acknowledged even by outsiders, and all who have visited the school, that the Friends have a college which is second to no institution of its kind in Canada; and the yearly meeting has, in the influence of the students going out from the college an asset which no balance sheet could ever show. Some twenty-five of the male students have professed conversion during the past year, their lives as well as their words testifying to the genuineness of their profession.

A request to change the time of holding the quarterly meeting came from West Lake, which was granted, so that from this time the quarterly meeting held at Bloomfield formerly on first Seventh-day in Third month, will be held third Seventh-day in Second month, and the meeting hitherto held at Wooler on first Seventh-day in Twelfth month will be held third Seventh-day in Eleventh month.

A telegram of fraternal greeting was received from California Yearly Meeting, then in session, which was replied to by wire with greetings from Canada, reference being made to Heb. 13: 20, 21.

The Discipline Committee brought to the yearly meeting the proposed new Discipline, which, after careful consideration, was adopted, to become operative at once.

Whilst the meeting is unanimous in the belief that the new Discipline adopted at this time suits the condition of things in Canada better than the Uniform

Discipline adopted by the American yearly meetings, still there is no feeling of disunity with them, but rather of a most cordial and brotherly nature.

The work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society for the past year has been the most encouraging of any year since its organization eighteen years ago. Nearly every monthly letter received from our missionaries, Gurney and Elizabeth Binford, give accounts of a greater or less number of conversions. There have been $1,450 raised for Foreign Missions during the year, besides a creditable sum to help in building the new meeting house in Mito. The W. F. M. S. held its public meeting on Second-day evening, which was addressed by Willis R. Hotchkiss and Alma G. Dale. Willis R. Hotchkiss also spoke to a large meeting at 3 p.m. on First-day, on the work of the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission, and a collection of over $300 was taken to aid in that work.

The report of the F. A. I. M. was read on Second-day, and Marianna Harris, of Rockwood, and L. J. Thomas, 52 Bay Street, Toronto, were appointed as our members of the African Mission Board.

The statistical report shows 19 ministers and 1,080 members, but the clerk pointed out that after deducting the losses from the gains there is really a net gain of 57 members, showing a mistake in the numbers given of 52. To avoid the repetition of such an error a statistical secretary was appointed.

The Bible School report was incomplete, owing to the failure of four schools to have their reports forwarded in time for the yearly meeting. In the 19 schools heard from there are on roll 890 scholars, and $277.56 raised for Foreign Missions. Fourteen of the schools report, "The interest in our school evinces a growth in spiritual things."

The various sessions of the yearly meeting have been helpful throughout to those whose privilege it has been to attend them, and many have gone to their homes resolved to live as never before "For Christ and the Church."

The meeting adjourned to meet at Pickering next year if the Lord will.

The International Lesson.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON IV.

SEVENTH MONTH 26, 1903.

SAUL REJECTED AS KING.

1 Samuel 15: 13-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—To obey is better than sacrifice. 1 Sam. 15: 22.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 20.—Saul rejected as king. 1 Sam. 15: 13-23.

Third-day, Seventh mo. 21.—A previous sin. 1 Sam. 13: 5-14.

Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 22.—Result of disobedience. 1 Sam. 15: 24-31.

Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 23.—Sentence confirmed. 1 Sam. 28: 15-20.

Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 24.—God's requirement. Micah 6: 1-8.

Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 25.—Judgment on disobedience. Prov. 1: 22-33.

First-day, Seventh mo. 26.—Obedience better. Isa. 1: 10-20.

The time of the present lesson is about fifteen years after the beginning of Saul's reign. (1065 or 1025 B.C.) The place was Gilgal, not far from Jericho. Samuel at this time was probably about eighty years old, and though no longer holding a political position was still a prophet though not a priest.

The chapters intervening between the last lesson and the present should be read to gain the connection. Saul at this time must have been about fifty years old, and was rather a successful chieftain than king of an organized realm. The welding of the Israelites into a real kingdom was reserved for David.

The incident immediately preceding the lesson was the expedition against the Amalekites. This Saul had been commanded to undertake. It was a war not of defense, as most of the wars had been, but a war of aggression. The Amalekites were a wild tribe descended from Esau (Gen. 36: 12, 16). Their abode was to the south or southwest of Palestine. The Amalekites attacked the Israelites on their march to Sinai, and for this it was foretold that the Lord would have war with Amalek from generation to generation. (Ex. 17: 16.) The account in Exodus should be read. (Ex. 17: 8-16.) See also Num. 24: 20; Deut. 25: 19; Judg. 3: 13; 6: 3; 7: 12. Saul was commanded to exterminate these inveterate foes. (1 Sam. 15: 2, 3.) The account goes on to tell how Saul spared Agag the king and the best of the herds and flocks, etc. Samuel was informed by the Lord of this action, and was told to go to meet Saul. This he did, and they met at Gilgal. Samuel was troubled at the message he had to deliver, and had prayed to the Lord concerning it, but his prayer was not granted.

13. "Came to Saul." To Gilgal, it was here that the kingdom had been confirmed to him (1 Sam. 11: 14, 15), and here it was to be taken from him. "Blessed be thou." "God bless you." "I have performed the commandment." Compare with verse 3. Saul apparently leaves Jehovah out of account in his attempt to deceive Samuel.

14. "And Samuel said," etc. Circumstances gave Saul the lie. All the animals had been "devoted" (consecrated) to Jehovah—and so were to be slain.

15. "And Saul said," etc. He attempts to evade responsibility by shifting it upon the people. Compare verses 9, 21. "Saul's confession of the fact is so frank as to be impudent, and equally offensive is his intimation that the religious purpose in view was sufficient justification."

16. "Samuel said unto Saul, stay." Samuel cuts him short. "This night." We should say, "last night."

17. "Though thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel?" American Revised Version. Saul was the first real head of Israel for a long time, and his appointment was made by Jehovah, and not through his own efforts.

18. His expedition against the Amalekites was also the work of Jehovah. "Utterly destroy." There have been many explanations of this apparently vindictive command. The most satisfactory is that it was wholly in accord with the character of the times. This we know not only from sacred history, but also from general history. Compare Deut. 7: 2; 20: 17; Josh. 6: 21. In such cases the gold and silver belonged to the treasury of Jehovah, but everything else, including human beings, must be destroyed.

19. Samuel states the case in the true light. "And why didst thou not obey the voice of Jehovah, and didst swoop upon the booty, and didst that which is evil in the eyes of Jehovah?"

20, 21. "And Saul said . . . I have obeyed," etc. He persists in justifying himself. He says, "I have destroyed the Amalekites. Agag is a proof of it. The people have brought the spoil home to sacrifice to Jehovah." It might seem a praiseworthy thing to save the chief things for sacrifice, but if they were "devoted" to Jehovah they could not be used for sacrifice, because they did not belong to the Israelites.

Saul says the Amalekites were utterly destroyed, but compare 1 Sam. 30: 1. Note that Saul says here and in verse 15, "Thy God," as if either Samuel were seeking his own glory or as if Saul did not believe in Jehovah.

22. Samuel's reply in the original is rhythmical; it has been thus translated:

"Does Jehovah delight in offerings and sacrifices
As in obedience to the voice of Jehovah?
Behold, obedience is better than sacrifice,
And to hearken than the fat of rams.
For rebellion is the sin of soothsaying,
Obstinacy is the iniquity of Teraphim.
Because thou has rejected the word of Jehovah,
He has rejected thee from ruling over Israel."

The spirit of these words is also that of the later prophets. Their teaching is that no external ceremony or observances can take the place of the true worship of the heart. Compare Ps. 40: 6-8; Isa. 1: 11-15; Jer. 6: 20; Hos. 6: 6; Amos 5: 21-24; Micah 6: 6-8, etc. Obedience is the organ of spiritual life. Without it there can be no true union between God and man. Incomplete obedience is really disobedience. Obedience is something which every one can give. It needs no intermediary. "Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft." Literally, as above, "is the sin of witchcraft." The verse is obscure. It seems to mean that the sin of Saul is as bad as that of the heathen, who are condemned for soothsaying and idolatry. "Disobedience is in fact idolatry, because it elevates self-will into a god." The mention of witchcraft is perhaps an allusion to Saul's zeal in abolishing witchcraft. (1 Sam. 28: 3.) As Saul had rejected Jehovah by his disobedience, he himself is rejected by Jehovah.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Obedience is the first requisite of the believer.
2. This account "urges us to fulfill the commandments of God to the very uttermost, making no reservations. It teaches us that nothing can make up for disobedience to the will of God." "Obedience is better than any sacrifice. This is the most precious truth preached to us by the mouth of Samuel."

Blessed is the man who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness. Know thy work and do it; and work at it like Hercules. One monster there is in the world, the idle man.—Carlyle.

TOPIC FOR SEVENTH MONTH TWENTY-SIXTH.

A MISSION STUDY OF SOUTH AMERICA.

Luke 2: 25-32.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 20.—Preach everywhere. Mark 16: 15-20.
Third-day, Seventh mo. 21.—A message to the South. Isa. 43: 6-9.
Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 22.—The Spirit promised all. Isa. 44: 3-5.
Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 23.—"Sprinkle many nations." Isa. 52: 13-15.
Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 24.—The world for Christ. Mal. 1: 11.
Seventh-day, Seventh mo. 25.—Call of the Gentiles. Luke 14: 16-24.

Simeon, speaking in the Spirit, declared the "Consolation of Israel" to be also "a light for revelation to the Gentiles." This means that Israel had no selfish claim on her chief glory, but that she must publish to the Gentile world the good news of the kingdom.

Foreign Protestants in South America are said to be peculiarly open to the charge of indifference to all needs but their own. The seaports have a considerable foreign population, which is, as a rule, fairly well supplied with ministers and places of worship, but the natives of the interior seem to be beyond their consideration.

Among what are classed as natives are the descendants of early Spanish and Portuguese settlers, many of them of mixed blood, and large numbers of full-blooded Indians, whose speech and religion are alike free from all Caucasian influence. Catholicism is, of course, the predominant faith, except where the sway of paganism is still unbroken; and while admirable heroism and commendable efforts are not wanting, the fact remains that the general tendency has been to a peculiarly corrupt and too often openly immoral condition. "South America is a priest-ridden continent, without family life, given up to domestic anarchy, to religious bacchanals, to the worship of grotesque images, to the practice of pagan or semi-pagan rites, and to the control of a most profligate priesthood."

There is still in some countries the menace of the political influence of the Romish Church, but the movement is steadily in the direction of the open field. In Montevideo a young Italian was converted in a mission service, and from a dancer in saloons he became a colporteur, traversing a considerable portion of the continent. At one time he was imprisoned for four months, when his release could have been procured any day by giving his promise to preach no more. He refused, was tried by the Supreme Court, and set at liberty. His case illustrates that of many who, having left their European homes, have become free from priestly control, and have been reached by missionary effort in the new land—a suggestion to us in this time of overflowing immigration.

Guiana presents a striking picture of the power of our Captain where human weapons have suffered defeat: runaway slaves multiplying in fastnesses where their white owners could not pursue became a menace to the government of the colonies, and finally defeated its forces. The Moravian missionaries were then appealed to, and, "being used as the agents of our Lord Jesus Christ, they conquered them by the power of love, and there has been no insurrection since that day."

Samples of the work for the aborigines are the results in Terra del Fuego, where a most debased tribe of savages was brought to civilization through the light and power of the Gospel; or in the Pagan Chaco of Paraguay, which, from an absolute ignorance of Christ in 1889, advanced in ten years to a little church of their own, with native teachers, men and women, proclaiming the truth to their listening fellow countrymen.

Our sister continent is coming to mean more and more to us politically and commercially. Can the Church withhold the most precious gift of all?

God works in you to will. He does not work to make you feel, because feeling ends in smoke so often. God does not work in you to think, because you think and think again. But God works in you to will. That is, there rises up in your heart a desire which becomes at last a purpose to be free.—F. B. Meyer.

Correspondence.

To Indiana Friends:

The attention of the monthly meetings of Indiana Yearly Meeting is hereby called to the importance of providing the necessary funds so that our ministers and other Christian workers who are not able to pay their own expenses can attend the Bible Institute at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., beginning Seventh month 29th, closing Eighth month 6th, 1903. Yours truly,

JOSEPH O. BINFORD,

General Superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work of Indiana Yearly Meeting.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

We shall be pleased to mail addressed postal cards to any one who will kindly send us items of news from time to time.

Dr. Lucy Gaynor has resigned her position at the Nanking Mission to come home to care for her mother.

Friends of Watseka, Ill., under the leadership of Willis Bond, have won a victory over the saloon element in that town.

The Friends of High Point, N. C., have begun the erection of their new meeting house at an expense of $7,000. The building is of granite.

Thomas Newlin has been spending a few weeks at "The Summer School of the South," which is held this summer at Knoxville, Tenn.

Robert H. Rogers is laboring in the meeting at Toronto, Can. He will continue there for a couple of months during the absence of Wm. I. Moore.

Wilbur A. Estes has returned from China for a short visit. He intends leaving his little daughter Helen in this country when he returns to his mission field in the autumn.

Dr. J. J. Cox, of North Carolina, has been seriously ill with an attack of heart trouble. His condition seems somewhat improved, but he is still in a very critical condition.

A report from New Hope Bible School, near Manchester, Okla., gives an average attendance of 72, and shows one-third of the total collection appropriated for mission work.

All friends of Haverford College have been deeply saddened by the sudden death, by drowning, of Dr. Edward Rhoads, who was instructor in physics in the college—a young man of great promise.

Ogden Monthly Meeting, Ohio, was held the 27th ult. An excellent spirit pervaded the entire meeting. A minister, John L. Kittrell, was received by certificate from Wilmington Monthly Meeting.

Rufus M. Jones attended the morning and evening meeting at South China, Maine, his old home, on First-day, the 5th inst. The morning meeting was large, and there was evidence of good interest.

We have received a personal letter from Edward C. Young, of Ohio, who, in earlier years, did much service for his Master in the eastern yearly meetings. He is now venerable with age and feeble in body, but deeply interested in the cause for which he gave the best years of his life. His home is at North Lewisburg, Ohio.

"All friends who expect to attend North Carolina Yearly Meeting, beginning with Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, Eighth month 4th, would do well to inform the undersigned members of the Reception Committee. Also members of North Carolina Yearly Meeting who desire to engage board should inform the same committee.

"W. T. Parker and Eli Reece, Committee, High Point, N. C."

Mt. Vernon Quarterly Meeting was held at Aurora, S. D., the 27th and 28th ult. Robert McDorman, of Kemma, Neb., and Fred Coppock and W. B. Difford, from Iowa, were present in the love and power of the Gospel. Fred Coppock and W. B. Difford held a week's meeting, both at Mt. Vernon and Aurora, and were much blessed in their labors. Several were led to take a definite stand for God. The meetings were built up and strengthened in the faith.

We give this week a notice of the death of Amy D., wife of Edward C. Cook. She was a native of Ohio, and she and her husband were both ministers in Kansas Yearly Meeting. They recently took treatment at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, and afterward visited New England Yearly Meeting. The closing weeks of her life, though filled with a consciousness of her approaching departure, were seasons of joyous service. After having delivered her message to New England Yearly Meeting she seemed to feel that her labors were finished, and calmly entered into her rest.

R. Anna Sanders, whose obituary we publish this week, was a native of Ohio, who engaged in teaching for some years at Knightstown and other places in Indiana. She united in marriage with Amos Sanders in 1878, and was associated with him in religious work at Gray, North Vernon, Westfield, Noblesville, and other places in Western Yearly Meeting, and later at Brooklyn, in New York Yearly Meeting. She was also active in Christian Endeavor work; was editor for a time of "The Endeavorer," of Noblesville, Ind.; was secretary for several years of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of Western Yearly Meeting, and spoke often in advocacy of the tithing system.

George A. Barton writes of his closing days in Palestine, and of his plans for the summer. His letter is dated at Venice:

"We finished up our work in Palestine so as to leave there on the 18th of Fifth month, and went with a good part of our school to Egypt. Landing at Port Said we went up to Cairo past Pithom and through the land of Goshen. We saw a good bit of Cairo, made the acquaintance of Rameses, Thothmes, and all the other mummies in the museum, visited the pyramids, the sites of ancient Memphis and Heliopolis, after which I went to Luxor with two of the students. Here we were within two degrees of the tropic. After this we looked in on Alexandria a little, and sailed thence to Naples. At Naples I turned over my keys of office in Jerusalem to Professor Paton, of Hartford, who was on his way out. We gazed on the charred remains of Pompeii; went with St. Paul to Pozzuoli, and enjoyed to the full the beautiful Bay of Naples. Then we had a good work in Rome, where some fortunate acquaintances made in Jerusalem helped us to the best, both in people and in art and archæology. Last week we spent in Florence, gorging ourselves on its art treasures till we are suffering from intellectual indigestion. Now we are in Venice—a dream of beauty. We glance at Milan and Lucerne, spend ten days in rest on Thuner Sea, go thence to Paris for a little business, reach England about Seventh month 15th, and sail for home on the "Winifredian," Leyland Line, to Boston, on Eighth month 14th.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' CONFERENCE.

The Christian Workers' Assembly held at New Providence, Ia., Sixth month 22d to 28th, was a time of great helpfulness to those present. The Board were surely led of the Lord in their selection of speakers, subjects and place of meeting.

The history of Friends was reviewed and was a source of inspiration to all.

The social life of the Church was discussed; also the best methods of conducting business meetings. Many helpful suggestions also were given with reference to music and reading.

"The Doctrine of Man" was studied, and the conclusion reached was that man in no sense sprang from the lower animals, but that he was created.

A review of Hamartiology and Soteriology revealed that all are sinful and become sinners, that all are under the curse and the penalty attached. But "where sin abounded grace did much more abound." God became both God and man, kept the law, took the penalty, and is satisfied. Hence, man may become converted, then consecrate himself to God, who wholly sanctifies and fills with the Holy Ghost, after which a process of mortification takes place in the deeds of the body until the body dies. Then comes the resurrection.

A study in Angelology disclosed the fact that God makes mention of both good and bad angels. Both man and God are spoken of as good angels besides those created heavenly beings that are not departed saints, neither to be worshiped, but ministers and protectors. The evil angels are Satan and the demons.

Ecclesiology was also discussed quite fully. Edgar Ellyson gave some of his helpful Bible lessons. He spoke of the oneness, plan and interpretation of the Bible. It is one book with one Author, but many stenographers. There is one great plan through it, with one great subject, that of Redemption. However it reveals the Redeemer, plan, method, conditions, and necessity of redemption. He also gave lessons on Deuteronomy, Joshua and Acts.

The evenings were turned into gospel services and were blessed of God.

William Pinkham, of Cleveland, O., gave us much helpful teaching with reference to the errors of the "new theology" in its various phases. His lessons on the nature and death of Christ caused his hearers to rejoice in the precious blood of Jesus as never before.

The members of Iowa Yearly Meeting were especially favored in presenting the truth, and it is a cause of rejoicing that God has gifted so many workers that can be trusted with deep things. The especial prayer of the assembly was that Iowa Yearly Meeting might be kept free from those things which would turn its workers in the least from the old orthodox religion.

There was a deep spirit of devotion throughout the assembly, and even while questions were being asked and papers discussed the spirit of the Lord prevailed.

DIED.

COLTRANE.—At his home in Cherokee County, Kansas, Sixth month 14th, 1903, Isaiah M., son of Wm. and Elizabeth Coltrane, in his 65th year. The deceased was a member of Friendship Monthly Meeting.

COOK.—At the home of Elijah Cook, South Windham, Me., Sixth month 25th, 1903, Amy D., wife of Edward C. Cook, in her 62d year. The deceased was a minister and member of Stanwood Monthly Meeting, Kansas.

MEYER.—At Milton, N. Y., Fifth month 8th, 1903, Huldah J. Meyer, aged 66 years. She had been a member of Marlboro Monthly Meeting thirty-three years, ever showing a truly Christian spirit.

NICHOLSON.—At Earlham, Iowa, Sixth month 30th, 1903, Rachel Nicholson, in her 74th year. She lived and died triumphant in Christ.

SANDERS.—At her home in Brooklyn, N. Y., Seventh month 4th, 1903, R. Anna Sanders, wife of Amos Sanders, in her 58th year. She was an active Christian, and served in many important positions in Western and New York Yearly Meetings.

COFFEE IN 1662.

Sir Thomas Lipton has among the treasures of his library an old cook book, published in 1662, that gives what is perhaps the first English recipes for coffee. The recipe reads:

"To make the drink that is now much used, called coffee.

"The coffee berries are to be bought at any druggist, about seven shillings the pound. Take what quantity you please, and over a charcoal fire, in an old frying pan, keep them always stirring until they be quite black, and when you crack one with your teeth that it is black within as it is without, yet if you exceed, then do you waste the oyl; and if less, then will it not deliver its oyl; and if you should continue fire till it be white, it will then make no coffee, but only give you its salt. Beat and force through a lawn sieve.

"Take clear water, and boil one-third of it away, and it is fit for use. Take one quart of this prepared water, put in it one ounce of your prepared coffee, and boil it gently one hour, and it is fit for your use; drink one-quarter of a pint as hot as you can sip it. It doth abate the fury and sharpness of the acrimony, which is the gender of the diseases called cronical."—Selected.

"In the long run the most unpleasant truth is a safer companion than a pleasant falsehood."—President Roosevelt.

SLOW STARVATION.

The Dyspeptic's Diet Leaves No Chance for Regaining Strength.

The dyspeptic who starves body and brain because food will not digest has no chance to get strong again because bodily strength cannot be built up except on food that will digest.

That is the mission of Grape-Nuts, which any dyspeptic can digest and which will begin to build up and nourish at once.

A Wisconsin man says: "For the last seven years I have been a great sufferer with stomach trouble, and for eighteen months I could not eat or drink anything, not even a spoonful of milk, without great suffering.

"It seemed I had tried every remedy in the world, and I had given up all hopes of ever getting better when a friend advised me to eat Grape-Nuts food. I was just about too much discouraged to do so, for I expected to die and all my friends expected I would too, but I finally did send for a sample box, and when it came I was so weak I could not turn over in bed.

"Then I began to take the Grape-Nuts, just a little bit at first, moistened with hot milk, and from this time I began to grow stronger, and before I had finished the fourth package I could eat and drink anything I wanted, and it did not hurt me in the least. So the right food helped me to health after everything else had failed.

"Experience, actual use, proves absolutely the great power of the scientific food Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

GOOD ADVICE.

Clergymen often give as good advice out of the pulpit as in it, as the following laughable dialogue shows:

"Sir," he said as he stalked into the clergyman's study, "you are the man who tied the knot, I believe."

"I beg your pardon," said the clergyman, looking up from his sermon.

"You performed the marriage ceremony for me, didn't you?"

"Yes, certainly, Bro. Willings. What, may I ask—"

"Then you know what the rights of a husband are?"

"Why, yes, in a general way."

"And the rights of a wife?"

"Of course."

"Well, now, sir," said the caller, drawing a chair up to the clergyman's desk and taking a seat, "has a wife a license to torture her husband?"

"Certainly not."

"If she makes his life miserable he has redress, of course?"

"Yes, but I should advise—"

"Never mind your advice now. We'll come to that later. My wife complains that I don't shave often enough."

"Oh, that's a small matter."

"Is it, sir! Is it! Just wait! I told her that that was my affair, and then she taught the children to cry when I kissed them so that she could say that my rough chin hurt them."

"That hardly showed a Christian—"

"Wait a minute! Yesterday morning I found them playing with the cylinder of a broken music-box. You know how that seems to the touch?"

"Certainly."

"Well, she'd taught them to call it 'Papa's chin.'"

"Really, sir, I must admit—"

"Wait till I'm through. To-day one of them got up on my knee, passed his little hand over my chin and called it 'Papa's music-box.' Now, sir, I ask of you as a Christian man, and as the man who tied the knot, what shall I do?"

"Get shaved," replied the clergyman, softly, as he returned to his work.—Exchange.

Events and Comments.

Daily reports are received concerning breaks in the textile strikers' ranks, and several mills have resumed work. Another encouraging thing is the great slump in the cotton market, which has brought prices down so that manufacturers are beginning to buy for factory use.

The debate on the Philippine Opium bill has indefinitely delayed final action.
The Commission recently introduced a substitute bill, making the importation of opium unlawful except by pharmacists, and permitting the disposal of the drug only by a physician's certificate, and the outcome is awaited with much interest.

Between 25,000 and 30,000 teachers were present at the convention of the National Educational Association, which met at Boston last week. Addresses were given by the leading educators of the land on the vital educational issues.
Among the subjects discussed were:
Child study, religious, elementary, higher, business and Indian education, manual training and normal schools.

The representatives of the United States, Great Britain and Japan in Peking are preserving independent action regarding Manchuria, and are awaiting the outcome of the conference of the Russian officials at Port Arthur and instructions from their respective governments. Only the Japanese Minister is occasionally adjuring Prince Ching, President of the Foreign Office, to avoid making secret concessions to Russia, which are possible and which only vigilance will prevent, on account of the throne's weakness and Prince Ching's pliability.

London was distinguished last week by a magnificent reception to President
M. Loubet, of France, who was returning King Edward's recent compliment in visiting Paris as the guest of the State.
It was the first time the British Court ever received a French President, and the welcome was spontaneous and cordial.
The desire of Englishmen in general for cordial relations with France was strong enough to make the week a notable one, and the French people viewed the spectacle across the Channel with satisfaction. No great power, not even the United States, at the present time is on such good terms with all the world as France.

Upon the conclusion of the food tests, which Dr. Wiley, of the Agricultural Department, has been conducting for several months, he proposes to institute a series of tests with tobacco, which will include experiments to determine the effect of tobacco upon the digestion and upon the human system in general. Pure tobacco in its various forms for chewing ated or flavored tobacco, and by experiments and observations made to ascertain what effect its use has upon the consumer when used in various quantities. He will then take up the adulterated or flavored tobacco, and by experiments ascertain what effect tobacco of that character has upon the system.

A new catechism is to be prepared by the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is to be uniform for the Church both North and South. This was decided upon by the joint Commission of Ministers and Laymen at Ocean Grove last week. The primary Catechism will comprise, briefly, elementary teachings concerning God and Creation, and more fully the life and work of Jesus, with accompanying religion and moral duty, a few plain and simple instructions for children how to begin a Christian life, and appendix containing the Lord's Prayer, the Beatitudes, the Ten Commandments in abbreviated form, the Apostles' Creed and
"The Christian's Law of Love."

"The Times'" Russian correspondent says that in order to allay the growing agitation among the working classes, the Russian Government proposes to grant workmen some right of collective bargaining with employers, subject to a strong bureaucratic supervision. A measure with this object in view has passed the Imperial Council and awaits the Czar's approval. The principle of the measure is the election of elders who will confer with managers of establishments and authorities on questions arising under contract. It is feared the authorities will only sanction the election of those subservient to them, who will not heed the interests of the men or employers.

The House of Representatives of the Georgia Legislature recently killed by an overwhelming vote the resolution providing that in the distribution of money to common schools the county authorities should apportion the money among schools for white and negro youths according to the taxable property of the two races. The sentiment of the legislators was that the State should contribute to the limit of its ability to the common school education of the negro youth, even when the burden falls almost entirely upon white taxpayers.
This seems to be a true philanthropic spirit, which will ultimately mean as much for the property-holders as it does now to the poor colored children.

The ranch owners in the Montana mountains claim that the big game was not as seriously harmed by the rigors of the past winter as was stated when the snow was deep on the ground. Cattle and sheep men claim that bears and mountain lions are killing large numbers of their stock, and that many elk are seen near the ranches in the foothills.

This will be good news to the sportsmen in the East, who were led by the first reports to believe that their hunting had been greatly injured. The same kind of news comes from Maine, where it was feared that the great forest fires of last month had destroyed many deer and moose. Chairman Carleton, of the Fish and Game Commission, has stated that no deer or moose were injured by the fires as far as he has been able to find out.

Senator Hanna has entered the field as an active competitor of the International Harvester Company, known as the world combine in harvesting machinery and farm implements. He is the chief capitalist in the new Aultman-Miller Buckeye Company, which has just been formed at Akron, O., and which proposes to make the best possible fight for the harvester business throughout the world in competition with the great combine, which includes the McCormick's, Deering's and all of the large companies that have made American farming machinery world famous. The new concern is said to be reaching out for sales agents and other expert employees that have lost their positions with the old companies as a result of the merger, and, coupled with enlargements of the present plants, rebuilding and extensions, this will constitute the first step in the fight.

EXPERIMENTS.

Learn Things of Value.

Where one has never made the experiment of leaving off coffee and drinking Postum it is still easy to learn all about it by reading the experiences of others.

Drinking Postum is a pleasant way to get back to health. A man of Lancaster, Pa., says: "My wife was a victim of nervousness and weak stomach and loss of appetite for years, and was a physical wreck; although we resorted to numerous methods of relief, one of which was a change from coffee to tea, it was all to no purpose.

"We knew coffee was causing the trouble, but could not find anything to take its place and cure the diseases until we tried Postum Food Coffee. In two weeks' time after we quit coffee and used Postum almost all of her troubles had disappeared as if by magic. It was truly wonderful. Her nervousness was all gone, stomach trouble relieved, appetite improved and above all a night's rest was complete and refreshing.

"This sounds like an exaggeration, as it all happened so quickly, but we are prepared to prove it. Each day there is improvement for the better for the Postum is undoubtedly strengthening her, and giving her rich red blood and renewed life and vitality. Every particle of this good work is due to Postum and to drinking Postum in place of coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ice cold Postum with a dash of lemon is a delightful "cooler" for warm days.

MUD PIES.

If you could see the pies I make,
I guess you'd say, "Oh, what a bake!"
They are the very nicest pies,
So smooth and round, the littlest size
With scalloped edges, and with plums
And currants in as big as thumbs.
I make them of the softest dough,
And fill and smooth and pat them so;
Then turn the pie-plate upside down,
And leave them in the sun to brown.
And, if they are not thrown away,
Find them done the very next day,
A hot and plummy and as hard
As Bridget makes of flour and lard.
If you should eat the pies I bake,
I guess perhaps you'd have an ache!

SUMMER HOSIERY

These unusual offerings of good Hosiery, coming as they do right in the height of the season, are of much more than ordinary interest, and give further proof of our ability to offer values in this line that are quite unmatched:

WOMEN'S IMPORTED COTTON HOSE—polka dots, in blue-and-white or tan-and-white; regular 25c. quality—12½c. a pair.

WOMEN'S IMPORTED HOSE—fast black, fine and light in weight; with unbleached split or full unbleached feet; an excellent 25c. grade—18c. a pair, 8 pairs for 50 cents.

WOMEN'S HOSE—imported black lisle, Richelieu-ribbed, with white split feet. Also, solid black gossamer lisle, and plain white or mode lisle, all regularly worth 65c. a pair—now 39 cents.

MEN'S HALF HOSE—absolutely fast-black Egyptian lace lisle half hose; the 25c. quality—reduced to 12½c.

THE EARTH AND MAN

*A little sun, a little rain,
A soft wind blowing from the west
And woods and fields are sweet again,
And warmth within the mountain's breast.
So simple is the earth we tread,
So quick with love and life her frame,
Ten thousand years have dawned and fled,
And still her magic is the same.
A little love, a little trust,
A soft impulse, a sudden dream—
And life as dry as desert dust
Is fresher than a mountain stream.
So simple is the heart of man
So ready for new hope and joy;
Ten thousand years since it began
Have left it younger than a boy.*

The Expert Cleaner.

There are a score of things about the house that you will not undertake to clean. You fear that they would be ruined by soap and you intend to send them to an expert cleaner, an idea that comes down from a time before pure soap was made. The manufacturers of Ivory Soap are constantly asked if they know how beautifully this or that material can be cleaned with Ivory Soap. The uses of Ivory Soap are too numerous to be told; with it anything may be cleaned that will stand the application of water. You can be your own expert cleaner.

PROFESSIONAL RELIGION.

FRIENDS at the beginning of their mission struck against everything which tended to reduce religion to a profession. They wanted to elevate it to a permanent power in the life of the individual and of society. It seemed to them that the main weakness of the Christianity which they found established in the land was the selfish and professional spirit of those who occupied the "places" in the Church. Men went to the Church for a "career," just as other men went to the army for the same reason. They went through the religious services in a perfunctory way, diseussed theology as part of their business, and lived on their tithes in ease and luxury. They were called by high sounding titles, and fared sumptuously even when the poor peasants among whom they ministered were living in abject poverty and ignorance. They had a monopoly of learning, and they spoke with an authority which made their listeners suppose that they held the keys of heaven and hell. Ministry then was a profession, and one which appealed peculiarly to the selfishness of the minister and fed his pride. It was not easy to decide how much was done for love of Christ, and how much was done for professional reasons.

Friends began by cutting absolutely loose from everything in religion which had a savor of profession about it. The sacraments formed the stronghold of the professional minister. They could not be administered without him, and he was therefore sure of "a place" as long as they were regarded as essential to the life of a Church. With a true spiritual instinct early Friends abolished sacraments and every other form of worship which required a professional minister. They undertook to prove that religion could be made the very meat and drink of ordinary, unprofessional persons, and that it could live and flourish without any class of men who came to it for a "career." Titles of honor they would not have, and with wisdom they banished everything which fostered human pride and selfishness.

The years have rolled round, and again we are face to face with the weakness and the danger of professional Christianity. The power of the gospel is hardly to be expected, and is seldom, if ever, found in men who have "taken up" the ministry for a "career," and who work and speak with the mark of professionalism upon all they do. The warm breath of the living Spirit is missed, and the clank of machinery is sadly apparent. As of old, Friends need to stand solidly for a religion of spiritual life and power, and against everything which encourages the spirit and custom of professionalism. It is altogether too common for our ministers to receive, and even to seek, the title of "Reverend," as though they were in a class by themselves. It has crept in gradually with no thought of harm attaching to it. But there certainly is harm. It means that he who uses it as his title likes to be thought in a class apart from ordinary Christians, and it marks a long step toward professionalism. It may seem but a slight honor to assume, but our true honor lies in being a simple servant of Jesus Christ, and in making those about us feel that we are one with them and not set apart or above those to whom we have been called to minister.

A PATRIOTIC SPIRIT.

LEFT to their own choice in the matter, Friends have generally given little attention to the observance of Memorial and Independence Days, and, doubtless, few take note of the more recently introduced Flag Day, all which days are largely held to be important for the opportunity afforded to teach patriotism. Two influences are at work to change this: one, the general business holidays granted that affect persons in the relation of employer and employed, and the other, the influence upon our children of the example and opinions of their associates. We are not so isolated a body as we were fifty years ago, and a negative attitude is not a sufficient solution of the question as to how we may properly observe these days.

We had come to be almost afraid of flags and patriotic meetings because of the predominant military associations and feeling. But is it not time for us to take a different position? A flag is not merely a battle standard, but is the emblem of our country, an epitome of its history, and symbol of its union. It is no unworthy undertaking to seek to dissociate it somewhat from the idea of soldiers, battle and blood that it has too exclusively symbolized hitherto. It ought to stand for liberty for the oppressed, opportunity for the downtrodden, and for right and justice for all.

The idea of patriotism, too, is not to be exploited only by the warrior and his eulogists. In some localities Friends observed Memorial Day by meetings in which the subject of peace was presented, with an appropriateness that might well commend such an observance as a practice. Independence Day is the time of all days for presenting the Christian theory of a patriotism that does not require guns or powder or the violent death of friend or foe for its proof or vindication. Obedience to law, devotion to the public welfare, the purification of politics, and the establishment and cultivation of those principles of civic virtue that will make the neglect or abuse of the right of suffrage a disgrace—all this is patriotism in practical operation. If, then, for the address of the day a speaker can be found—and he can—who will present the better patriotism of a heroic life for the sake of fellowmen, the worthy bravery of the man who dares to stand alone, or with but few, for the overthrow of corruption, the higher success of the patient seer of visions who plans great things that are to be than of him who reaps a quick harvest through sacrifice of principle, the recurrence of Independence Day may be welcomed as an opportunity for the most peace-loving, and the patriotic spirit receive a juster interpretation than if left to the militant element alone.

BLESSED COMMUNION.

Dear Saviour, I would be alone with Thee a little while;
I would look into Thy face and see the sweetness of Thy smile;
I would seek a quiet place with Thee apart,
And have Thy blessed peace abiding in my heart.

In the upper chamber I would commune with Thee,
And feel Thy precious love enfolding me;
The world and all its cares I would put away;
In fellowship with Thee awhile I'd stay.

Listening to Thy voice and Thine alone,
With Thy loving arms around me thrown,
Kneeling at Thy feet Thy care I'd crave,
For only Thou hast power to save.

And so, dear Saviour, I would have Thee talk with me;
I would feel that Thou with me and I with Thee,
Were in sweet and blessed harmony,
And that Thy spirit divine was filling me.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EARLY QUAKERISM AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN.

INTRODUCTION.—(1.) Division of the History.

The history of Quakerism divides itself into three periods. The length of these periods may be roughly stated as fifty, one hundred and fifty, and fifty years. The basis of divisions has been found in the effort to discover the predominant mode of activity which has been manifested in the Society during the two hundred and fifty years of its history. The Friends have always believed most firmly in the Holy Spirit as the supreme authority and guide for the life of the individual. They have as a body always been orthodox in the commonly-accepted meaning of the term. It is not along the line of doctrine that the basis of division must be sought, but rather how these fundamental principles of belief have worked themselves out in the Society's relation to mankind. The divisions then are made from the standpoint of activity not of doctrine. It is impossible even here to mark off periods in their history designated as active or inactive, for the Friends have always been an active people. The division is to be found rather in the manner that the activity had of expressing itself. Based on the growing out of the fundamental principles of the Society, which have remained practically unchanged, its work for and in the world has varied according to its own inward conditions, and the needs of the people in whose midst it has developed. The first fifty years of the Society's history was marked by intense evangelical activity. During the next century and a half the great work of the Friends for mankind lay along the lines of philanthropy as expressed in the efforts to bring about the freedom of the slave, promulgate and establish the principle of universal peace, minister to the sufferings of the criminal classes, and serve their fellow men in other ways as opportunity presented itself. Within the past fifty years a new spirit has been infused into the Society, and it has acquired once more something of the activity of the first period, adapted, of course, to the particular temperament and demands of this age. While this new spirit is working itself through the Society it is taking away nothing of the spirit of philanthropy which characterized the second period, and thus the present condition is one in which the prominent and good features of the two preceding periods have been, and are being, happily united. In making these divisions it must be kept in mind that in the history of a religious people no specific time can be pointed to as the exact period of change, for most of its movements are growths, and hence, while one feature may characterize one period, another feature may be present, which in years to come will develop and become the prominent characteristic of another period. So it was with the history of Quakerism. While the evangelical spirit was the prevailing feature of the early years, it is not necessarily entirely absent from the second period; nor is it claimed that because the second period was characterized by philanthropic efforts that these activities were absent from the first period. Of these three divisions of the history of the Friends it is the purpose of this study to investigate the first, seeking thereby to substantiate the proposition that Early Quakerism was an Evangelical Movement.

(2.) Definition of Terms.

Before this can be done intelligently, however, the term "Evangelical Movement" must be further defined. The significance of the word movement as used in this connection has been made sufficiently clear, perhaps, by the previous discussion. As the division of the history of Quakerism is made on a basis of the mode of activity rather than on the basis of belief, so the purpose of this paper is to place the emphasis on the activity as growing out of the belief, rather than on the belief as the basis of the activity. In other words, the tenets of the belief of the Friends will be discussed only so far as they affect the essential characteristics of this early movement.

The term "evangelical" comes from the Greek εὐαγγέλιος, which in turn is made up of the adverb εὖ signifying "well," and the verb ἀγγέλλω "to bear a message." "To bring a good message," then, would be the most natural root meaning of the word. If this be adopted, it may be said that Quakerism has always been an evangelical movement, for the people have always brought a good message to the world, either as a message of benevolence to those in need, of peace to those in war, of freedom to those in bondage, or as a spiritual message to those in sin. The usage of the word in the New Testament takes on a spiritual significance as applied to the content of Christ's message to the world. It is well expressed by Schaff in his "History of the Christian Church,"* where he is considering the significance of the word Protestant. He says: "It (the term Protestant) must be supplemented by the more important positive designation Evangelical. The gospel of Christ as laid down in the New Testament and proclaimed again in its primitive purity and power by the Reformation, is the basis of historical Protestantism, and gives it vitality and power." Evangelical, then, is a term which has particular reference to a spiritual sphere, that sphere in which the gospel of Christ as revealed in the New Testament is proclaimed in its purity and power. As to belief, the Friends have always been evangelical, but they have not always been evangelical in the sense of being strenuously energetic to proclaim their message to the world. Hence the basis of the division of their history has been in reference to activity, and the term movement has been added to the subject to emphasize that idea, even though the word evangelical has within itself the idea of proclamation.

With this conception of the term Evangelical

Movement in mind, it will be seen that so far as the definition is concerned, there is no difference between this and other movements of the Reformation. They are alike in general purpose; they are different in minor points of belief, and in the methods used to bring about the general purpose. It is not the purpose of this paper, however, to make a comparison of this and other similar movements, but simply to substantiate the claim for this one.

I.

THE NEGATIVE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE SECOND PERIOD OF QUAKER HISTORY.—(1.) The Condition.

The consideration of the Second Period of the history of the Friends is brought in at this point in the discussion, instead of later, as the chronology would seem to demand, for two reasons: First, to more fully substantiate the division already made in the introduction, and, second, to give a contrastive background for a more complete understanding of the leading characteristics of the early years of the Society. This period will be considered rather from a negative than from a positive side, for it is not within the scope of the theme to investigate more than one period, and that only from one standpoint. Hence, the later history of the Society has been reviewed with the leading characteristics of the first years in mind, and the conclusion has been reached that as a central feature that characteristic is wanting. The history of Quakerism from the opening of the eighteenth century to within a period of fifty years was not an evangelical movement. The Society came to a place where "it was considered wrong for any efforts to be made toward securing new members." They seemed to have lost their power of propagation. The immense influx of new life which so marked the years in which George Fox and his contemporaries were preaching ceased. A retrograde movement set in, and the membership year by year began to decrease or barely to hold its own. These things betoken the absence of an active evangelical spirit.

(2.) The Causes of the Condition.

It is difficult to state with absolute accuracy the causes which brought about this condition, but an examination of the general religious condition of the country and of the status of affairs within the Society itself reveals some tendencies which seemed to weaken the force of the evangelical movement.

The last half of the seventeenth century was marked by an intense religious feeling all over the country, among all sects and classes of people. The reaction which followed this in the eighteenth century was in turn characterized among all classes by an almost utter disregard of religion. The church services became perfunctory and formal and lacked spiritual life. To use the words of J. F. Hurst,*

* Vol. VI., p. 192.

* "Church History," p. 333.

"The most of the pulpits were occupied by clergymen who had discarded the fundamental truths. The typical sermon was on the value of general charity, the advantage of good agriculture, the care of bees, the duty of citizens, and similar collateral themes." The spirit of Rationalism was abroad everywhere. The England which Wesley found was distinctly non-religious, while in contrast the England to which Fox brought his message nearly a century before was very religious. To what extent this general feeling throughout England affected the history of Quakerism it is difficult to determine. It is a noteworthy fact, however, that the subsiding of religious thought and activity on the part of the Church in general was practically simultaneous with the falling off of the evangelical spirit among the Friends. This statement leads to three possible conclusions. First, the general religious deterioration was due to the falling off of evangelical activity among the Friends. This view seems hardly probable; at least the data at hand do not substantiate the position. Second, the religious lethargy throughout the country had its effect upon the Friends, and was instrumental in cooling off the intensity of their early zeal. This position, when compared with the history of other movements, seems very probable, and it may be said with a fair degree of certainty that the spirit of the age played its part in formulating the activity of this as well as other sects. The third position would point to the cause of this decline as lying within the religious movements themselves. The general law of reaction in religious history would substantiate this view, and there are some things in the history of Quakerism which unmistakably point in this direction.

There are two fundamental principles of Quakerism, an understanding of which will help to explain the distinction between the early and the later history. They are well stated by two of the early Friends, Benjamin Furly and George Keith, in a treatise entitled "Universal Free Grace of the Gospel": "There are two main or principal things held forth by us which are, as it were, the two hinges or fundamental principles upon which all other things relating to the doctrine or practice affirmed by us do hang and depend. The first is that there is no saving knowledge of God, or the things of His kingdom attainable but by the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ, who is the Image, Word and Light of the Invisible God, in which alone He can be manifest unto the salvation of men. The second is that this Image, Word or Light which is Jesus Christ the Son of the Father's love doth shine forth in some measure universally and enlightens every man that comes into the world, and thereby giveth him a day of visitation whereby it is possible for him to be saved." The emphasis which the Friends have placed on one or both of these two doctrines (the Light Within and the Universality of the Light Within) has determined the divisions of their history. In the first period both positions were held, but the great emphasis was placed on the latter, and as a result the Friends went everywhere preaching to all men. In the second period the doctrine of the Universality of the Light Within slipped into the background as an active force, and the Friends turned from an earnest effort to spread the Gospel to the cultivation of their own inner life. Why should they thus turn from the cultivation of the Light Within every man to the exclusive development of the Light Within themselves? Robert Barclay * advances the idea that the work of evangelization by the free churches was arrested to a great extent by the depression and discouragement due to the persecutions through which they had passed. This spirit, together with the mystical tendencies of the Friends led to a universal popularity of the works of Madame Guion and Fenelon, and the principles of "Quietism" soon became paramount with the Society. He holds, moreover, that the turning from the field of the world "to cultivate the garden of their own souls" was increased "by certain defects in the church structure of the Society of Friends," which he states as follows: † "We have seen that the Church commenced with a scriptural and rational system of membership, which was maintained with the utmost strictness. The practical maintenance, however, of a secular government taking cognizance of the minutest matters not only robbed this of its spiritual significance, but led to a secular definition of membership and eventually to a birthright membership, which made the Friends . . . 'a part of the world,' separated by education and peculiar usages." Again, ‡ "The omission of the practice of the reading of Holy Scriptures in the church also tended to cause the full acknowledgment of the Christian gift of 'teaching' by the founders of the Society to be forgotten. . . . The denial of the gift of teaching, or the declaration of the nature of the Christian religion to the world by those who felt they were called by God to the work necessarily followed."

How much weight is to be given to these reasons is a question which permits of more discussion than can be given it here. There are doubtless elements of truth in his position, but it must be borne in mind that the Friends before the close of the seventeenth century began to turn from the intense evangelical spirit of the early years and from an entirely different cause from any of those mentioned above.

In the "Journal" of George Fox we note some very instructive facts on this point. The life of Fox may be characterized as a continual itinerant ministry. He was constantly going from place to place preaching, with the exception of those times when he was in prison. In the record of these early journeys a characteristic phrase occurs repeatedly, viz., "many were convinced," "multitudes were convinced." By these phrases and others of similar nature which come as summaries of his work in different places, he means to say that many people were brought from spiritual death to spiritual life. In other words, to use a current expression, "Many were converted." The story of his later life in these journeys is very seldom capped with any mention of people being "convinced" or otherwise turned to the Lord. The reason for this appears in the fact that the latter part of Fox's life was spent not in evangelizing the masses, but in forming and building up the churches which came into existence as a result of the evangelical work of his early years. The first part of his ministry was, in other words, devoted to the promulgation of the second tenet of his belief—the Universality of the Light Within; his later life to the development of the first principle—the Light Within. With him this was a perfectly natural thing. The troubles of various kinds which began to arise among his followers necessitated just such a step. It was done on his part to obtain a proper balance between the two phases of all church work. What he did was followed for similar reasons by others. The rapid growth of early years necessitated it, in order that the Society might become a unity, and harmoniously work to one great purpose. That which began, however, through necessity continued, and its momentum, increased by the causes already mentioned, carried the Society from the distinct evangelical purpose of its origin, and the second period of its history became characteristically non-evangelical.

* "Inner Life of Religious Societies of Commonwealth."

A MIRACLE OF HISTORY.

BY DAVID GREGG.

"And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts the God of Israel:

"Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father and kept all his precepts and done according to all that he hath commanded you:

"Therefore, thus saith the Lord of Hosts the God of Israel:

"Jonadab shall not want a man to stand before me forever."

Who were the Rechabites?

They were the descendants of Abraham through Keturah, the wife whom he married after the death of Sarah. They started with Midian, the son of Abraham and Keturah.

Hobab, the brother-in-law of Moses, who joined the cause of the Hebrews, was one of them. In the family of Hobab was born a man named "Rechab," "The Rider." The qualities for leadership in this fine horseman were such, that he gave his name to the whole tribe. In this tribe of the Rechabites came a remarkable man named "Jonadab." He was the greatest man this little nation ever had, and so he became its Lawgiver and Reformer. Jonadab was a Jehovist and worshiped the God of Abraham. As he Sheik of the Rechabites, he made a study of civilization for his tribe and legislated his conclusions into constitutional law. This was his legislation: He put an everlasting interdict upon the drink-custom, and gave the Rechabites an hereditary law of total abstinence. He enjoined also that they should be children of the desert, living in tents. He commanded them to be open-air men, and to live a nomadic life.

This was the Constitution which he ordained for the Rechabites:

"Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons forever. Neither shall ye build houses, nor sow seed nor plant vineyards, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents."

In that far-off day he discovered the true character of the Drink Fiend and smote it out of existence. He saw the physical and moral and spiritual declension of a people that gave themselves up to luxury. He saw that what was called "Civilization" with its conveniences only increased the wants of man, in fact created artificial wants and clashed with primitive simplicity and led to effeminacy. He wanted a nation of rugged men with rugged characters, and so he bound his fellow countrymen to primitive methods of outdoor life. He abhorred the palefaced, sickly-looking multitudes of the city. He abhorred the late hours of wine-drinkers and fashionable people. If he were living to-day he would abhor the sensitiveness that must live in sight of the thermometer, and in furnace-heated houses. He would be horrified at our overloaded tables groaning with the products of every clime. He would stand aghast at our numerous stimulating beverages and appetizing tonics, and would doubtless put a veto upon our highly seasoned salads and our sudden-chilling ices. He would give us an amendment to our State Constitution such as the Prohibition party of our day never dreamed of. He would look upon "The Prohibition" of the twentieth century as a laboriously feeble effort, striking only at the top branch of the tree of social evil, instead of striking at the tap-root of the tree.

Jonadab was an extremist, but extremists, when they are right, are the safest men to follow, because they are the furthest away from wrong. Among men there is such a thing as that of which Edmund Burke speaks, viz.: "A fear of being too much right." Extremists are a protest against this false fear.

We cannot discuss here the value of the legislation of Jonadab; but without discussion we know this much at least—that the spirit of the Primitive Life which Jonadab sought to incarnate in law has much in its favor. For example: we know that in the highest type of American manhood our nation has not advanced very much beyond the rugged Puritans of early days. If it has gained on the one side, it has lost on the other, and the balance is still in favor of the Puritan. We may boast as we please as to who we are and what we have become, and we may smile in condescension upon our ancestors, and we may flatteringly excuse them, and apologize for them, but we have only improved upon them in manners, only on the outside; we have not improved on their spirit and tone; we have not improved upon their heart-life. We have not gotten any nearer to God, and we have not endured sacrifices that are greater-souled than theirs. Plymouth Rock holds its own even in the year 1903, and there is nothing in modern times that is grander than the Mayflower and that which the Mayflower carried.

So much for Jonadab and his legislation. Now for the obedience which the Rechabites gave to these temperance laws! Here is where the interest of the story comes in and its profit. Did they obey? They did, and their obedience was grand and constant and implicit. They did not chaffer nor higggle. Their obedience kept right on. It bore the stress of storm and tests. Often when wearied and sore distressed they were tempted to refresh themselves with wine, but every time they mastered the temptation. Often they had to face want and privation, often they met men who called them "fools" and said to them, "Why do you not settle down like other people and plant vineyards and make a good livelihood like other people?"—still they stuck to their tents and their cold water.

Thus it was for three centuries, up to the time of the text. In the story before us they were put to the most crucial test of all. Their loyalty to the legislation of Jonadab never had such a strain. Their souls were tested through and through.

Take in the situation: The Babylonian troops are marching through Judea, and soon they will be thundering at the gates of Jerusalem. The God of Israel permits this, nay more, orders it; because the Hebrews have ignored Him and His commandments in their civil life, and have filled their civil and social life with all manner of oppressions and profanities and irreligious deeds. God deals with nations, and watches national life, and punishes national crime. The universe is a great pottery-yard, and God walks through it with His great rod of iron, and when He sees a misshapen nation down comes His rod of iron, and it is broken in pieces. Do you ask, why? For the same reason that the potter, in examining the vessels in his workshop, breaks every misshapen thing. He considers every misshapen vessel in his shop a slander and a slur. It maligns his reputation and falsifies his skill as a potter. God has a reputation to sustain in the business of nation-making, and in His tour of inspection among the nations and kingdoms of the earth He must shatter and cast out of sight all those nations which by oppression and godlessness and beastiality slander His reputation and misrepresent His civil ideal. In this history the Babylonian army was the rod of God, and it fell with terrific force upon Israel. The march of the Babylonian army drove within the walls of Jerusalem the Rechabites for shelter. They brought their tents with them, and pitched them in the open spaces of the Holy City. They were an odd sight to the Hebrews, tent-people living in the midst of a city of comfortable houses. But even this was of God. They were sent into the city and into the midst of God's covenant people for a holy purpose. God meant to use them as an object lesson, and by them rebuke and instruct Israel.

God says to Jeremiah, his prophet: "Here is this striking people. I have sent them right into the midst of Jerusalem. Use them in dealing with my people Israel, and, if possible, by means of them bring Israel to a true sense of sin. If you can bring back my people you will save them even yet from the destroying power of Babylon." With this commission from God, Jeremiah did use them, and this was the way.

In order to express good-will and show hospitality to the Rechabites, the prophet invited them into the temple and there entertained them. He set before them the best wine of the land, and urged them to partake of it. The temptation was as strong as it could possibly be. The Rechabites were faint and weak because of their flight before the Babylonian army. The wine was the very best. The place in which it was offered was the holiest place in the world, and beyond all this the man who told them of the qualities of the wine, and who had said, "Partake, I pray thee," was the truest and noblest man that walked the earth. Some people have felt provoked at Jeremiah for playing the part of a tempter, but there is no reason for provocation. Trust Jeremiah. He knew what he was doing. He knew his men. He was after a strong contrast with which to ply the Hebrews. You criticise him in the process of his plan; wait until he reaches the end. He knew what the end would be. He knew that the severer the test the grander the temperance principles of the Rechabites would shine out. The prophet was not mistaken; he did not presume too far. As he thought it would be, so it was. His temptation proved no temptation. Openly and positively and unhesitatingly the Rechabites refused, and gave as their reason the prohibition legislation of their father Jonadab. "Our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons forever." They were not ashamed to honor their father nor publicly to proclaim that their lives were lived in obedience to him. The command of a praying and God-fearing father is a capital reason to give men for your course of conduct and especially for your refusal of the wine cup. It takes the gravest reason to set it aside. Certainly, neither the sentiment of the sidewalk, nor the talk of the sample room ought to weigh against it. Even the invitation of men high in social position ought not to weigh against it. Even if a minister or a judge should ask you to drink wine, say No!

When the test to which the Rechabites were subjected was met and withstood, when it issued in a beautiful fidelity and a shining obedience, Jeremiah, the prophet of God, had a platform upon which to stand and from which to speak to the Hebrew nation. And aptly did he use the platform and fearlessly and faithfully did he speak. He lifted to public view the truthfulness of the Rechabites to the commands of Jonadab, and then he put by the side of it the disobedience of the Israelites to the commandments of their God. He rang the changes upon the derogatory contrast and made his countrymen feel the shame which came from it.

It was at this point that he uttered the promise of the text and pronounced the reward of the Rechabites:

"And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts and done according unto all that he hath commanded you; therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab, the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before me forever." "Forever!" That is a tremendously large word. It covers an immense space. It covers not only the century in which Jeremiah lived; it covers the twentieth century. God promises nothing short of perpetuity to this little nation. There are not many nations that have the promise of perpetuity. So far as I know there are only two. This little nation and the Hebrew nation. And is God true to His promises? Yes.

Side by side in the Orient the Rechabites have lived with the Hebrews. They have stood the shocks of revolutions and the wear of the centuries. Some of them may have been merged into other tribes, and have lost their name and their history; perhaps the greater number of them may have been merged into other tribes, but the promise of God still holds true, "Jonadab, the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before me forever saith the Lord." In my rummaging among the books of history, I have found this: As late as the year 1900 a tribe of Rechabites were found near the Dead Sea, living as their father lived, abstemiously and in simple tents. (See "Travels of Wolfe.")

But all this is significant, for it proves that the operation of grand principles is beneficial in the small as well as in the great. Small nations are just as sure of perpetuity as large nations, if they make truth and righteousness their defense. It is principle that is the strength of a nation, and not legions, and not arsenals. God is on the side of the battalions of principle. The Rechabites are small, so much the better; their smallness makes disintegration the easier, and from the very nature of things shows that the strength that preserves them in perpetuity is strength indeed and should be sought by every nation. If this strength comes from living according to right principles, then right principles are the things which the nations should seek above all things.

In bringing my sermon to a practical conclusion, I wish to deduce from this ancient temperance story two radical principles which should guide us and give us an ideal in dealing with the great liquor curse which has such a hold on our modern civilization.

The first principle which I deduce is this: "Prevention is better than cure."

I assume that the whole liquor business—its sale and its use—is a curse, and as a curse it is something to be gotten rid of. Proof is not necessary here. A curse is its own proof. Anything that debauches men and makes drunkards of them and brings the worst that is in them to the front, is a curse. Anything that digs 100,000 new graves every year in our Republic and makes 100,000 widows and orphans, is a curse. Anything that produces idiocy and lunacy and imbecility is a curse. Anything that breeds pauperism and disease, and that fills jails and poorhouses and asylums is a curse. Anything that brings ruin and broken hearts into American homes, and nothing but ruin and broken hearts, is a curse. The liquor business does all this.

My fellow men, what is our duty as we grapple with this curse? Simply to temporize with it, to trifle with it, to endure it as best we can, to tinker it, to bring ourselves to believe that it is a fatality which cannot be successfully resisted, to spend all our time in seeking cures for its victims; or is it our duty to adopt radical principles and inaugurate radical methods and push on toward radical ends? What is sense and what is non-sense here? Trifling with the curse is non-sense. More than this: it is one form of insanity. It is suicidal. We are living in an age when radical methods are appreciated. No apology for them is needed. In treating other evils, we believe in going down to the roots of things. In dealing with diseases we take the most powerful microscope and search for bacteria, and when we have found the germs we immediately use the most extreme means for their extermination. In dealing with cholera and with yellow fever our principle is extermination and prevention. Anything else would be folly. Let the same wisdom prevail here in dealing with the liquor curse. There is one simple method which, if all follow, will abolish the saloon and will kill the liquor traffic, and will both cure and prevent drunkenness and strike all of its horrible progeny forever out of human society, and that is this, the principle of the Rechabites, total abstinence. Nothing could be more simple and nothing more effective. That is an old principle, but there is not a man here to-day that can improve on it—not one.

The second principle which I deduce is this: "Right is better than revenue."

The Rechabite nation never made a dollar out of liquor. They got along grandly without liquor money. Their motto was, "We would rather be right than rich," and that made them what they were, a veritable miracle in history. Now I hear you say, "The Doctor is striking at the license system. I verily believe that he is a Prohibitionist. It looks as though he believed in total abstinence for the individual and in prohibition for the State." Yes, it does look so, because it is so. Those are my principles exactly. License that which destroys our homes and slays our sons and breaks the hearts of our wives and mothers! Make it a legal business and give it the protection and sanction of law! Not by my vote. License that which produces disease and lust and murder, and all the dark crimes in the catalogue of crime!

There is not enough money coined to purchase such a license from me. If I gave a license to this gigantic iniquity in any shape or form, I should feel myself guilty before God of the blood of souls. Would God license a traffic that does nothing but damn men? Never! Neither will I.

But it is said, "Prohibition will not work." It will work if good men will only put their faith back of it. Its success is only a question of your faith and mine.

How does license work? Does it use the law as a protection to the tempted? Does it make the law an educator in that which is right and helpful? It has on its side legal suasion. To what does this suasion lead? It is suasion to what? Is license a success? Is it an effective antidote? Has it throttled the liquor traffic? It has done everything except this. It has given it commercial respectability so that now it is a financed temptation pushed by vested interests. Under the sanction of license the curse has intrenched itself in commerce and has become mighty. It dictates to legislatures, intimidates politicians, silences pulpits and subsidizes the press. It has become our leading business. It's our greatest commercial organization, and yet its issues are evil and only evil.

The New York "Tribune," the other day, put the subject in these words: "The liquor traffic costs more every year than our whole civil service, our army, our navy, our Congress, including the river and harbor and pension bills: all we pay for local government, all National, State and county debts, and all the schools in the country. In fact, this country pays more for liquor than for every function and for every kind of government." We spend more for drink than we do for bread. Does this indicate that the license system is a success? No system laying claim to brain or morality of any kind could be more of a failure.

Success or no success: that is not the question. The question of the State, or of anybody, becoming a partner in the liquor selling is just this: Is it right? The right is always the feasible thing. The right has always the right of way. The right can always be made a success when good men believe in it and in it only and in nothing else. The right is primary; money is secondary. Let the State pay her bills with pure gold and clean coin. In this matter let her not be afraid of being "too much in the right." But who is the State? You are the State.

O Lord, inspire us with Thy Spirit until we rise to that love of Thee that shall give us joy to be counted worthy to suffer for Thy name's sake. Prevent that we should ever suffer because of sin; prevent that we should ever suffer because we have forgotten Thee or Thy Son. But O, give to us courage and love and grace, so that if it be necessary to suffer for well-doing we may not only enter it with resignation, but may find joy set before us as Christ did, looking to the glory that in the other life is to be ours. We ask this benediction of Thee in Jesus' name. Amen.—Russell H. Conwell.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON V.

EIGHTH MONTH 2, 1903.

SAMUEL ANOINTS DAVID.

1 Samuel 16: 4-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. 1 Sam. 16: 7.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 27.—Samuel Anoints David. 1 Sam. 16: 4-13.

Third-day, Seventh mo. 28.—David and Saul. 1 Sam. 16: 14-23.

Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 29.—God's choice. 1 Chron. 28: 1-10.

Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 30.—Searching the heart. Jer. 17: 5-10.

Sixth-day, Seventh mo. 31.—God's omniscience. Psa. 139: 1-12.

Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 1.—Promises for David. Psa. 89: 19-29.

First-day, Eighth mo. 2.—David's greater son. Acts 13: 16-23.

The time of the present lesson is not without question. Some would place it about 1065 B.C., some 1030, or even later. Samuel was probably about 80 years old, Saul 50, and David perhaps about 20. Jesse, the father of David, was an old man, and had eight sons and two daughters (1 Sam. 17: 12). Bethlehem, which now comes into greater prominence, about five miles south of Jerusalem, was a village situated on a stony ridge, about 2,500 feet above the sea, and 4,000 above the Dead Sea. It was the burial place of Rachel, was where Boaz met Ruth, was the birthplace of David, and of his "Greater Son." It never attained great size. Jerusalem was still in the possession of the Jebusites, one of the Canaanite tribes.

The lesson begins the second great division of the Books of Samuel. It is that which begins the history of David the great hero of Hebrew history, and the one whose reign was the golden age of later times. The incident described in the lesson comes logically after that of the last. Saul rejected necessitates the choice of some one to take his place. The kingdom, however, is to be transferred to a new tribe, that of Judah. Jesse, the Bethlehemite, was the grandson of Ruth, the Moabitess, and was of the tribe of Judah (Ruth 4: 18-22.) Read verses 1-3. The concealment of Samuel's real purpose has been criticised. It has, however, been pointed out that "Concealment of a good purpose for a good purpose is clearly justifiable." "It was perfectly legitimate for Samuel to conceal the primary intention and mention only the secondary object of his visit."

4. "The elders." These in patriarchal times were, as heads of the families, the natural authority. "Trembling." Samuel's visits, as a righteous judge, doubtless often were feared.

5. "Sanctify yourselves." Make yourselves ceremonially pure, by washing the body and clothes (see Ex. 19: 10; Gen. 35: 2.) "And be sanctified." In this case Samuel appears to have done the cleansing himself.

6. "And said." That is, to himself. Eliab seems to have resembled Saul in his physical characteristics. Eliab was doubtless the Elihu of 1 Chr. 27: 18.

7. "But the Lord said unto Samuel." The communication of the Divine will was made to Samuel in a way not recognized by those standing by. "I have rejected." There is here nothing to indicate that Eliab was anything more than unsuited to be a king, but compare 1 Sam. 17: 28. "The Lord seeth not as man seeth," etc. Now, the choice is made on a mental and moral basis. In the choice of Saul the human ideal was condescended to. Compare Luke 16: 15; Acts 1: 24.

8. Again the prophet examines the candidate and again comes the inward voice. "I have rejected him."

9. The same thing is expected in the case of the third son. Shammah is the Shimeah of 2 Sam. 13: 3; 21: 21; see also 1 Chron. 20: 7.

10. "The Lord hath not chosen these." It is not likely that Jesse knew for what Samuel wished to anoint one of his sons, except that it was for some important station.

11. "There remaineth yet the youngest." He was evidently considered to be too young to be thought of in this connection. Children are not unfrequently undervalued by those who are older. Jesse had two daughters, Zeruah and Abigail (see 1 Chron. 2: 16). Nothing is known of the mother of David, except that he speaks of her as a handmaid of the Lord. "We will not sit down." At the sacrificial feast. The ancient Hebrews sat down to meals, and did not recline, as was the custom in Roman times.

12. "He." Jesse. "Ruddy." There is a difference of opinion as to what this word means, but probably it means red or auburn hair and a fair complexion. These were considered as a mark of beauty in eastern countries, where dark hair and dark complexion is usual. The literal translation is, "And he was ruddy, a youth of fine eyes and goodly appearance." Compare Gen. 39: 6; Ex. 2: 2; Acts 7: 20. "And the Lord said," etc. To anoint was the symbol of setting apart for some high calling or position. The symbol is a very old one.

13. "In the midst of his brethren." In the presence of his brethren. It is clear from the later history that David's father and brothers did not understand this ceremony. Nor is it mentioned that David himself comprehended it, though it is not unlikely that Samuel may have informed him. "And the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon David." Revised Version. The impression is conveyed that the indwelling of the Spirit of the Lord was constant with David.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. God looks upon the heart—the spirit in which a thing is done rather than the thing itself.
2. God's choice is often not in accord with man's preconceived ideas.
3. Do not underestimate the young.

A Quaker meeting that isn't preparing preachers to send forth with the gospel message is a failure.—Amos Kenworthy.

Christian Endeavor

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Lindley D. Clark, 1429 New York Avenue, Washington, D.C.]

TOPIC FOR EIGHTH MONTH SECOND.

LESSONS FROM PAUL: HOW WE MAY OVERCOME OUR HINDRANCES.

2 Cor. 12: 7-10; 10: 10.

First-day, Seventh mo. 27.—Our enemies. Acts 9: 23-25.

Second-day, Seventh mo. 28.—A "messenger of Satan." Acts 19: 23-27.

Third-day, Seventh mo. 29.—Tent-making. 2 Thess. 3: 6-12.

Fourth-day, Seventh mo. 30.—Poverty. 1 Cor. 4: 9-13.

Fifth-day, Seventh mo. 31.—Glorying in weakness. 2 Cor. 12: 5, 6.

Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 1.—"For my brethren's sake." Rom. 9: 1-5.

Overcoming hindrances means the gaining of victories that would never have been gained but for the hindrances. Moral and spiritual vigor are the products of exercise no less than are mental and physical power. The easy path is not the one that develops surefootedness and endurance; nor is a life devoid of provings adapted to the production of a sturdy type of spirituality.

Some things it may be best to serenely ignore, but others have to be squarely met and worked through on the basis of absolute conflict and conquest. And the very severest and most humiliating experiences may be the ones from which it is intended for us to obtain the greatest benefit. It is a remarkable environment that Paul describes: apostle and saint, he was yet unable to dismiss a "messenger of Satan," whose mission it was to keep him humble. The sense of weakness was not to be gotten rid of, in order that the strength of Christ might rest upon him.

A class of boys, who had heard in their homes socialistic teaching of an unfortunate kind, was asked if they could be good and upright under existing circumstances. "No," they answered; "conditions must be changed." Christianity says: "Ye"—not your surroundings—"must be born anew." It does not plan to change conditions or to take people out of their circumstances so much as it does to change men and teach them the way of victory in the midst of conditions that they may indeed labor most hopefully to improve, but which they cannot merely run away from if they would.

Physical laziness shirks the hardships of honest toil, and the analogue exists in the spiritual realm. Paul's picture of himself is not suggestive of a leader of men, yet next to Christ he has been the world's teacher. But his infirmities were not gloried in except as they became to him ministers of strength and measures of the redeeming grace and enabling power of Christ.

SUMMARY OF PRESIDENT CLARK'S ADDRESS.

"A definite Increase Campaign to double the number and efficiency of Christian Endeavor Societies in a single decade" was the theme of President Clark's address at the twenty-first International Convention of Christian Endeavor at Denver on the 9th inst.

Along two great lines he urged this increase; first, an enlargement of the membership of the local societies. A true society of Christian Endeavor should reach every young person in the community either through its active membership or its associate membership. To this end he urged a special effort to enlist more active members, the working force of the Society; to obtain more associate members also, those who may afterwards be won for Christ and the Church, this being the evangelistic end of the Society; and to enlarge the honorary membership for the sake of promoting sympathetic relations between the older members of the church and the young people.

This part of his appeal was happily emphasized by the fact that during the past year thousands of societies have enlarged their ranks, some of them gaining more than a hundred per cent.

Even more emphasis was laid in the address upon enlarging the number of local societies, and in this direction Providence has pointed the way during the past year, for nearly 2,000 new societies have been formed within six months. "The ten-per-cent. increase campaign of the last eight months has been so unexpectedly successful that only the wilfully blind can fail to see the guide-boards of the future.

"Lift up your eyes and look upon the white harvest-fields in all the world. India has enlarged her Christian Endeavor boundaries. China, with her new secretary, is at the beginning of a new year of great expansion. Japan has gained thirty per cent., and just enjoyed the best convention in her history. Great Britain has made steady progress. Germany has made substantial gain. France and Spain have had the best year in all their Christian Endeavor history, while since our last Convention Switzerland, Italy, Portugal, Finland and Iceland have fairly entered the ranks of Christian Endeavor."

But this is not all. Christian Endeavor has appeared in many unexpected places, on the sea and in camp, in the prison, in the life-saving station and the fire brigades, in a post-office in Japan, in department stores, in school house districts and neighborhood gatherings. All these different lines of effort which Providence has so plainly marked out as legitimate and most useful lines for the Christian Endeavor Society show how its principles may be extended and the societies expanded.

The boys and girls should receive special attention. The Junior societies alone within a year may be doubled, and there is now a Correspondence School for Christian workers, which will train superintendents to this most important work.

As a definite proposition to ensure this increase, President Clark proposed that every State strive to gain at least ten per cent. annually for the next ten years, thus entering into a ten years' extension campaign. He proposed for a campaign motto the words "Fidelity and Fellowship," and strongly urged his hearers always to remember that this Increase Campaign is not chiefly for the advance and glory of Christian Endeavor, but always and ever for the glory and advance of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. "These efforts," he said, "will, I believe, result in a vast increase of the spiritual forces of the kingdom of heaven. . . . Let us always, then, keep this in mind in our idea of expansion, that it means upward growth as well as outward, more of those who practise the presence of God, more of those who work well because they have prayed well."

Correspondence.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Dear Friend:—The statement is going the rounds of the papers that the first appointee to the Rhodes scholarships is a disbeliever in Christianity, and much is being made of the fact. As a matter of fact, no appointment as yet has been made. A uniform set of conditions is to govern the committees in the making of these appointments, and as yet the administrator of the will has not given the committees the necessary instruction. It is dangerous to depend too much upon newspaper rumors.

ROBERT L. KELLY,
Committeeman from Indiana.

TO THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at Guilford College, North Carolina, the 11th instant. After the transaction of the usual business, reference was made to the minute recorded at our last quarterly meeting concerning the attendance at that time of our dear friends, Harriet Green and her companion, Sophia M. Fry. The following two sentences are taken from the minute: "Their presence and gospel service have been truly acceptable and encouraging to us, and we esteem it a great favor that the Lord has bestowed upon us to have these servants of His from London Yearly Meeting in our midst at this time. May His guiding and protecting hand be with them wherever they may go in His service amongst us, and their labor of love be productive of much good in our yearly meeting."

The fresh sense thus brought to us of the visit of these dear Friends, and of the death of Harriet Green in a few days after this minute in their behalf was written, brought the meeting into much tenderness. The proposition to establish a memorial fund in memory of Harriet Green, the income of which is to go towards maintaining a chair in Bible Study at Guilford College, was presented to the meeting, and the plan as outlined by Dr. D. W. Dennis and published in THE AMERICAN FRIEND of Seventh month 9th was explained. A large number of the members present made subscriptions, many subscribing two dollars for each member of their families, children and grandchildren, one Friend giving in this way the sum of $50. The sum of $150 was subscribed, and two members were named to present the subject at the close of the meetings for worship at New Garden and Greensboro on First-day.

The Friends here feel great interest in this subject, because it appeals to them as a most appropriate way of perpetuating the memory of Harriet Green, and of carrying forward in our yearly meeting the work in which she was deeply interested when amongst us, and which she faithfully and intelligently sought to promote in her ministry, and in all her activity in behalf of Friends in America.

To the Friends who are carrying the burden of operating Guilford College the kindly interest expressed in this concern from time to time in THE AMERICAN FRIEND and in private correspondence, has been very encouraging; and when it is remembered that whatever is given in this way will promote the great interests which are at stake at Guilford College in its purpose to serve North Carolina Yearly Meeting and at the same time be commemorative of the work, service and spirit of her who gave her life for the promotion of the gospel of Christ, one cannot believe that this proposition will fail to appeal to Friends, both in this country and in England.

Professor William L. Pearson, of Penn College, visited friends in and about Philadelphia a few days last week.

Anna M. Volaw, who has been in Kansas for some time, is now at home in Richmond, Ind.

There are eight members in South Durham Meeting, Me., that are more than eighty years of age.

Edward S. Hacker, a minister of New England Yearly Meeting, has given a number of addresses on temperance.

A. Edward Kelsey is on his fifth year of service in the meetings at Winthrop and Winthrop Center, Me.

Matilda Atkinson is faithfully conducting a mission in Augusta, Me., where she has labored for six years.

John D. Piper is located in the meeting at Elba, N. Y. The Lord is blessing his labors.

The value of prayer was much emphasized during the sessions of New England Yearly Meeting this year.

Much interest was shown in Friends' work among the Indians during the late session of New England Yearly Meeting.

Mary Jane Weaver, a minister, of Batavia, N. Y., is State superintendent of evangelistic work for the W. C. T. U.

Fred L. and Olive Ryon are now on their fourth year's service in Clintondale Meeting, New York.

Phebe Wadsworth, with the help of a few other Friends, started a meeting eleven years ago in Augusta, Me. She is still there, and the Lord is blessing the work.

J. Warren Hawkes has for many years been preaching at Manchester Meeting, Maine, and the work at that place is in a flourishing condition.

Oliver M. Frazer expects soon to move to Richmond, Ind. He will labor in Whitewater Meeting and take Bible work at Earlham College during the coming year.

George M. McGraw and wife, who have been visiting relatives and meetings in Indiana for the past eight months, returned to their home at Elwood, Neb., the 14th instant.

Mary (Douglas) Goddard, who is in her ninety-fourth year, is a frequent attender of South Durham Meeting, Maine, and she often walks to and from services, a distance of three-quarters of a mile.

Nathan Douglas, a life-time Friend, and for many years a minister, retains a bright mind at the age of ninety-one, and although he is not able to attend meeting, he very much enjoys the company of visiting Friends. He lives in South Durham, Me.

Hannah J. Bailey, superintendent of the peace department of the World's and National W. C. T. U., gave a lecture at Hallowell, Me., on the evening of the 28th ult. Church services throughout the city were adjourned for the evening, and all attended the lecture. The subject was "Peace."

David Little, a minister of Collins' Meeting, Erie County, N. Y., is at his home again after a severe illness and treatment at Bellevue Hospital, New York city. He was taken suddenly ill while attending yearly meeting, but New York Friends were very kind and attentive, ministering to his needs.

In a two days' meeting held at a Friend's home near Celima, O., the 11th and 12th instant, three young people took definite steps in their religious experience. The ministers present were Harvey and Alice Bergman, James Swanders and Clara Waters. Other home workers were present. All went home feeling rejoiced and strengthened.

On Seventh month 5th an excellent union Christian citizenship meeting was held by the Christian Endeavorers of Ludlow, O., followed by a sermon on the same subject. The meeting will prove of lasting benefit in the way of more strict Sabbath observance, more effective opposition to public immoral practices and more decisive warfare against intemperance.

Peace Rally Day will be observed by an all-day basket meeting, held in the Auditorium at the college, Wilmington, O., under the auspices of the Yearly Meeting Peace Committee, commencing at 10 o'clock a.m., Fifth-day, the 23d instant. There will be an oratorical contest in the forenoon. Good vocal and instrumental music will be rendered. In the afternoon Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Boston, secretary of the American Peace Society, will deliver an address. All are cordially invited.

President Robert L. Kelly was in Boston from the 6th to the 11th instant, meeting with the Board of Directors of the Religious Education Association. About sixty officers were present. Arrangements were made for the next public meeting of the association, which is to occur in Philadelphia Fourth month 1st, 2d and 3d, 1904. The general topic of this meeting will be "The Bible in Practical Life." It will be the greatest religious meeting of the year. It is expected that one of the addresses will be made by President Roosevelt.

Services in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the building of the Friends' meeting house at Saylesville, R. I., were held the 30th ultimo. by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The exercises took place in the quaint old building, the original part of which was erected Sixth and Seventh months, 1703. The place was tastefully decorated, and this, together with the picturesqueness of the surroundings, added much to the inspiration of the occasion. An appropriate temperance program was carried out.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at Guilford College, N. C., on the 11th instant, with a good attendance, and much interest was shown in all the business claiming attention. David E. Sampson, of Yadkin Valley Quarter, and Eli Reece, of Deep River, were in acceptable attendance, and their service was helpful. The statistics showed a considerable gain in membership, one monthly meeting reporting an accession of twenty-eight members during the year. The monthly meeting in Greensboro is in a prosperous condition, and the work there of S. Edgar Williams, a minister, is much appreciated. When the regular business of the meeting was done the clerk very tenderly presented the subject of the Guilford College Memorial Endowment Fund of our dear departed friend, whose remains were so recently laid to rest in the New Garden Burying Grounds near the site of the old yearly meeting house.

BORN.

ELLEMAN.—To Lora and Lizzie Elleman, of West Milton, O., on Seventh month 4th, 1903, a girl.

MARRIED.

SMITH—BROOKE.—At the home of the bride's parents, Dr. and Louisa T. Brooke, Sandy Spring, Md., Sixth month 23d, 1903, Jane Porter and Norman Gilpin Smith, son of Newlin and Clara Smith, of Deer Creek, Md. The young couple left immediately for their future home, Auburn, Me.

DIED.

PIERCE.—At the home of his parents, Walter C. and Lois T. Pierce, Ludlow, O., Seventh month 9th, 1903, John Elvin, aged a little over 2 years and 6 months.

TOMLINSON.—At her home at Archdale, Randolph County, N. C., Sixth month 24th, 1903, Martha S. Tomlinson, wife of Dr. I. M. Tomlinson, in her 66th year. She was the daughter of Nathan and Sallie Stockden Hunt and the granddaughter of the late Nathan Hunt. She was a beloved member and elder of Springfield Monthly Meeting of Friends.

Events and Comments.

Minister Conger, at Pekin, informed the State Department that Wu Ting Fang, formerly Chinese Minister to the United States, has been appointed second assistant in the corps of under secretaries. This gives the ex-minister an opportunity to utilize his foreign knowledge and experience, if the Foreign Office so desires.

Agents of the Gulf and Atlantic Steamship Companies are in the Kansas and Oklahoma wheat belts, contracting with the elevator men for the shipment of wheat direct to Liverpool, via the Gulf and Atlantic Ocean. It is claimed that water route via Galveston will save the farmers and grain dealers over $100,000 each year.

An early estimate by a railroad official at Los Angeles, Cal., who makes a study of citrus fruit crops places the probable number of carloads of oranges and lemons for the season of 1903-4 at 35,000. This would be the largest crop on record. So far this season 20,217 carloads of citrus fruit have been shipped East, with probably 2,000 carloads yet to go.

The political crisis in the Japanese Cabinet resulting from the resignation of Premier Katsura has been settled, and the Premier has resumed office. The Marquis Ito, who it was thought would be called to succeed Katsura, has closed his connection with the opposition political party of the Sei Yukia (Constitutional Political Association), and has accepted the Presidency of the Privy Council.

A gold vein, said to be the richest in Colorado, has been found twenty-eight miles east of Gunnison, Col. The vein is in the Box Canyon district, near Wau-nita. A prospector named Bluerman went into the district a few weeks ago and discovered the ledge from which the gold has been washed into Hot Springs for years. The report of his rich find has spread like wild fire, and hundreds of prospectors are rushing to the region to locate claims.

Evangelist R. A. Torrey, of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, will visit and speak at the convention of Christian Workers at Northfield, Mass., and Wino-na, Ind., during Eighth month. Accompanied by Charles M. Alexander, the gospel singer, he expects to hold meetings in Liverpool (England) in Ninth month, Dundee (Scotland) in Tenth month, and in Manchester (England) in Eleventh month, where a building with a seating capacity of 12,000 is now in process of erection.

There is no blinking the fact that, in American cities, the annual celebration of the "Fourth of July" has degenerated into an annual nuisance instead of a festival of patriotism. The prevailing fashion of celebrating is barbarous. The record this year shows that 52 persons were killed and 3,665 injured, while the loss of property by fire amounted to $400,625. The reports of deaths caused by tetanus is daily increasing the list of mortality. More than a score of promising boys died from this cause in Pennsylvania alone last week.

The Pacific Northwest lumbermen are confronted with the prospective overproduction of a billion feet of lumber next year. New markets must be found if the industry is not to be crippled. Leading lumbermen are trying to induce the transcontinental railroads to open a wider market in the Mississippi Valley, where the chief supply now consists of white pine from Lake Superior and yellow pine from the Gulf States. To this end they are preparing to request the Northern Pacific, Great Northern, Burlington and Union Pacific to make such rate reductions and equalizations as will completely open the markets of South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa and Illinois to Northwestern firms.

The Chinese Government has assured the United States that it will soon open as treaty ports several ports in Manchuria now closed to the world's trade. The Russian Government has formally assured the United States that it will not, in any way, interfere with the opening of these ports, as proposed by China. Although the ports to be opened have not been specified, it is gathered from communications that they are Moukden, the principal inland port of Manchuria, and Ta Tung Kao, at the mouth of the Yalu River. This means the fulfillment of the United States policy of the "open door" in China. Although no set time is mentioned in the promise to open the ports, it is believed that this will follow soon after the Russian evacuation in Ninth month.

In this part of the world the fact that Italians are an emigrating people is well known. The actual figures are somewhat astonishing, however, and they are especially interesting when contrasted with the almost complete absence of emigration from France and Spain. In the whole decade ending in 1880 only 120,000 Italians left the peninsula; in 1902 alone over 600,000 of them abandoned the ancient land of their ancestors. The increase has been steady for twenty years, passing the half-million mark in 1901. No check to the movement is as yet perceptible, and the question whether the annual emigration will reach the million mark is already worth attention. In spite of this loss of inhabitants, Italy's total population increases, for the masses are not given at all to "race suicide." It should be noted that out of the 600,000 emigrants last year, 252,000 came to the United States. The rest of the world, it appears, is affected as well as America by the exodus.

The Cuban Senate has ratified the treaty signed Second month granting the United States sites at Guantanamo and Bahia Honda for naval and coaling stations. By the terms of the treaties the United States is to pay $2,000 annually to Cuba as rental, and also to reimburse Cuba for all private lands and other real property comprised in the area set apart for the stations. The treaty conceding to Cuba the sovereignty over the Isle of Pines was also ratified. This treaty relinquishes on the part of the United States all claim and title to the island in consideration of the concessions of coaling and naval stations provided for in the treaty in relation to those stations. The ratifications of both these treaties are to be exchanged at Washington. The only treaty remaining unratified is the so-called permanent treaty covering all the provisions of the Platt amendment.

COFFEE SENT HER

Back to the Country.

A young woman of Bradford, Vt., made her way to a good position in a big Boston store, and gave it up because of sickness at home, but it all came out right at last, and she tells the story this way: "Two years ago I had to leave a position as bookkeeper in a Boston department store to go back home to take charge of the old place as mother's health seemed shattered, and what do you suppose proved to be the cause that forced me to return?"

"I found her very weak, unable to sit up all day, and with a dizzy feeling if she tried to move about. She had been advised to stop coffee drinking, but as she had used it from childhood it seemed as though nothing could take its place. I had settled down to stay at the farm, when one day I got to thinking over the situation and concluded to try an experiment. I got a package of Postum Coffee. It was not cooked right the next morning, and we were all disappointed. That was because we had tried to make it like coffee. Next morning I had Postum made according to directions, and we were all delighted. In a few days you should have seen the change in mother. Since that time we have never drank coffee, and now we all drink Postum twice a day, and sometimes three times, and think it superior to coffee.

"The change in mother's health since she quit coffee and took up Postum has been wonderful. She is once more able to take the work again, quite well in fact, with no more weakness and nervousness, no more sour stomach, no more trouble of any kind. To cut a long story short she is now entirely well, and I am going back to Boston in a few weeks, thanks to Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ice cold Postum with a dash of lemon is a delightful "cooler" for warm days.

REDUCED RATES TO ASHEVILLE.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account Meeting National Dental Association.

For the benefit of those desiring to attend the meeting of the National Dental Association, at Asheville, N. C., July 24 to 31, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets to Asheville and return, good going July 21 and 22, and good returning to reach original starting point not later than August 2, inclusive, from all stations on its lines, at reduced rates. For rates and conditions of tickets consult Ticket Agents.

GREATLY REDUCED RATES TO THE PACIFIC COAST VIA SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

July 31st to August 13th, Inclusive.

On July 31st to August 13th, special excursion tickets will be sold from Philadelphia to Los Angeles and San Francisco, Cal., and return, at rate of $66.35, via Southern Railway, final limit October 15th, 1903, proportionate low rates from other points. In addition to the Standard Pullman Drawing-room Sleeping Cars, operated daily, the Southern Railway operates, on fast trains, tri-weekly, high class personally-conducted vestibuled excursion sleeping cars between Washington, Los Angeles and San Francisco, Cal., without change, via Atlanta, New Orleans, San Antonio and El Paso, in which the double berth rate is only $7.00.

The excursion sleeping cars leave

Washington at 9 p.m., on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Charles L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will take pleasure in furnishing all information.

UP THE HUDSON.

On July 30th, August 19th, and September 3d the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will run its usual mid-summer excursions to the "Upper Hudson," under personal escort. Special train will leave Broad Street Station at 7.34 a.m., stopping at principal points between Philadelphia and Trenton.

A stop will be made at West Point, giving those who disembark an hour and a half at that point, and enabling them to view the United States Military Academy.

In order to insure an early return, no stop will be made at Newburgh, although the steamer will run to a point off that city and there turn.

Tickets will be sold at the following round-trip rates: From Philadelphia, Bristol and intermediate stations, $2.50; Trenton, $2.00; Tulpehocken, Westmoreland and intermediate stations, $2.50; Upsal, Carpenter and Allen's Lane, $2.60; Wissahickon Heights, Highland and Chestnut Hill, $2.70.

At Germantown Junction connection will be made with regular trains from Chestnut Hill Branch.

Tickets good only on special train and connections at above points.

"Thank you, my little man," said Miss Passy to the nice little boy who had given up his seat in the car. "And have you been taught to always give your seat to ladies?"

"No'm," replied the bright boy; "only to old ladies."

The British Friend

Published on the 15th of each month.

Being the only religious and literary review written chiefly for the general public, but from the standpoint of the Society of Friends, The British Friend offers a unique opportunity for spreading "The Truth" among thoughtful enquirers.

The July number contains:

- "The Spending of Money," by Agnes A. Barrow.
- "Physical Training," by Arthur Rowntree.
- "Educational Notes: Respect and Obedience," by Rachel Fairbrother.
- "Lynching: A Plea for Humanity," "Wesley and his Critics," by John W. Graham.
- "The Recording of Ministers," by Caroline E. Stephen and Charles H. Clark.
- "The Home Mission Committee and the Maintenance of Workers," by John S. Rowntree.

A distinct feature is made of Reviews and Notices of Books, especially such as are likely to be helpful to preachers and social workers.

EDWARD GRUBB, M.A.

Devonshire Chambers, Bishopsgate, Without, Lon. E. C.

The late William M. Evarts once discovered E. Dalafield Smith, the well-known lawyer, singing in church with all his heart. He whispered to a friend: "Why, there is Smith singing 'I want to be an angel.' I knew he wanted to be district attorney, but I did not know he wanted to be an angel." The remark was repeated to Smith, and quick as a flash came the retort, "No, I have never mentioned the matter to Evarts, knowing he had no influence in that direction!"—"Christian Register."

Three Books You Should Have

We have three books written by the late DR. DOUGAN CLARK, Professor of Biblical Literature in Earlham College. Dr. Clark was recognized as one of the leading teachers on Holiness, and his books are full of spiritual food.

1. HOLY GHOST DISPENSATION.

This book sets forth with great clearness the joy and beauty of living in fellowship with the Holy Spirit. It should be read by all who are thirsty after the higher life. It contains 170 pages, finely printed, good paper, in strong cloth binding, price 50 cents. It treats of the following subjects: 1.—The Dispensation of the Holy Spirit; 2.—The Holy Spirit our Sanctifier; 3.—The Holy Spirit an object of Worship, Praise and Prayer; 4.—Intercessory Functions of the Holy Spirit; 5.—The Anointing and Sealing of the Spirit; 6.—The Holy Spirit's Guidance; 7.—The Striving of the Spirit; 8.—Sanctification not by Growth nor Death; 9.—Sanctification not Impeccability; 10.—Sanctification and Temptation; 11.—Be ye therefore Perfect; 12.—Preserved; 13.—A Plea for Orthodoxy; 14.—The Reckoning of Faith.

2. INSTRUCTIONS TO CHRISTIAN CONVERTS.

This book has passed through eight editions. It is one of the most valuable books to put into the hands of young Christians. The chapters are: 1.—Be Definite; 2.—Be Diligent; 3.—Be Faithful; 4.—Be Patient; 5.—Be Holy; 6.—Be Filled; 7.—Be Established. 133 pages; price 50 cents.

3. INNER AND OUTER LIFE OF HOLINESS.

This book was written just before Dr. Clark's death. In many respects it is his most spiritual work. The book has 100 pages well printed and bound; price, cloth 35 cents; leatherette 20 cents. The book treats first of INNER LIFE as a life of Peace, Faith, Full Assurance. Extinction of Selfishness, Communion with God, and Spiritual Growth. And of the OUTER LIFE: The Walk, Regulation, Habit, Meekness and Rule of Action.

Believe, O soul, that art placed in this mysterious and glorious universe, that God formed thee from his spirit for no mean purpose, but for a destiny nobler than thy highest aspirations have pointed to. Believe in the best thoughts and whisperings that visit thy heart. If thou dost catch at times some gleams of the divineness of charity, of the glory of sacrifice, of the grandeur of faith, of the sky-piercing power of prayer, like mountain peaks jutting through fogs, or slopes afar off in the horizon light, believe in them with more enthusiasm than in the stupid dust of the beaten roads. . . . Believe in them, for they are the mountain principles and altar-piles of life.

THE MOVEMENT AGAINST OATHS.

About one year ago record was made in these columns of a successful effort made by Benjamin P. Moore, of Baltimore, to abolish the imprecatory features of the oath from the courts and customs of Maryland. The form resulting was almost identical with one used in Colonial Pennsylvania for several years under Friendly management. It was not deemed satisfactory to all Friends, but it removed some of the most serious difficulties.

The movement has now been revived in Pennsylvania. Thomas Raeburn White, a graduate of Earlham College and of the University of Pennsylvania Law School, where he is now instructor, read before a recent meeting of the State Bar Association a paper on "Judicial Oaths and Their Effect upon the Competency of Witnesses." An elaboration of the paper is printed in the July (1903) number of the "American Law Register."

After a history of the oath among ancient peoples, a very full statement of the present customs among our States is given. In thirteen States the choice lies with the taker, as between oath and affirmation, without any reasons being given. In the others any one conscientious about swearing may be affirmed.

This, perhaps, may be sufficient to satisfy tender consciences, but those who believe in the New Testament prohibition of oaths, and those who are shocked at the irreverent use of the name of the Deity in legal proceedings, will desire in the interests of religion and of truthfulness that the process of affirming should be made general.

There is also a certain restriction on religious liberty. A conscientious Friend, no matter how qualified, could hardly hold the position of judge or magistrate where the administration of oaths became a part of his duty. Many competent Friends resigned such places in Pennsylvania in early times.

After reading the article, one is strongly impressed with the idea that oaths are not only unscriptural, but unnecessary—that every safeguard to truth now gained by their imposition may be equally attached to a simple promise—and that men of doubtful character are restrained, not by the Divine wrath, but by fear of human penalty.

Many, and where their attention is directed to it, most of the prominent lawyers, take this view. Such was the experience of Benjamin Moore in Maryland, and such has been the experience of Thomas White in Pennsylvania. In a private letter he says, "I succeeded in convincing perhaps a majority of the members (of the Bar Association) that the action I intimate should be taken." The matter was referred to a committee to draft the form of an act which will in time probably get before the Pennsylvania Legislature.

In the mean time the friends of the movement in this State should forward it vigorously, and those in other States where the matter has not been taken up should be encouraged to educate their lawyers and legislators. A wise and forcible man may do anywhere what has been accomplished in Maryland and may be in Pennsylvania. I. S.

A CONTINUING REVELATION.

If any one of us could review a single day of his life from God's viewpoint, he would know more about revelation than is found in all the books. We think of those patriarchs to whom God manifested Himself in visible or audible ways, and of the disciples who knew the earthly companionship of our Lord, and reckon that to them there were revelations. We recall with something of awe the prevision and spiritual insight of Friends from the days of George Fox to the present, and feel ourselves the heirs of a goodly inheritance.

But it is pre-eminently worth while to remember also that the same purpose of good concerning His people actuates God to-day, and that there is no diminution of His powers. We can but believe, therefore, that He is seeking to make Himself known no less accurately and influentially to us than to any that have gone before us. More than that, unless we realize that He does find modes of communicating with us, the great purpose of the recording of these events is lost to us. The things that were written aforetime are for our learning, but no revelation ever made to any other ranks in importance to us with the personal and individual revelation that constitutes our own experience and knowledge of God. This does not imply anything unique or startling; it means simply that the one who accepts the guidance of the Holy Spirit is actually guided, and requires only to believe to find himself walking with God as truly as did Enoch, though there be no raptures or ecstasies or awful and overpowering sense of the divine presence.

If we reckon ourselves of the "seed of Abraham" and bound to know God after a fixed order, we run great risks of not knowing Him at all. The past ought to bring us to the truth; but if it becomes a bar, it would better all be let go that we may not miss the fresh message that is our due and portion for to-day. The ideal Christian is the one that is spiritually informed; that is the standard set for Quakerism by its founders, and the essential basis for its realization is in the continued revelation by the abiding Light, to which we are unremittingly to give heed as to a lamp shining in a dark place.

EARLY QUAKERISM AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN.

II.

THE SITUATION WHICH NECESSITATED AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.—(1.) Progress of the Reformation in England.

The so-called Reformation in England under Henry VIII. was no reformation in reality, but simply a transfer of spiritual power from the person of the Pope to the person of the King. The true Reformation as exemplified by its different phases on the Continent, consisted not in a change of spiritual power from the person of the Pope to the person of a king or emperor, but in an entire break with all temporal power and authority in spiritual things, and hence a bringing of the soul life of man into direct personal contact with its Creator. This was the goal at which the movement aimed, but its attainment differed with different individuals as they came to it with varying temperaments and under different environments.

The movement in England under Henry VIII. can hardly be regarded as touching even the edge of the true spirit of the Reformation. In the time of Edward VI. it assumed more the nature of the continental reforms. Under Mary strenuous measures were tried to restore Catholicism, but Elizabeth followed a compromising policy between the Catholics and Protestants. She appeased the rising Puritan movement, and in 1559 the Act of Uniformity was passed which compelled all clergymen to conform to the rites and ceremonies of the Established Church. James I. manifested a conciliatory spirit towards the Catholics, and took every opportunity to injure the dissenting bodies. Charles I. favored the Catholics even more than James I., and there were fears of a Catholic reaction.

Throughout all this period from the radical move of Henry VIII. in breaking away from the Papacy down to Charles I., the close communication between Church and State is ever a prominent feature. There was a State religion, and with more or less energy that religion was forced upon the people. The State stood between the individual soul and God.

In the midst of such circumstances the Puritan movement, whose beginning can be traced back as far as Wyclif, was gaining power, and the more devout were thus protesting against ritualistic form, and the slavery of conscience brought about by the spiritual lordship of the State. The Puritans gave promise of carrying the Reformation to its logical outcome—full religious liberty—but their history in England is a sad commentary on the hopes they aroused.

In their earlier years the Puritans as a religious body kept themselves free from political entanglements. They did not even separate from the Established Church, but stood within it, quietly awaiting the progress of events. When the civil war broke out in 1642 these people very soon found themselves eager partisans with the Presbyterians against Royalist forces, and what is of particular value to this discussion is the fact that these people who had kept apart from State politics now became engaged in one of the most complicated Church and State struggles of all history. The Royalist party, in standing by the king, favored, of course, his policy not only as to the State, but also in reference to the Church.

The Parliamentary party went into the war with varying motives, some for personal liberty, some for personal ends, and still others for the public good. Religion served as the common element to bind all these varying motives into a unity of purpose.

In Parliament itself while the conflict over constitution gave the program, religion furnished the enthusiasm which was so manifest on every side, and gave zest to the struggle. No sooner did the war turn against the king than the two divisions of the Parliament party, the Presbyterians and Independents (this division was one made on religious lines), began to struggle for the power in the State, First the Presbyterians held the majority in Parliament, then the Independents, and as each party gained power they forced upon the country their own peculiar religious views, thus defeating the very end for which the early Puritans stood.

During the period of the Commonwealth the party which in the first place had declared itself for religious freedom held the power in the State and thus had the opportunity to demonstrate the sincerity of their early claims. Stoughton, in his "History of Religion in England," tells us that three men, Vane, Cromwell and Ireton, were virtually the English triumvirate. In ecclesiastical politics they were anti-Episcopal and anti-Presbyterian; they were pledged to toleration, and wished to give full play to the activity of the sects, so far as was consistent with the stability of government. This is what they stood for, but the last clause of the above statement as expressing their policy became the means by which these and other intensely religious statesmen dragged religion into Parliament and laid upon the people a religious bondage different in name but equal in spirit to the slavery of the Papal rule itself.

Thus did Puritanism drag in the dust her high ideal, and England was still within the grasp of religious despotism.

(2.) Religious Unrest.

This relation between Church and State revealed in itself a situation which called for some great evangelical movement. It is not to be thought, however, that this state of affairs went unchallenged. The very laws themselves, enacted to uphold one type of belief, show the presence of many others against which these laws were aimed. It was a period of religious unrest and turmoil. In the midst of all the outward strife in reference to forms or creeds there was the desire on the part of many to get back to the pure substance of truth. The mushroom growth of the numerous sects which sprang into existence during this period shows the dissatisfaction with the old and the desire for something which would satisfy.

The country was flooded with writings of all kinds both for and against these different sects, and so much were they in demand that many of them passed very rapidly into their third editions.

The rise of these different sects and the rapid spread of this literature show that this unsettled condition of religious life was not simply local but national in character.

This struggle which aimed at religious liberty, but ended in religious despotism, and this spirit of unrest which was so strongly felt throughout the nation cannot be better substantiated than by a statement of the Friends' estimate of the situation. George Fox was the founder of Quakerism, and Robert Barclay, because he is one who has given the clearest portrayal of their belief, may be regarded as the leading theologian or apologist for the Society. From writings and experiences of these two men may be obtained a proper judgment of the situation which gave birth to Quakerism.

(3.) Barclay's Estimate of the Situation.

Barclay's estimate of the ministry of his time may be briefly summarized in his own words under five heads: *

1. "The ministry and ministers . . . are such as have no immediate call from Christ, to whom the leading and motion of the Spirit is not reckoned necessary."

2. "The ministers . . . are such to whom the grace of God is no needful qualification, and so may be true ministers, . . . though they be ungodly, unholy and profligate men."

3. "The ministers . . . are such as wait not for, nor expect, nor need the Spirit of God to actuate and move them in the works of the ministry."

4. "The ministers . . . are such as strive and contend for superiority, and claim precedency over one another."

5. "The ministers . . . are such as not having freely received, will not freely give; but are covetous, doing that which they ought not for filthy lucre's sake; as to preach for hire, and divine for money, and look for their gain from their quarter, and prepare war for such as put not into their mouths."

This estimate of the clergy, the truth of which is confirmed by contemporary history, is sufficient reason in itself for Barclay's further judgment of the Protestants when he says,* "Their preaching and worships, as well as their whole conversation, is not to be discerned from Papish by any fresh living zeal, or lively power of the Spirit accompanying it, but merely by the difference of some notions and opinions."

The Reformation in England, however genuine it came to be after the reign of Henry VIII., lost its reality by the close of the sixteenth century and the opening years of the following century found the people again weary of ecclesiastical despotism and formal religion, and longing for something which would satisfy their spiritual hunger and give to them the true essence of the gospel.

(4.) Experience of Fox.

It was in the midst of such religious conditions that George Fox found himself at the age of 19, and the story of his experiences at that time mirrors the real condition of the clergy and the church, and it is clearly evident that the very blackness of the situation compelled him to look elsewhere for light. In his distress of soul Fox turned first to one priest, then to another, but, to use his own words, he found "they were all miserable comforters." From the priests he turned for help to the separatists, but failed here to find any one who could "speak to his condition." Despairing of finding solace from men, he turned to God and found the help his soul so much craved. † "Then the Lord let me see why there was none upon the earth that could speak to my condition, namely, that I might give Him all the glory, for all are included under sin and shut up in unbelief, as I had been, that Jesus Christ might have the pre-eminence, who enlightens and gives grace and faith and power."

From all of this it is evident that had the Church of the seventeenth century been living in any measure up to its spiritual responsibilities and privileges, Quakerism would never have come into existence. Quakerism as started by George Fox was but the logical outcome of the spiritual forces of the Reformation, and, had the earlier reforms followed the course in which they began instead of drifting into alliances with the State and thence into mere formalism, there would have been no need for the Quaker uprising. The situation, however, called for an evangelical movement. This call was answered in the person and work of George Fox and his followers.

(At this point should be inserted an examination of the origin of Quakerism, but the limits of the paper will not permit its discussion.)

ENDURING HANDIWORK.

BY EDWARD JUDSON.

In the Church of the Transfiguration, sometimes called "The Little Church Around the Corner," may be seen a memorial window to Edwin Booth. On its glowing and opalescent surface is represented the life-size figure of a mediæval actor, in sitting posture. He faces the spectator, but looks fixedly down upon the mask which he has just taken from his face and is holding in his hands, that rest upon his knees. The actor's face conveys a delicate suggestion of Edwin Booth's melancholy features, and his downward pensive and regretful gaze expresses the true artist's eternal dissatisfaction with the achievement of his effort, the discontent that always shadows the pathway of genius. Every man has some such mental uneasiness when he stops and glances back over his life work.

One strand in our disquiet is the apprehension that what we have achieved will not endure. We sympathize with the Psalmist's petition, "Establish thou the work of our hands upon us." We want the finished product of the loom to have an indestructible character. One does not like to have his task through the world as evanescent as the flight of Maeterlinck's bees, "the print of their laborious footsteps graven in the sky." Man looks for a permanent residuum, commensurate with the strenuousness of his efforts. He seeks to freeze his thoughts into some hard, enduring form—a picture, a statue, a poem, a machine, a beneficent social organism. Even the coral builder leaves behind an outgrown shell, his meagre but ineffaceable contribution to the beauty of the ocean. It seems hard that we should disappear from this scene of mortal strife, as the face sinks beneath the surface of the sea, without making any impress. We aspire to leave the city a little better and cleaner through our having lived in it, like Colonel Waring, to lower the death rate. When painfully aware of the triviality and imperfection of our handiwork, we sometimes find relief in the truth that the thing we do is less important than the effect upon our life and character. God thinks more of the man than He does of his work. The building toilsomely constructed of combustible material—wood, hay, stubble—may be burned up, but the man shall be saved so as by fire. Not what we do to our work, but what it does to us is the main point. A man's work has enduring quality just as far as it promotes in him a strong and beautiful character? Though he make a failure of his work, let a man see to it that he does not make a failure of himself. Have you not all known those who, though they have made a poor fist of getting on in the world, have kept sweet and brave and true? The truest success we achieve, not by eager striving and direct approach, but, as it were, around a corner, by the slow and tortuous process of the symmetrical development of the whole man, body, mind and spirit. What we are counts for more in the long run than what we do. Let a man say his prayers, keep up his habits of reading and study, take plenty of good exercise, and he need not concern himself about the impression which his work makes upon the surface of society. The question is not what great thing can we achieve, but are we filling up each separate day with methodical, disinterested effort, like those choice spirits described by Lowell:

"Steadfast and still, nor paid with mortal praise,
But finding amplest recompense
For life's ungarlanded expense
In work done squarely, and unwasted days."

Only by persistence can enduring handiwork be achieved. The two elements of success in almost any profession, especially in a large town, are longevity and good behavior. The chief thing is to outlive one's competitors. We are often doing our best work where there is least sign of success. One makes slow progress against the stream of evil. "Success," according to Renan, "is most often the child of our bad qualities." It usually comes to those who are adroit enough to put themselves at the point where the winds and currents converge in their favor. It is one of the antinomies of the present time that the more truth there is in a system, the less organizing power it possesses. An admixture of the alloy of error seems needed to make the truth tough and workable. But one must not give in to such a heresy. It is better to fail on right principles than to succeed on wrong ones. Success and suffering seem vitally interrelated. If you succeed without suffering it is because others suffered before you. If you suffer without succeeding, it is that others may succeed after you.

New York City.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

Oregon Yearly Meeting was held in Newberg, beginning with meeting of ministry and oversight at 3 p.m., Seventh month 6th, and closing Seventh month 12th.

There were many expressions of praise, and the spirit of praise and rejoicing continued throughout the entire yearly meeting.

The meeting of ministry and oversight considered the subject of evangelistic work and brought before the yearly meeting proper the proposition that ministers and workers give more earnest attention to our evangelistic work without depending so much upon a special evangelist, and that some way be provided to answer the many calls that come from isolated settlements where a few Friends have made their homes and desire help to establish meetings.

The first session of the yearly meeting was opened by the presiding clerk, Edwin McGrew, at 10 o'clock a.m., Seventh month 7th. For many reasons the attendance was perhaps at first a little smaller than usual, but interest and numbers increased as the meeting progressed.

Friends present from other yearly meetings were: Charles and Mary Tebbetts, Amos Kenworthy, Levi D. Barr and wife, William Coffin and wife, from California; Benjamin and Lydia Binford, from Western, and Martha Elliott, from Kansas. The ministry and kindly sympathy of these Friends was most helpful.

Amos Kenworthy seemed to have lost none of his old-time zeal and little indeed of youthful energy. His messages were helpful to every honest soul, and his teaching was just in line with the apparent needs of the Church. He spoke the truth in love. Levi D. Barr, who for some years was identified with the work of Oregon Yearly Meeting, was welcomed, and his messages were most acceptable. Each of the other visiting Friends had helpful words and messages for us, and they frequently spoke during the sessions of the meeting.

The usual time was given to the consideration of temperance, peace, literature, Christian Endeavor, Bible schools, missions and education, and the programs of all were very interesting.

The hour spent on the subject of temperance was full of earnest expression. Oregon Yearly Meeting heartily favors the proposition for the meeting in Washington, D. C., in 1906, and would urge earnest effort and earnest prayer that something of a very positive character may result from it.

The subject of missions is one of very peculiar interest, and the work of our missionaries was well brought before us. A letter was read from the Kaak Mission, Alaska, containing many testimonies carefully written, as they were spoken by some of the earnest Christian Indians. These testimonies were cheering and encouraging.

The subject of education was of very great interest. A good program was given in way of discussion of various subjects by members of the alumni of Pacific College. Reports show a much larger attendance than usual at the college during the past year, and that the year has been one of advance and improvement.

Amos Kenworthy led in an earnest prayer for the success of the college, and in response to Professor Kelsey's appeal for help something over $1,250 was subscribed to apply on expenses of the coming year.

The struggle to keep free from debt with no endowment seems a long one, but we live in the hope that better things are in store in the near future, and that those who have known so much of sacrifice may be somewhat relieved.

The business of the yearly meeting was completed on Seventh-day evening, but the concluding minute was not read until the close of the First-day evening session.

The Sabbath was a day of wonderful blessing, and the yearly meeting closed in the same spirit of praise in which it began. With the recognition that the presence of the Lord had been with us throughout, and with the promise from many to do their best in service during the coming year, the meeting closed to meet at the usual time and place next year, if the Lord wills.

Some Views on Present Topics.

THOUGHTS FOR OCCASIONAL SPEAKERS.*

BY ONE OF THEMSELVES.

The gift of the ministry is one of the most precious of those bestowed upon the Church, and of vital importance to its well-being and continuance.

It might have pleased the Lord to spread the gospel through angelic messengers, but He has otherwise ordained. Through one human intelligence acting upon another, and with heart answering to heart in spiritual things it hath pleased Him that the work of grace should be accomplished and salvation proclaimed. The divine commission is clearly set forth in the words spoken from heaven to him who was afterwards the great apostle to the Gentiles, "Rise and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive the forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me."

This precious gift of the ministry belongs not so much to the individual as to the Church. The minister is the mouth-piece, his messages are colored and modified by his personality, but the gift belongs to the Church. She must develop, cherish, cultivate it for her own sake. It is to be coveted and prayed for. The one great need of our branch of the Church today is for men whose lips have been touched with a live coal from off the altar to utter burning, eloquent words that shall carry conviction with them.

The great Head of the Church bestows upon its individual members different gifts,

"None so poor and small that they have not any."

Our ranks are no less motley than the company of valiants who came to the help of King David in the wilderness. There were brave men, with faces like lions, ready and dextrous in every emergency; there were those who were strong through the joy of overcoming; there were sages who had understanding of the times, wise in counsel. Back of these there was a host of loyal followers, men that could keep the rank and were not of a double heart. Still farther in the background, inconspicuous, but no unimportant adjunct, upholding, strengthening all, gathered the kindly folk, who, with willing heart, brought food and refreshment and ministered of their substance to those engaged in active warfare. In the Church there are those with the gift of exhortation, of testimony, of teaching and of stewardship. There are gifts differing, but in common with other branches of the Christian Church, Friends have always reckoned a gift in the ministry as pre-eminent, conferred by the Lord, to be solemnly and deliberately recognized by the Church, bringing with it not only to its possessor, but to the meeting grave responsibility for its right exercise, other gifts to be held in strict subordination to it.

Now, owing to our jealous watchfulness against pre-arrangement in our devotional meetings and our scrupulous care that the liberty of the Spirit should be maintained in these gatherings, we have fallen into a kind of bondage, under which we all chafe, and from which we must emancipate ourselves in the name of the Lord, or die out as a people.

God looks for results. The Church must be up and at work. Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us. Elders and overseers must ask for grace to know how to distinguish between saplings and shrubs, and not to think that long suckers on lilac bushes or syringas indicate healthful growth. Weeds must be pulled up by the root; religious tramps must not be tolerated or given audience. There must be room and air and cultivation after the best modern methods bestowed upon the young spiritual life of the Church. Nor can we afford to spare expense. We must count the cost and then resolutely meet it. It will pay in the end. It means self-preservation.

Redundancies and awkwardnesses must be lopped off or trimmed into shape. Minor gifts, exhortation, testimony and teaching must be put in their proper places; there are plenty of sunny corners and quiet nooks where these may be useful. Poor elders, the pruning shears blister the hands that hold them, but they must be used. Many Christians are so easily wounded. They are like photographic plates, and the same sensitiveness to divine impressions possessed by them makes them very quick and tender; a certain passage in the Psalms is helpful: "Let the righteous smite me: it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head; for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities."

License of speech by unauthorized individuals, quite often non-members, is too commonly prevalent in our meetings, and occasional, habitual or chronic speakers need to exercise great care lest they overstep their limits. . . .

Here is a case in point, that of a quarterly meeting in the country. The house was crowded to the doorway. Several visiting ministers were present, but an elderly man rose, and for one hour and a half he held forth, stringing together a series of incoherent, unsound vagaries. When remonstrated with, one of the leading Friends of that meeting acknowledged that this person usually occupied most of the time on Sabbath morning, but that he was a kind neighbor, they did not like to hurt his feelings, and he was not always quite so unsound! This condition of things continued for years. Is this giving free course to the Spirit and glorifying God? Need we wonder that meetings die out?

Are, then, prayer and testimony and the word of exhortation to be suppressed in the body of the house? By no means, but they should be exercised with prayerful care and with due subordination to the recognized ministry.

One who had thought much and prayerfully on this subject has said: "I regard it increasingly as a very solemn thing to break the silence of an assembly gathered in adoration and worship before the Lord, and one which should not lightly be entered upon, nor at all, save in His strength and at His call.

"Much that may be presented to us may be for our own use and comfort only, and we may mar the Lord's work, and frustrate His real message to the people, whether immediately or instrumentally sent forth, by rambling or empty discourses.

"Yet, when the word of life springs up in the heart of the least child, whether of prayer, or praise, or testimony, its faithful delivery adds to the solemnity of God's worship, and to the promotion of His glory."

The first utterances of a newly-awakened soul, imperfect and hesitating as these may be, have a sweetness, freshness and power of their own. The Heavenly Gardener says: "My soul desired the first ripe fruits." We might think them sour and immature, but he says, "The vine with the tender grapes gives a good smell."

The message may be a brief one, just one swift, clean-cut text of scripture in simple, direct language; or, from the fulness of a revelation, the message may be more extended. It may even be a small gift in many words like pure gold beaten thin; but it must be pure gold to be acceptable.

Do not let us inflict upon our fellow worshippers misquoted or misapplied texts, long-drawn-out narrations, details of personal matters, stereotyped expressions, inaudible prayers or testimonies. God gives us voices; let us lift them up and use them to His glory. Throw out your words, speak to the man in the far corner of the room. If called to much speaking, spend a few dollars for a course in elocution.

Do not decry nor despise culture nor boast that you do not want any theology. Theology is the knowledge of God. We need all that we can attain of it. We are to worship Him with mind and understanding as well as heart. Above all, take time to wait upon the Lord before speaking. Do not run before your Guide. Impulse and inspiration are not synonymous.

We often hear a spirit of criticism deprecated, and are mournfully reminded how much harm it works when it creeps into a meeting; but the Church has a right to be critical and exacting about her ministry. It is her life. Her children must have food, milk for babes, strong meat for working men and women. Hungry children are always cross; give them food convenient for them, and criticism will die out.

We come to meeting out of the rush and pressure of life very hungry for spiritual food. We cannot be satisfied with mild platitudes, shop-worn generalities without special point, empty husks which once contained the pure grain.

We are crying for food, Mother Church; we have so many problems to solve, we want to be helped in right living, in winning souls, in stemming the tide of evil, in building up the nation. It is fresh, living Bread from heaven that we need, the fresh fruit of the living Vine. Can we blame the hungry children if one after another they quietly steal away to take square, substantial meals at some neighbor's table?

There has never, perhaps, been a time when the gospel was more fully and clearly proclaimed. Men, fearless, honest, eloquent and cultured, are setting forth the truth as it is in Jesus and as George Fox found it. The stranger receives cordial welcome, and so our best and brightest slip away. Some hold on and remain, but even with these it may be that "Faith unfaithful holds them falsely true."

George Herbert says that when the preacher fails

"God takes the text and preacheth patience," but we don't wish the preacher to fail; we need him to help us and teach us, and there are other lessons besides patience that we have to learn. M.

First-day, Eighth mo. 9.—The Christian conflict. Eph. 6: 10-18.

The date of the incident described in the present lesson would seem to be about two or three years after the time of the last lesson; that is, about 1063 B.C., according to one system of chronology, and 1020, according to another. Saul was still king. Samuel was doubtless living at Ramah, but taking no part in political matters. David is supposed to have been about twenty-two years old. His home was at Bethlehem. Goliath, the Philistine from Gath, was "probably a survivor of the ancient race of Anakim—the giants of the spies" (see Josh. 11: 21, 22). According to the account, he was nine feet eight inches high (taking the cubit at eighteen inches), or, if the longer cubit is taken, which is probably the one meant here, he would be over ten feet high. The armor of Goliath would indicate his strength; it was made of bronze, and the coat of mail is stated to have weighed 5,000 shekels, equal to about 158 pounds, and his spear, "like a weaver's beam," about twenty pounds. The Philistines had made an attack upon Israel and reached Shocho, about eight miles from Bethlehem. Saul had gathered an army to meet them. Each army must have occupied a strong position, which would account for the delay in attack.

While the two armies thus faced each other, we are told that Goliath advanced from the Philistine army every day for forty days, challenging any Hebrew to meet him in single combat, and thus decide the war. Such a thing was quite in accord with the custom of the times. At this juncture David, sent by his father to see how his brothers, who were in the Israelite army, fared, made his appearance. He saw Goliath and heard his threat. How David felt and acted is graphically described in verses 22-37, which should be read. Here the lesson begins.

38. "And Saul clad David with his apparel, and he put a helmet of brass upon his head, and he clad him with a coat of mail." Amer. R. V. The apparel was the dress worn under the armor.

39. "Assayed to go." He attempted to follow the wishes of the king. "Proved it." Had never tried armor before. "I cannot go." He felt that it was worse than useless to wear armor, as he was unaccustomed to it.

40. "Staff." Every shepherd and most men carried a staff, but here it is not unlikely the word should be translated "club." Compare 2 Sam. 23: 21. "Five smooth stones." The smoother the stone the more accurately it would fly. "Five," lest the first or others should fail. A brook flows in the rainy season through the valley where the armies were, but its bed was doubtless dry at this time. "Shepherd's bag," "scrip." Possibly the scrip was the slinger's bag, which he would carry as a shepherd; or it may have been the bag carried by a traveler. Compare Matt. 10: 10. "Sling." A favorite weapon in Syria, and much used in ancient times everywhere. The Benjaminites were specially skilful in its use. See Judges 20: 16. "Drew near." Near enough to use his sling to advantage, but not near enough for Goliath to use his sword, or even his spear. David, with his sling, was meeting the giant in a way which made personal prowess of no avail. Practically Goliath had no advantage over any ordinary man; indeed he was at a disadvantage, for he offered a larger mark to aim at.

41. "The man that bore the shield." His armor bearer. Compare 1 Sam. 31: 4-6.

42. "Disdained him." This was natural, and it was before David had made use of his weapon.

43. "Dog." The dog in the East is a scavenger and a despised animal. To call a person a dog is to give a most opprobrious title. "Staves." He did not know about the sling.

44. "Cursed David by his gods." Devoted him to the punishment of his gods. The contest on each side had a religious aspect. Note that David acted and spoke very much as Goliath did, the difference being that David appealed to the true, while Goliath appealed to the false.

45. "Shield." Better, as in R. V., "javelin." A shield is a defensive weapon. "In the name." In the power of. "Lord of hosts." Literally, "Jehovah of Sabaoth."

46. David states his belief in, sublime confidence in, Jehovah, and gives as a reason for his success that nations might know that Israel had indeed a God.

47. He states that the victory will be the Lord's work; he takes nothing to himself. Goliath says, "I will give thy flesh." David says, "The Lord will deliver thee into mine hand."

48, 49. The description of the death of Goliath is simple, but graphic. Covered with his armor in almost every place, David hit that part which was uncovered. Goliath would seem to have disdained to use his shield. The rest of the chapter, which gives the conclusion of the story, should be read.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. The apparent greatness of an enemy, or of sin, need not dismay, for "greater is He that is with us than those that are against us."
2. "One with God is a majority."
3. "Small things may produce wonderful results."

TOPIC FOR EIGHTH MONTH NINTH.

LESSONS FROM PAUL: HOW WE MAY GET HIS PASSION FOR SOULS.

Rom. 1: 1-17.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 3.—A great vision. Acts 22: 6-11.

Third-day, Eighth mo. 4. A great calling. Tit. 1: 1-4.

Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 5.—A great Saviour. Heb. 7: 22-25.

Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 6.—A great responsibility. 1 Cor. 9: 13-16.

Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 7.—A great Gospel. 1 Cor. 1: 18-24.

Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 8.—A great faith. Gal. 2: 16-20.

It was a passion for the souls of men that sent the Son to save all who believe, and that drew from Jesus' lips that lament of a disastrously rejected love, "How often would I have gathered you, but ye would not." "Groanings that cannot be uttered," and the agonies of Gethsemane and Calvary, are hints to us of the force and depth of the love of God.

But the work of salvation must be carried on by human instruments in part, and it is only those who know something of this same longing love who are fitted to carry the message. The promised Spirit of Truth was to take of the things of Christ and show them to His disciples, when He should be no longer in bodily presence with them. The story of Paul's life is of one who had received what the Spirit brought to him, and who was not disobedient to its guidance. It is worthy of our attention, because the same bestowments and capacities are intended to be ours.

First, Paul saw himself as a sinner, lost beyond all human saving. And he never outgrew the memory of that fact; consequently he never met a man to whom he could not offer words of hope in Jesus Christ, his Saviour. Not all of us need try to realize that we are the chief of sinners, but we must realize that through sin all have incurred the penalty, death, so that apart from Christ there is only absolute and eternal loss.

But mere knowledge of that fact does not make an evangelist. Too many know it and seem utterly indifferent. The outreaching love of God is needed. This, too, the Spirit bestows, and Paul received it until he felt the bonds that unite into one body all whom God has created. He felt himself debtor to every man because of that which had come into his own life; but love is more potent to win and opens more doors to its messenger than does zeal born of a sense of obligation.

Then as Paul's third great equipment he had an unshaken faith in the Gospel of Christ—the power of God unto salvation. He knew of its working in his own case, and had no fears in offering to others. He had the key to eternal life.

Lastly, he had a very specific call; but we can almost affirm that Paul would have felt a call from his realization of the facts set forth above. To know his own experience and the world's need, to be filled with the love of God and with an assurance of His purpose and power, would seem enough to move any one to efforts to bring others to salvation. But there is a call to every one. "Go ye" comes to us no less than to Peter and James and John. We share their responsibilities no less than their privileges, or shall we not call them all privileges?

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE GENERAL SECRETARY.

Instead of John Willis Baer, who for twelve years was the General Secretary of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, Treasurer Shaw presented the report from which the following is taken.

After alluding to the services of John W. Baer and the election of his successor, Von Ogden Vogt, who was shortly to be presented, he referred to the death of Field Secretary Eberman, who died in the work in Manitoba on Easter Sunday. Speaking of the growth of the Society he said:

"From one society, in 1881, to 64,020, in 1903, from one denomination to more than eighty, from one city to every country, and from fifty members to 3,822,300, and a million and a half more in societies bearing strictly sectarian names, but patterned after Christian Endeavor and gaining their inspiration from it. A net gain in number of societies in one year of over two thousand.

"This numerical increase will be made vivid when in the closing session of this convention the fellowship banners made by Endeavorers across the seas are presented to the States and Provinces that have made at least a ten per cent. increase in number of societies during the past eight months."

There were twelve such banners given, one going to Indiana, which State also received a banner for the largest proportionate gain in Intermediate Societies.

"The increase in foreign lands has been equally marked. Especially notable has been the progress made in Germany, Finland, France, Spain, Sweden, Japan, Corea, Persia, India, China and South America.

"This has been made possible by the generous financial help that the World's Christian Endeavor Union has been able to render, thus enabling these countries to employ a general secretary who can give his whole time to the work. Germany is now self-supporting, and has two secretaries."

A Roll of Honor was presented, showing thousands of local societies which had made increases in membership varying from ten to several hundred per cent.

"But, while we rejoice in the large numerical increase of the past months, and shall strive to excel our present record during the coming year, yet we feel that it is one of the least of the things for which we have reason to thank God.

"During the past year 175,000 have come from the ranks of Christian Endeavor into the membership of the churches. And thousands more would have come if more pastors had appreciated what a magnificent field for evangelistic effort God had placed at their hand.

"This has been a year of great material prosperity and most seductive appeals from the secular side of life. There never was a time when so many things, good in themselves, but bad when given the supreme place, appealed to young people as to-day.

"But the letters C. E. have stood not only for Christian Endeavor, but also for Christ Exalted. And because of this fact some who think more of fashion than of faith, of society than of soul, may have been alienated, yet the movement has made a steady gain all along the line.

"But these young people have not only given themselves, they have also given their money. In addition to their gifts in other channels, the societies gave last year for benevolence an average of over fifty dollars for each society by actual detailed reports, a total for all the societies that would have to be expressed in millions.

"Three societies deserve special mention. First, the Oxford Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa., which gave for missions last year $1,814. Second, the Chinese C. E. Society in the Congregational Mission, San Francisco, Cal., which gave $1,516, and third, the Presbyterian Society, Clinton, Ill., which gave $1,125.

"I want to speak a good word for the prayer meeting—the old-fashioned prayer meeting like that in the upper room, where every member is present, and where every member takes part. Just such a meeting as many of our churches need more than they need anything else in this world, and which they can have if they will train their young people properly. Millions of these prayer meetings have been held during the past year.

"Great emphasis has been laid upon Mission and Bible Study Classes, and everywhere groups of young people have been doing systematic work along these lines.

"During the Boer war many Christian Endeavor societies were organized in the prison camps in Ceylon, St. Helena, and Bermuda, with several thousand members. Since the return of these men to South Africa, two hundred have volunteered for missionary work, and the Dutch Reformed Church has opened a training school for them in Worcester, South Africa. We hold in high honor the little group of five missionary volunteers around the Haystack at Williamstown, Mass. What shall we say of the two hundred Endeavorer missionary volunteers in South Africa?

"The staying power of Christian Endeavor deserves mention. At first the critics gave the society five years to live. Then they called it a fad, and said ten years would see its finish. But, friends, it is alive to-day, and never so great in numbers or so practical in its work as now. I have a list of the first societies organized in each of our States and Territories, fifty-one in all. The oldest one organized in 1881, and the youngest in 1894. Forty-two of these societies are alive and flourishing to-day. Eight were changed to denominational societies, and one was disbanded because the pastor wanted to try some other form or organization.

"It is not a perpetual motor; it will not run itself. It is a method, not a machine. The quality of its work depends upon the quality of its membership. For its largest success it needs the leadership of its pastor, the sympathy of the church, and the co-operation of the home. Its local unions offer an invaluable opportunity to mass the Christian forces of a community, to smite sin, and strengthen every righteous cause. It has been used of God to train and develop individual Christians in testimony and service; to show them how to work together; to reveal the needs of the world; to exalt the church and her work; to deepen our love for our own church; to cast out jealousy of other churches; to increase the spirit of interdenominational fellowship; to promote peace by uniting the young Christians of the world in the bonds of Christian love and service; and to hasten the coming of the day when we shall all be one in the love and service of our common Lord and Master."

MISSIONARY ITEMS.

The following items, culled from the Eighth Annual Report of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, will be of interest to many of our readers:

The work at La Paz, Mexico, has been facilitated by securing larger buildings. Two new points are ready for opening work, and are desirous to have schools for the education of the children. Three pupils have been sent to the missionary schools at Victoria—two boys and one girl. A new monthly meeting has been organized by the name of Catorce Real. Eight new members were received on profession of faith.

Gurney and Elizabeth S. Binford continue their work in Mito, Japan. The new property purchased by the Friends' Mission in Japan has provided them with better accommodations for their many classes. They feel very much the need of a meeting house, and the native church there has commenced to save some money for the purpose of building one sometime. Their meetings are at present held in a private house.

The Indiana Board has, in the last six months, finished repairs and improvements on the building and opened the school for young men at Victoria, Mexico, under George C. Levering as principal. The school takes the name of the Juarez Evangelical Institute. The Mission Home, formerly the mission residence and publishing house in one, has been remodeled inside, painted, electric lighting put in, and other improvements made upon the property to the value of about $500.

The work has changed so much in Douglas Island, Alaska, the Indians seeking new hunting and fishing grounds, that the missionaries must needs follow them if they keep their hold upon them. Accordingly the missionary, Samuel A. Jackson, has, with the help of the Board, provided himself with a little steamboat of 1½-horse-power, with which he plies the waters and visits them in all their outposts, looking after their spiritual welfare, having the assistance of faithful native helpers. But the absence of the Indians from their homes so large a part of every year interferes with the education of their children and retards the work generally. The Kansas Board is investigating the subject of getting the Indians settled and homed in industrial colonies, believing that if this was done it would largely settle the problem of their civilization.

Since the organization of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, in 1892, it has aided the work of other yearly meetings. Now it proposes equipping and supporting a station of its own in Cuba, and to labor in harmony with the work of the A. F. B. F. M., already so happily begun there. The last yearly meeting encouraged the Missionary Board to go forward with the work, and Edgar H. Stranahan was chosen to look over the field. Accordingly he went in First month to that part of the Island of Cuba where Friends' missions are located, and after careful investigation and conference with the missionaries already there, and especially with Zenas L. Martin, he felt it right to recommend that the town of Puerto Padre, on the northeastern coast, in the Province of Santiago, be chosen as the location for the new mission. It is a town of four thousand inhabitants, and is situated fifty miles by sea and thirty by land from the central station at Gibara. It has a fine harbor, and is surrounded by facilities for growth in population and by opportunities for reaching the inhabitants with the Gospel. The yearly meeting is turning its attention to the consideration of ways and means for proceeding in the work, and hopes, if possible, to begin building this fall.

Religion is not a perpetual moping over good books. Religion is not even prayer, praise, holy ordinances—these are necessary to religion—no man can be religious without them. But religion is mainly and chiefly the glorifying of God amid the duties and trials of the world; the guiding of our course amid adverse winds and currents of temptation by the sunlight of duty and the compass of Divine truth, the bearing up manfully, wisely, courageously, for the honor of Christ, our great Leader, in the conflict of life.—John Caird.

No man living in deliberate violation of his duty, in willful disobedience to God's commands, as taught by conscience, can possibly make progress in acquaintance with the Supreme Being. Vain are all acts of worship in church or in secret, vain are religious reading and conversation, without this instant fidelity.—Channing.

Lewis E. Stout will remain in the meeting at Plainfield, Ind., another year.

Martilla Cox, who is located at La Porte, Ind., is planning to attend North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

Alpheus Trueblood, after a much-needed rest, will take up work in the First Friends' Meeting at Marion, Ind., the first of Tenth month.

Professor Samuel Hodgkin, of Oakwood Seminary, N. Y., recently visited the meetings of Farmington Quarter in the interests of the school.

Elwood Scott, who has been located in the First Friends' Meeting at Marion, Ind., is contemplating evangelistic work, and will doubtless enter that field of service in the near future.

We note this week the death of Lowell C., the young son of Rufus M. Jones. This bereavement comes very near THE AMERICAN FRIEND, since it removes the only child of the editor.

Jesse W. Wilmore, who has been located in the meeting at San Diego, Cal., for several months, has purchased a new home in San Jose, and will labor in mission and evangelistic work as the way opens.

A. H. Barker, of Lamong Monthly Meeting, Ind., has been working and visiting in Rose Hill Monthly Meeting, Kansas. The energy of the Spirit was greatly manifest in his work, and his sermons were very helpful.

Joseph John Mills expects to sail for Liverpool on the steamship Haverford, Eighth month 15th. He will be accompanied by his wife, and daughter Gertrude. After spending a few days in England they will proceed to Germany and spend the winter in Berlin.

The meeting at Fort Fairfield, Maine, has been helped much by a series of meetings held by Abigail E. Goddard. On the closing Sabbath Wilbur A. Estes, who has just returned from four years of missionary work in China, was much favored in preaching and in personal testimony.

Charles R. Axton, who has been located in a meeting in Indiana Yearly Meeting, near Amboy, for nearly four years, has arranged to return to Western Yearly Meeting for Christian work. He will go to Darlington, Ind., where they are now erecting a handsome new meeting house.

Levi Rees started with his family to California on the 21st. His health failed him during his very efficient work in Noblesville Meeting. It is hoped that the much-needed rest and the genial climate of California will bring to him a new lease of life, with strength to preach the gospel with his accustomed vigor and clearness.

A. Edward Kelsey and wife have been chosen by the Board of Foreign Missions of New England Yearly Meeting to fill the positions of superintendents of the Boys' and Girls' Training Homes at Ramallah, Jerusalem, Palestine. A. Edward Kelsey for the past four years has been laboring in the meeting at Winthrop, Maine.

Joseph R. Evans and wife, Carrie E. B., tendered a reception Fourth-day evening, the 8th instant, at their home, North Alabama St., Indianapolis, Ind., in honor of Albert J. Brown and his wife, Ada C., who have labored for some time in the meeting at that place, but who will soon leave the city for their new home in Wilmington, O.

The Society of Friends in England recently issued a letter to Christians of all denominations in the United States, which is an earnest testimony against lynching, and an able plea for all men to do what they can to form a public sentiment based on Christian love that would "remove the barbarous cruelties and the lawless injustice of the dark ages."

Farmington Quarterly Meeting, held at Elba, N. Y., the 17th and 18th ult., was a time of spiritual blessing. Much sympathy was expressed, and many prayers were offered on account of those who were prevented from attending from severe illness in their homes. A message of love and sympathy was sent to David Little, who was then ill in Bellevue Hospital, in New York city. The subject considered at the Christian Endeavor Union on Third-day evening was "Practical Spirituality in Christian Endeavor Work." Mina L. Harkness spoke upon the objections to "Questionable and Sensational Ways of Raising Money in Friends' Meetings." At the Bible School Conference on Fourth-day evening the subjects of "Home Department Study" and "Normal Work" claimed the attention of the meeting. Irving Dillingham was appointed superintendent of the work for the coming year. At the quarterly meeting session for business interesting reports from the yearly meeting were given. John D. Piper was appointed superintendent of evangelistic work.

Sand Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at Sand Creek, Bartholomew County, Ind., from the 17th to the 19th inst. Besides the local ministers, the meeting enjoyed the acceptable presence of Achsah Kenyon, from Lowell, Kansas. An unusual interest and power seemed to pervade the various sessions.

The church has sustained a great loss in the death of our young sister, Mary Clark, whose obituary notice appears this week. The loss is most keenly felt in Western Yearly Meeting, where she grew to young womanhood, and was recognized a minister, and in Iowa Yearly Meeting, where she did excellent work in the meeting at Bloomfield, in addition to taking a course in Penn College during the past two years. She numbered among her ancestors members of the Hunt and Welborn families, among which were a number of ministers.

BORN.

FURNAS.—Born, to William Easterling and Emma Doan Furnas, at Valley Mills, Indiana, Sixth month 21st, 1903, a daughter, Phoebe Marion Furnas.

MARRIED.

BARNARD—HARVEY.—At the home of the bride's father, Henry Harvey, near Galena, Kansas, Sixth month 24th, 1903, Herbert F. Barnard and Anna Marilla Harvey.

DIED.

BABCOCK.—At Wakefield, R. I., Seventh month 12th, 1903, Dorcas G. Babcock, daughter of Hezekiah and Dorcas Babcock, in her 88th year. She was a life-long Friend, and lived a Christian life. She was a member of East Greenwich Monthly Meeting of Friends.

CLARK.—At the home of J. Morris Lemmon, near Oskaloosa, Ia., Seventh month 7th, 1903, Anna Mary Clark, aged 25 years. She was a minister, and had been located in the Bloomfield Meeting of Friends since the fall of 1901. She had also been a student in Penn College for the past two years. She was a woman of sterling worth, ardent in her love and unswerving in her loyalty to Christ. The body was taken to her home and relatives in Plainfield, Ind., for interment.

HARVEY.—At Fairmount, Ind., Third month 21st, 1903, Allie Harvey, aged nearly 30 years. She was an active worker in the Sabbath School and meeting.

HAWORTH.—At his home near New London, Ind., Sixth month 9th, 1903, Morris Haworth, aged 77 years. He was a member of New London Monthly Meeting.

JONES.—At the former home of his grandparents (James H. Coutant and wife, both deceased), Ardonia, N. Y., Seventh month 16th, 1903, Lowell Coutant Jones, son of Rufus M. and Sarah H. (Coutant) Jones, in his 11th year.

MILLS.—Near Sheridan, Hamilton County, Ind., Fifth month 16th, 1903, Jesse Mills, in the 73d year of his age. He was a life-long Friend, and an active Christian worker for nearly forty years, and for about twenty-five years a minister.

MILLS.—At her home near Sheridan, Ind., Sixth month 27th, 1903, Mary Mills, wife of Jesse Mills, in her 73d year. She was a birthright member of Friends, and was converted at 40 years of age. The summons came suddenly and found her ready.

PRITCHARD.—Died, at Darlington, Ind., Sixth month 18th, 1903, Francis Pritchard, aged nearly 78 years. He was converted in early life, and was a full believer in the saving power of the Lord Jesus, and died in peace.

TOMLINSON.—Died, at her home, Archdale, N. C., Sixth month 24th, 1903, Martha Stockton Hunt, aged nearly 60 years. She was married to Dr. J. M. Tomlinson in 1859. She occupied a prominent place in the church, being an elder for twenty-five years. Her kindness to the needy about her greatly endeared her to the people.

WHITE.—Died, at Brunswick, N. C., Sixth month 18th, Paul Whittier White, youngest son of Alpheus and Roxie Dixon White, aged 16 months.

WOODARD.—Near Prairie Center, Kan., Seventh month 10th, 1903, Luke Woodard, aged 78 years. The deceased was a member of Prairie Center Monthly Meeting, and died trusting in Jesus.

Events and Comments.

Several earthquake shocks were felt in Salt Lake City, Utah, last week. The disturbance seemed to pass from the southeast to northwest.

The committee appointed to select the site for the new capital of the federated Australian States has recommended Tumut, N. S. W., 264 miles southwest of Sydney. Tumut is situated in a rich agricultural district, and in 1889 had a population of 1,500.

Russian and Chinese officials seem to be disposed to deny any understanding with the United States to the effect that new ports are to be opened to the world's trade in Manchuria, but the United States Government manifests a confident attitude, and will probably insist on the fulfillment of pledges.

It is pleasant to read that Ireland warmed up to King Edward and Queen Alexandra last week, even beyond the welcome given to Queen Victoria. The present king of Great Britain is amiable, a lover of peace, and much disposed to have things run smoothly in all directions. He doubtless means as well by Ireland as any one in his position well could do.

The situation in Bulgaria remains critical, and a revolution may begin at any time. The Hungarian Chamber of Deputies is also in a turmoil, and what is known as the "Austrian crisis" is becoming quite serious. Franz Joseph has threatened abdication, and, unless some terms of reconciliation can be reached, the heterogeneous population composing the Austro-Hungarian monarchy may segregate into a number of independent States.

Germany is progressing rapidly with the substitution of electricity for steam as a motive power. The Prussian state railway took off the last steam locomotive on the line from Berlin to Lichter-felde, recently. If this line works well, electricity is to take the place of steam on all the suburban railroads of the capital. It is in service of this kind, where frequent trains run through a densely populated region, that the discomforts caused by fuel-burning engines are at their worst.

General Jose Manuel Hernandez, who comes to this country to re-establish the Venezuelan legation at Washington, after four years' suspension, has been welcomed quite heartily in New York. He says his country is now at peace, and he expects a long period of quiet, in which he trusts the past will be forgotten. The general began fighting when he was 17;
he is now 50, and in thirty-three years he has fought in more than a dozen rebellions, and ought to be ready for peace.

A contract has been awarded for twenty-two miles of the Cumberland extension connecting the West Virginia Central with the Western Maryland or Wabash federated line to the Degnon-Mc-Lean Contracting Company. This extension represents one of the three sections into which sixty-five miles of work has been divided. It will cost about $1,500,- 000. This expenditure is made necessary because of the decision to obtain as low a grade and as straight a line as possible.
The move is another step of the Gould roads in perfecting their connection with Baltimore.

The death of Pope Leo XIII. on the 20th inst., was the termination of a long life of active service and a protracted struggle with death. An extraordinary constitution, reinforced by every resource of medical skill, drew out the contest almost cruelly. Leo was a man of singularly secluded life, yet in many respects he was exceptionally well known to the world. He filled no temporal throne, yet the world saw few sovereigns who exerted so strong an influence as he and none whose influence was so widespread as his, even in temporal affairs. His career as Pope was marked from first to last with controversy, and conflict, yet his passing causes no crisis, if even a ripple upon the surface of political affairs.

President Roosevelt recently made an important ruling touching the Government Printing Office. It is to the effect that no person shall be discriminated against on account of membership or non-membership in any labor organization. The specific case is that of William A. Miller, who was removed Fifth month 18th from the position of assistant foreman because he had been expelled from the local union of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders.
Miller appealed to the Civil Service Commission on the ground that such removal was in violation of the civil service laws and rules, and that body decided that it did conflict with the provision that "no person shall be removed from a competitive position except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the public service." In his letter to Secretary Cortelyou the President said:
"There is no objection to the employees of the Government Printing Office constituting themselves into a union if they so desire, but no rules or resolutions of that union can be permitted to override

"SUMMER FOOD"

Has Other Advantages.

Many people have tried the food Grape-Nuts simply with the idea of avoiding the trouble of cooking food in the hot months.

All of these have found something besides the ready-cooked food idea. for Grape-Nuts is a scientific food that tones up and restores a sick stomach as well as repairs the waste tissue in brain and nerve centres.

"For two-years I had been a sufferer from catarrh of the stomach, due to improper food, and to relieve this condition I had tried nearly every prepared food on the market without any success until six months ago my wife purchased a box of Grape-Nuts, thinking it would be a desirable cereal for the summer months.

"We soon made a discovery; we were enchanted with the delightful flavor of the food, and to my surprise I began to get well. My breakfast now consists of a little fruit; four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts; a cup of Postum, which I prefer to coffee; graham bread or toast and two boiled eggs. I never suffer the least distress after eating this, and my stomach is perfect and general health fine. Grape-Nuts is a wonderful preparation. It was only a little time after starting on it that wife and I both felt younger, more vigorous, and in all ways stronger. This has been our experience.

"P. S. The addition of a little salt in place of sugar seems to me to improve the food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SUMMER TOUR TO THE NORTH.

Vacation Trip to Canada via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Pennsylvania Railroad personally-conducted tour to Northern New York and Canada, leaving August 12th, covers many prominent points of interest to the summer tourist—Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, Rapids of the St. Lawrence, Quebec, The Saguenay, Montreal, Au Sable Chasm, Lakes Champlain and George, and Saratoga. The tour covers a period of fifteen days; round-trip rate, $125.

The party will be in charge of one of the company's tourist agents, assisted by an experienced lady as chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies.

The rate covers railway and boat fare for the entire round trip, parlor-car seats, meals en route, hotel entertainment, transfer charges, and carriage hire.

For detailed itinerary, tickets, or any additional information, apply to Ticket Agents, Tourist Agent, 263 Fifth Avenue, New York, or address George W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

JOHNNIE BOUNDS GEORGIA.

A schoolroom experience that many may recall is pictured thus in the "National Magazine."

"Johnnie Adams," said the teacher, taking up the book, "you may bound Georgia."

"Georgia bounded on the north by—Georgia bounded on the north by—"

"Tennessee," shrilly whispered Abel Hancock, behind his back.

"Tennessee," boldly said Johnnie, with an assurance born of Abel's knowledge.

"Go on," said the teacher.

"On the east by—by—," looking at Abel expectantly.

A long whisper announced "Atlanti Goshen."

"Atlanti Goshen," said Johnnie.

"That is right, so far as it goes, but it is not all of the eastern boundary."

Johnnie kicked Abel in token that a further instalment of the lesson was extremely necessary, but Abel failed him. He had come to the end of his knowledge. Repeated kicks delivered by the despairing urchin failing to elicit any response, Johnnie said, with an air of one floundering in deep water, "Mizzoury."

"Misery," I should say, certainly," said the teacher. "Johnnie, you need not bound Georgia farther."

"I've just been reading some statistics of births and deaths. Extraordinary thing! Every time I breathe a man dies!"

"Whew! Why don't you chew cloves?"—"London Judy."

TOUR TO THE PACIFIC COAST.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account G. A. R. National Encampment.

On account of the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at San Francisco, Cal., August 17th to 22d, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company offers a personally-conducted tour to the Pacific Coast at remarkably low rates.

Tour will leave New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other points on the Pennsylvania Railroad east of Pittsburg, Thursday, August 6th, by special train of the highest grade Pullman equipment. An entire day will be spent at the Grand Canyon of Arizona, two days at Los Angeles, and visits of a half day or more at Pasadena, Santa Barbara, Del Monte, and San Jose. Three days will be spent in San Francisco during the encampment. A day will be spent in Portland on the return trip, and a complete tour of the Yellowstone Park, covering six days, returning directly to destination via Billings and Chicago, and arriving Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York August 31st.

Round-trip rate, covering all expenses for twenty-six days, except three days spent in San Francisco, $215; two in one berth, $200 each.

Round-trip rate, covering all expenses to Los Angeles, including transportation, meals in dining car, and visits to Grand Canyon and Pasadena, and transportation only through California and returning to the east by October 15th, via any direct route, including authorized stop-overs, $115; two in one berth, $105 each. Returning via Portland $11 additional will be charged.

Rates from Pittsburg will be five dollars less in each case.

For full information apply to Ticket Agents, or George W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE COMPLEMENT OF STEWARDSHIP.

PETER's exhortation that we be "good stewards of the manifold grace of God" assumes a fact that revelation and nature combine to proclaim—that we are not independent proprietors of ourselves, or of our so-called possessions, but that life and opportunity are to be accounted for as things received in trust.

What, in brief, do we hold? Inanimate nature and the lower orders of life are said to glorify their Creator, "fulfilling His word"; yet they have evidently no moral quality, nor, so far as we can discern, any spiritual use, except in their relations to man. All that preceded man in the creation was put under his dominion, that thereby he might achieve an ascendancy and so develop in the likeness and image of his Maker. Social and family relations are among the most precious of our privileges. Spiritual capacity is our distinctive endowment, calling in turn for the giving of that surpassing gift—the Son of God, bringing salvation to all who receive Him.

Here is in the aggregate a vast bestowment of wealth, a munificent capitalization; and God, who held all in His hands, found for these riches their best and highest use in committing them to us as His stewards. Of not one of these gifts do we know enough to make a final appraisal. New sources of wealth, new knowledge of scientific laws, new reaches into space, and disclosures among the elements that compose matter continue to stimulate the mind of man to search out the thoughts of God that were wrought into the material world. A right and effective working basis for human society is hardly discovered as yet; or, if discovered, has not found general acceptance. The unsearchable riches of Christ have certainly not been sounded to their depths.

May we not venture to estimate from such dealings His reckoning as to the qualifications and capacities of the human race? When He had completed His creative work He said of all that He had made that it was "very good." But it was to a fallen and sinful race, after generations of shortcomings and failure, that He gave the supreme gift. This is described indeed as the gift of His love. Love is named as the pre-eminent characteristic of God, yet there is manifest in these transactions a divine spirit of adventure and unfailing hopefulness that bespeaks a confidence of God in the ultimate results when the stewardship shall be surrendered up. He has said that His word shall not return unto Him void, and that the Messiah shall look upon the rewards of His labors and be satisfied. God is wise as well as loving, and we may reverently think of Him as prudently laying out His wealth that at the end He may receive His own with increase.

Such conclusions may suggest the necessity of more being done than now is if such a consummation is to be attained. The facts certainly suggest that more might be done. It is not a lack of equipment, but of holy enterprise; it is a lowering of the expectations to small returns that have made the harvests of the Church disproportionately small in comparison with its endowment and its abilities.

While we thus magnify our calling, we cannot fail to remember that always apart from the renewal of life in Christ Jesus, and the guidance of the Holy Spirit, these wonderful treasures have been corrupted to the greater condemnation of those who have received them. But acknowledging Him as Lord, we may well enlarge our expectations, believing that One who so bountifully endows His stewards, wills to achieve through them results commensurate with such bestowments.

L. D. C.

THE NATURAL FACE IN A GLASS.

Most of us see ourselves in a looking-glass at least three times a day, and yet probably no one who reads these words can remember how he looks. We can "call up" faces which we have not seen for years. Children who played with us at school are pictured in our imagination. But the face which we saw an hour ago in our looking-glass will not come up at our will. We can not visualize it. It looks familiar when we see it gazing back at us in the glass, but as soon as we go our way we straightway forget what manner of man we saw there.

This interesting fact impressed a Jerusalem saint in the first century, and he took it to illustrate a great moral and religious truth. This fleeting face back of the looking-glass, this lost copy of ourselves, is a fit symbol of an unused truth. He that heareth the word and doeth it not is like a man who sees his face in a glass and then forgets how he looked (James I.). This truth needs to be underscored at this particular time of year.

Resolutions are like the "heard word," empty until they are turned into deed. They can never be depended upon until they are woven into action. But each time we do the truth, each time we carry out the resolution, we build it into the system of our lives, we scar it into the body, we make it a permanent acquisition, and give it a place among our habitual instincts. Never trust a resolution that has never been turned into action; never count a truth which is merely "held" and not expressed in the activities of life. They will be like the looking-glass face. There is nothing to remember them by. How many a Christian can tell what he really believes! How many a Christian is hazy on the most important points of the faith! They are as vague and shadowy as his own natural face, which he has seen in a glass but cannot visualize.

The real trouble with such persons is that they are trying to "hold" truth without using it, trying to keep the faith without fighting the good fight by means of it. Ask the athlete how he learned his skill and agility. Will he say, by hearing lectures on athletics, or reading books? Not at all. He will say, "By drilling myself in practice." So, also, we must make truth our own by turning it into Christian life and victorious character. So, also, we must make our resolutions count by making them actual deeds and habitual tendencies. Such a man builds his house on a rock and is safe in the storm which demolishes untried resolutions, and plays havoc with the man whose truth is only hearsay truth.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EARLY QUAKERISM AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN.

III.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF EARLY QUAKERISM. THE ESSENTIALS OF AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

Before discussing the features that characterize the beginnings of Quakerism as they tend to evince the true evangelical character of the movement it is necessary to have clearly in mind the elements which must be present in any movement that rightfully claims to be evangelical. The history and growth of the Christian church has been marked at intervals by great revivals which all authorities recognize as true evangelical movements. Of these, three may be mentioned as typifying the essentials of such work in three different periods of church history, the work of the apostles in the first century, the revival under Wesley and Whitefield in the eighteenth century, and the evangelistic work of D. L. Moody in the last generation. From a comparative study of these three evangelical movements the following features may be noted as the elements which made these movements what they were, and without which they could lay no claim to being evangelical: 1. The evangelical belief, by which is meant in brief, a deep sense of sin in its awfulness as being present with and in every man, and a conception of the gospel of Christ as that which transforms the life of the person who repents and believes. 2. The evangelical individual, or, to use different phraseology, the person or persons who are so thoroughly endued with the evangelical belief that their whole life is given up to its promulgation. 3. Evangelical activities, including every method which would serve to bring the belief through these individuals to the people. Besides these three elements there is to be noted also the growth of these movements, which may be classed as the result of the three foregoing elements rather than as one of the elements themselves. For this reason it will be treated under a separate head instead of under the present division.

The presence of these three elements in the movements mentioned above is evident to all who are familiar with religious history, and so, with these self-evident facts in mind as a basis, attention is called to the question in hand—were these elements present in the early history of the Friends? If they were, early Quakerism may be regarded as an evangelical movement, if not, Quakerism can lay no claim to such a title.

(1.) Evangelical Belief.

In the discussion of this, as well as other characteristics of the early Quakers, recourse is had to what these people said and did, rather than to any dogmatic statement of their beliefs, or theories as to how they should have acted in view of their belief.

The two fundamental doctrinal positions of the Friends have already been stated in a previous section. It might seem to some that the doctrine of the Universality of Light Within would have led to practically the position of the Universalists, in reference to the salvation of all men. This was not the practical working out of their position, however, for they held at the same time a deep sense of sin as the power which smothered the Inner Light, and kept the soul separate from God. With this belief went the Gospel message that through Christ men could be saved from sin and brought into fellowship with God.

That this was substantially the position of the early Friends may be inferred by the following incidents taken from the life of Fox. The first occurred when he was twenty-one years of age, and is his own account of an explanation of the death of Christ which he gave to a priest named Stevens. He says,*

* "Barclay's Commonwealth," p. 303.

"This priest Stevens asked a question viz. Why Christ cried out upon the cross, 'My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?' and why He said, 'If it be possible let this cup pass from me; yet not my will but thine be done'? I told him at that time the sins of all mankind were upon Him, and their iniquities and transgressions, with which He was wounded, which He was to bear, and be an offering for, as He was man, but died not as He was God. So that He died for all men, tasting death for every man, He was offered for the sins of the whole world." Again in a tract entitled "A Testimony Concerning Justification, etc.," he uses the following expressions. "God justifies the ungodly in the faith which gives the victory over the ungodliness . . . Christ died for the ungodly . . . and takes away their sins, etc."

These are but two of a great number of sayings of Fox which substantiate the same position. The belief of Fox was the belief of those who worked with him as the literature concerning the Friends, written by those without as well as within their ranks gives abundant illustration. * "Repent, repent, for the mighty terrible day of the Lord God of power is appearing, wherein no worker of iniquity shall stand before Him . . . and if ye repent and turn to Him he will abundantly pardon." This was the message which fell from the lips of the early Friends as they went up and down the country.

There can be not the slightest doubt, as these things testify, that so far as belief was concerned the Friends were in harmony with the great revival activities of the history of the Church. They believed in sin as that which separated all men from God; they believed in the Christian gospel through which, and through which alone, mankind could return to God and be at peace. Therefore this belief could be called evangelical.

(2.) Evangelical Individual.

For a second characteristic of the early history of the Friends, an examination must be made of the spirit of the people. Was the early Quaker evangelical? The apostles, leaders of the first great revival in the Church, showed absolute consecration to the one great purpose of their life, spreading the gospel story. Wesley and Moody showed a similar spirit, although the hardships which they met could not be compared to the sufferings of the apostles. They all, because so thoroughly endued with the evangelical belief and so absolutely consecrated to its promulgation, are regarded as evangelical men. The same spirit was revealed in a most marked degree by the early Quakers, and to them therefore, as well as to others, rightfully belongs the appellation evangelical. The evidence of this is overwhelming. Their early letters, their journals, their histories are full of facts which point to the intensest sort of zeal in the promulgation of their belief. Owing to the religious situation which, as has been shown, was marked by an almost entire absence of true spiritual life, the Quakers, who were conscious of the fact that they possessed the true essence of religion, believed that everyone else was out of communion with God. Therefore their message was to all men, to the poor and to the rich, to rulers and those ruled, to their own countrymen and to those beyond the seas, to the so-called religious bodies of people, and to those who professed belief in no sect whatever.

The record of their method of work gives perhaps the best proof of this evangelical spirit, but inasmuch as our somewhat arbitrary division calls for that under the next point, we will limit ourselves to some other considerations here.

The life of Fox from the time that he received what he designates as "openings" or revelations of the truth, became, as has been said, an itinerant ministry. The spirit which he thus manifested in leaving all opportunity of gaining a livelihood for the sake of passing on his "openings" to others was the same spirit which showed itself in thousands of his followers. It became the ruling spirit of the movement. The sheriff, convinced of the truth of the doctrine Fox preached, is moved to * "go into the market and preach repentance to the people." The trooper, converted † "began to speak boldly in his quarters amongst the soldiers and to others concerning the truth." Thus the fire which burned so intensely within the heart of the man who founded Quakerism spread to the lives of those who heard him, and from them to others.

When imprisoned at Derby ‡ "he (Fox) was under a great exercise and travail in spirit because of the wickedness of that town . . . and he, seeing the visitation of God's love pass away from them, mourned." Thus was the man burdened for the souls of the people and chafed under restraint when prevented from delivering his message. His imprisonments and persecutions produced no effect upon him whatever except that, if possible, when liberated he preached the more earnestly. Any thing could be endured, and that joyfully, if only the gospel might be spread more widely. Three thousand one hundred and seventy-three Friends were imprisoned for the sake of their religion prior to the Restoration, but the confinement served, so far as can be learned, only to intensify their zeal, and their release meant the taking up again of the gospel message which temporarily they were forced to lay aside. To become a follower of Fox meant in a great many instances ostracism from the circle of society with which they had associated, but banishment served only to intensify the effort to convert those who had removed them from their companionship. They were driven from their meeting-houses, but the expulsion brought them necessarily into contact with more people outside than they could reach within, and their numbers increased rather than diminished. Many were brought to the scaffold, but even here the spirit of the martyrs was revealed, and in their death they hoped and prayed that some hearts might be reached.

Thus the giving up on the part of many of the usual vocations of life for the sake of the truth, the patient endurance of all kinds of persecution, from criticism and ostracism to the loss of life itself, reveals an intensity of evangelical zeal which it may truthfully be said equals the spirit of the apostles themselves.

(3.) Evangelical Activities—First, Preaching; Second, Writing.

After considering the belief and the spirit of the early Friends, it remains to show how these evangelical individuals brought their evangelical message to the people. The discussion of the methods used by Fox and his followers will naturally concern itself more especially with early Quakerism as a movement, rather than with its general evangelical character. When, however, it is kept clearly in mind that everything which they did in the line of religious work was done in order to impart the message of Quakerism to the people a discussion of the methods of their activity, and also of the growth of the movement will serve to intensify the conception of Quakerism as evangelical in character.

When the methods of early Quakerism are under consideration it is necessary to keep clearly in mind the fact that new members were not obtained by "birthright membership." In his "Apology" (pages 260f) Barclay makes this point very clear. "To be a member of a particular church of Christ, as this inward work is indispensably necessary, so is also the outward profession of and belief in Jesus Christ." In deprecation he goes on to describe how the Church of the first centuries gradually drifted away from this idea. "For, after that the princes of the earth come to take upon them that profession and that it ceased to be a reproach to be a Christian, but rather became a means of preferment, men became such by birth and education, and not by conversion and renovation of spirit." This conception of the true Church agreed with the view of George Fox, as will be seen by the following quotation: * "The Church is the pillar and ground of truth, made up of living members, a separate household which Christ is the head of; but He is not the head of a mixed multitude. . . ." This position in reference to church membership is further confirmed by a statement taken from Yearly Meeting minutes of the year 1676. Membership is defined thus: "All the faithful men and women in every country, city and nation, whose faith stands in the power of God, the Gospel of Christ, and have received this Gospel, and are in possession of this Gospel, the power of God . . . they have a right to the power of the meeting (i. e., of the particular meeting), for they be heirs of the power and authority of the men and women's meeting."

From these statements it is evident that the Society was one formed and governed supremely for spiritual purposes and that a spiritual change within the life was necessary on the part of every one who became a member.

Exclusive of the spirit which was shown by these people, of which mention has already been made, it may be said in general that the early Friends reached the hearts of the people in one or both of two ways: viz., by the spoken and written word. Preaching and writing were the two means by which these zealous people proclaimed their evangelical belief to the world.

PREACHING TO WIN SOULS.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

"How far do your chief American preachers aim at the conversion of souls?" This question, once addressed to me by that master-workman, Charles H. Spurgeon, is pertinent yet; it showed his estimate of the highest purpose of the Christian ministry. Certainly, the chief aim of our Divine Master was to seek and to save the lost; His first text of which we read was the word "repent!" To win souls to Jesus Christ by the aid of the Holy Spirit was the main purpose of the apostles. Paul struck the keynote when he declared that he was determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified; and he ceased not to warn sinners night and day with tears. The great Reformation in the sixteenth century was far more than a protest against prevailing errors; it was a direct bringing of souls to the Lord Jesus Christ. When a spiritual famine prevailed in Great Britain, the Wesleys and Whitefields rose at once to the demand of the times; they addressed their fellow-countrymen as exposed to the "wrath to come," and their one aim was to lead souls to the only Saviour. Out of these wise labors grew the mighty Methodist Church, with its world-wide labors and philanthropies.

The question which my beloved British brother addressed to me is pertinent to every minister of the Gospel: "How far do you aim mainly at the conversion of souls?" No minister is likely to succeed in what he undertakes with only half a heart; certainly he can never do what he never even attempts to do. If your whole heart is not bent on the glorious work of converting sinners by the help of God, you will never accomplish it. You may produce many able discourses freighted with valuable thought; you may wax eloquent over social evils and plead for reformatory measures and philanthropies; you may say many good things, and true things, and helpful things; but if you stop short of leading immortal souls to Christ, your ministry in one vital point will be a failure. There is much talk about "saving the masses"; but people are not saved in the mass; they must be reached and persuaded Christward one by one. Men may go to perdition by the regiment; they must be led to Jesus individually. A single soul was audience enough for the Master at the well of Sychar, and in the "inquiry-room" of Nicodemus.

Aim, therefore, to make your preaching pointed and individualizing. You are not to be a pulpit scold; but you may so present God's truth pungently and lovingly that every unconverted person in your audience may be made to feel "that means me." "Thou art the man," sent Nathan's arrow into David's heart. Pray God to help you love every sinner before you so fervently that you will tell him plainly that if he does not repent of his sins, and accept and obey Jesus Christ, he will be lost forever! Don't be afraid of the word "hell" any more than of the word "heaven." The too common assertion that the faithful, tender and solemn presentation of the divinely revealed retributions of sin is an attempt to "scare people into religion" is utterly preposterous. As the ambassadors of Jesus Christ it is our bounden duty to "declare the whole counsel of God," and we have no right to conceal or to belittle any great revealed truth. It is criminal cruelty to conceal from the transgressors of God's law and of God's love that the "wages of sin is death."

There is much truth in Gladstone's weighty declaration that "the decay of the sense of sin against God is one of the most serious portents of these days." Preach, therefore, my brother, most plainly and lovingly the guilt and the doom of sin, and pray that every impenitent soul before you may be convicted by the Holy Spirit. Nobody is likely to flee to the Lord Jesus Christ until he or she feels the need of Him. Deep convictions of sin usually produce deep conversions; shallow convictions produce shallow conversions and half-way Christians. Go down to the roots. When you have made a sinner see himself, then point him to the all-sufficient Redeemer whose atoning blood cleanseth from all sin. This was Peter's style of preaching at the time of Pentecost, when three thousand souls were convicted and converted in a single day. When you are preaching repentance you cannot be too pungent; when you are offering salvation through the Lord Jesus you cannot be too winsome and beseeching.

It goes without saying that only a part of the work of soul-winning is likely to be done by preaching. Much of it is to be done by personal interviews. Seize opportunities. Keep your doors open to all who desire to converse with you. Ever be on the alert to discover those who are anxious about their soul's welfare, and you will rejoice to converse with them, and to urge an immediate acceptance of Christ. Once when during my afternoon visits I discovered three or four inquirers, I summoned my church officers, and special services were appointed every evening. They resulted in the conversion of nearly an hundred persons. Watch for the presence of the Holy Spirit! Listen for the first drops of the blessing; and then gird yourself for the happy work. There is no ecstasy this side of heaven comparable to that of winning souls to a new life and to the life everlasting. "It is my heaven on earth," said Samuel Rutherford, "to spend my days in gathering in some souls to Christ."

I hear some people talk about "modern methods" of evangelization; but I have not yet discovered any improvements on the methods of Paul and of Peter, of Wesley and of Whitefield, of Spurgeon and of Moody. We have not yet outgrown the Bible, or the need of the Spirit, or the power of prayer. God never means that this world shall advance a single inch beyond the Cross of Calvary. Plant yourself beside that Cross! Preach Jesus Christ right there, and He will "draw all men unto Him." This method of soul-winning is no more obsolete than yonder sun blazing in the mid-heavens.

FRUITS.

The first thing that Servia does after a whirlwind of murder, in which orgy of blood statesmen and diplomats joined red-handed, is to proclaim to the world that she has established a free State with a hereditary chief executive; and the next thing Servia will do will be to establish a personal despotism with a sword laid across, and taking the place of, her constitution. The greatest fool in the world ought to know by this time that one cannot "constitute a republic" by a convention. Republics are not made; they grow.

Every State in South and Central America boasts a constitution "modeled after that of the United States"; but no one of them exhibits a life from which alone a real republic may be formed. Our neighbors of Ecuador will borrow even our fashion-plates; but the one thing they cannot imitate is the life that makes a republic possible. It is almost as easy for a certain type of reformers to write "liberty, equality, fraternity," as it is for them to cut the throat of any man who differs from them. The freedom and peace of our country spring from the life of its people; the life of the people is not derived from our civil institutions.

The best things in the world are fruits, not finds. They are results which have behind them adequate causes. The great wealth of this continent is not its gold or its silver, but its harvests. Beside what we raise what we discover is a mere pittance. The best things are vital. They grow. They bud and blossom and mature. They are due to living processes whose secret is with the Almighty. The only way to possess the fruit is to possess the life. The only way to possess freedom as a State is to possess the character from which freedom is a natural product, a normal fruit, a vital result.

All of this is just as true in the sphere of religion. The only way to possess the fruits of Christianity, "love, joy, peace," is to possess the life to which "love, joy, peace" are native. Neither education nor art can do more than mold and color an imitation of that which owes its being to the vitalizing power of faith. "An altruistic philosophy" has so far proved itself as sterile as a belief in Jesus has shown itself everywhere prolific. The world looks with envious eye upon the happiness of the believer and attempts to secure it by institutions. Happiness does not come from environment, but from life. The Master and His inspired disciples taught us that faith is a vital thing. It transfuses, suffuses, infuses. Unbelief may imitate its results, but not duplicate them. Root and fruit are inseparable in the divine economy. Whosoever covets the joy of the believer, the peace of the believer, the divine patience of the saint, must, to possess what he covets, possess the faith from which they all spring; that faith which establishes a vital union with the source of all divine life and everything which is most worthy to possess.—"The Interior."

DR. JOSEPH J. COX.

Friends in North Carolina have lost one of their most useful and beloved members on account of the death of Dr. Joseph J. Cox, of High Point. His life was lived close to the pattern of his Master, and was therefore beautiful in its simplicity and strong in its purity. Such an example of Christian manhood is a constant power for the Church and needs to be made known for its helpfulness to young people throughout our branch of the Church.

Dr. Cox was a descendant of distinguished ancestors on both sides. His father, Jonathan E. Cox, was for many years superintendent of Friends' School at New Garden, and his beloved wife, Elizabeth (Hare), was matron, both serving the school and the yearly meeting with marked devotion and self-sacrifice.

Joseph J. Cox was the second child of Jonathan E. and Elizabeth Cox, and was born in Northampton County in 1845. He was educated at New Garden Boarding School under the thoughtful religious care of his parents, and as a student was distinguished for his diligence in study, sterling integrity of character, for great kindness and rare modesty and purity of life. These traits that marked his youth, by Christian grace through faith, were developed and strengthened from year to year in his subsequent life, until in business, in church affairs and in family life, he was known as a man of wide sympathies, of remarkable strength and symmetry of character, tender-heartedness, and of rarest modesty of pretension.

As a physician he was successful and greatly beloved, administering to physical and spiritual needs. On account of the strain on his bodily strength he gave up, in latter years, the practice of medicine and engaged with energy and much ability in manufacturing furniture in High Point. He served the city also for many years with great acceptance and fidelity as mayor. This office he held at the time of his death.

Dr. Cox had for about twenty years served as a trustee of Guilford College, and had recently been elected chairman of the board. He was of great usefulness as trustee; had at heart the deepest interest in the growth and development of the college; subscribed to its endowment, and in every way sought to promote its influence for good in North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

Every one who ever came in contact with the kindly spirit of Dr. Cox was drawn to him, and no one in the course of his faithful service in the church or in the affairs of business ever witnessed the least unfairness or any rashness of word or judgment. His life clearly illustrated the truth of the scripture: "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."

There can be no abiding power until that day comes when we keep our conduct abreast of our profession; there must be something back of our profession; that something is a consistent life. It is a beautiful thing to hear one who is gifted in speech and in prayer in the prayer meeting, but I am persuaded that there is something far more beautiful, and that is, for one to be able from Monday morning until Sabbath night to live Christ. Here is a power infidelity cannot assail nor unbelief deny.—J. Wilbur Chapman.

Blessed is the man who keeps himself adjusted to Divine opportunities.

The International Lesson.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON VII.

EIGHTH MONTH 16, 1903.

SAUL TRIES TO KILL DAVID.

1 Samuel 18: 5-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.—Ps. 46: 1.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 10.—David and Jonathan. 1 Sam. 18: 1-4.
Third-day, Eighth mo. 11.—Saul tries to kill David. 1 Sam. 18: 5-16.
Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 12.—Jonathan saves David. 1 Sam. 19: 1-7.
Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 13.—The godly delivered. Psalm 4.
Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 14.—Design of afflictions. Heb. 12: 1-11.
Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 15.—Patience in affliction. Jas. 1: 1-12.
First-day, Eighth mo. 16.—Conquerors. Rom. 8: 35-39.

The time of the present lesson is soon after that of the last lesson. The intervening verses tell of the intimate friendship which sprung up between Saul's son Jonathan and David. Jonathan was probably about 35, David 23, and Saul about 53. He had been king perhaps fifteen years. Saul's residence was at Gibeah, about five miles north of Jerusalem. The first four verses which precede the lesson should be read. The friendship of David and Jonathan is the first instance of the kind mentioned in the Bible. There are several instances in classical literature, as Achilles and Patroclus, Damon and Pythias. Jonathan gave David his own robes and armor. Such a gift was a great mark of favor as well as of the closest friendship. Compare Esther 6: 8, 9. Of the character of this friendship see 2 Sam. 1: 26.

5. "Went out." From what follows it would be inferred that military expeditions are meant. "Behaved himself wisely." The word implies that he was so prudent in his behavior that he was successful in what he undertook. "Over the men of war." Perhaps in a position equivalent to a modern general. "He was accepted." "It was good in the sight of." Revised Version. All recognized that the promotion was fitting and deserved.

6. "The Philistine." Not Goliath, but the Philistines, against whom David had doubtless led an attack. "The women." The dancing women come out, etc. This custom is still observed among the Arabs. Compare also Ex. 15: 20, 21; Jud. 11: 34; Ps. 68: 25; 149: 3. "Tabrets." Timbrels, which resembled the modern tamborine. "Singing and dancing." They sang as they danced and danced as they sang; the two were carried on together. "Instruments of music." Either triangles or some three-stringed instrument.

7. "And the women sang one to another in their play." They sang antiphonally, one group singing one line, and another group the next, and so on. Many, if not most, of the Psalms were sung in this way. Here one set would say, "Saul hath slain his thousands," while the others would answer, "David his ten thousands." It is likely that this was the chorus of an old national song with the names changed. Compare 1 Sam. 21: 11; 29: 5.

8. "Saul was very wroth." This was very natural. An eastern monarch is proverbially jealous. It was a legitimate conclusion to say, "What can he have more but the kingdom?" Probably Saul was looking out for the successor foretold by Samuel. Compare 1 Kings 2: 22.

9. "Saul kept his eye on David from that day onward in suspicion and dislike."

10. "On the morrow." The day after the women's song. "An evil spirit from God." This was a return of his mental disorder. See 1 Sam. 16: 14, 15. In the language of the time both good and evil were said to be from the Lord, when we should more likely say, "He sent the good and allowed the evil." "Propheesied." The word does not necessarily have the meaning of "foretelling." "Prophecy" here means "an ecstatic condition due to supernatural influence, good or evil," the result, if good, being the expression of religious feeling; if evil, something akin to madness, as here. "And David played with his hand, as he did day by day. And Saul had his spear in his hand; (11) and Saul cast the spear," etc. American Revised Version. This version makes the narrative clearer. Compare 1 Sam. 19: 9, 10, of which these verses seem to be a repetition. The narrative would read more smoothly if verses 10, 11, were omitted. Saul's madness, also, seems to belong to a later period. The verses 9-11, moreover, are not found in the Septuagint. "Avoided." An old use of the word, meaning "withdrew" or "escaped."

12. "Was afraid." This was natural. He seems to have recognized that the power of the Lord was with David.

13. "Removed him." He thought it would be more politic to have David at a distance. "Captain over a thousand." This would probably make him governor over a town, and put him in a post of honor which would please the people, and also put him in a place of danger where he might be killed, and thus be put out of the way.

14. The result of Saul's policy reacted on himself, for "David behaved himself wisely in all his ways," and, moreover, "the Lord was with him." Compare the case of Joseph, Gen. 39: 2.

15. When Saul saw this his fear of David became greater. Literally "he stood in awe of him."

16. Note the contrast brought out in this verse. While Saul feared David more and more, the people "loved David." "He went out and came in before them." He lived in full view. He was their general in the attacks upon their enemies. He was their defender, and behaving himself "wisely" he recommended himself to their affection and confidence in every way.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Duty well done always has its reward.
2. Jealousy is one of the worst passions; indulged in it leads to evil thoughts and often to crime; always to unhappiness.

LESSONS FROM PAUL: HOW TO USE TACT IN DEALING WITH MEN.

Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 15.—Conscientiousness. Rom. 14: 19-23.

"The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong." In the equipment of Him who is our pattern the spirit of might is supplemented by the spirit of counsel. The Pharisees who had their plots to entrap Him so well laid, as they thought, were over and again made to solve their own difficulties, until "no man durst to ask Him any more questions." Yet He spoke with "words of grace."

One may be overwhelmed with arguments, but no intellectual cudgeling has ever been sufficient to make of the defeated man a champion for the side of the victor. If absolute right and duty were the dominant influences, men would best be won by demonstrations such as logic or mathematics afford; but while God never separates justice from mercy, nor truth from love, the gentler attributes are the ones that have given tone to all His dealings with the race. Puritanism presented a type of character admirable in many ways, but failing in the spirit of counsel which springs from love. Phariseeism failed altogether, not because it lacked outward excellencies, but, flaunting them unlovingly in the faces of assumed inferiors, it made even the forms of righteousness repellant.

Tact, in its bald, root sense, means touch; it involves the idea of getting near together, and to that end the Christian may use every right means, which does not include the sacrifice of principle, even for a little time. It calls for a continuous watch lest non-essentials grow to essentials—the incident to the main point. Tact leads to contact by removing the barriers of superfluity, as when Paul discarded Judaism and Grecian philosophy, knowing nothing but Christ and Him crucified; or as when modern missionaries meet to determine on a basis of essential doctrines and the elimination of distracting sectarian tenets. The residuum of truth in each case is the one universal appeal that has ever been uttered—the expression of the love of the Creator for every creature, the proffered satisfaction of a universal need; so that it might almost be said that the bearer of that message has the key to every heart.

The element of sincerity cannot be overlooked. "In vain is the net spread in the eyes of any bird." Paul's becoming as a Jew to one and as a Gentile to another was genuine, for, including all under the one law, he knew the need of each and the remedy for each by his own experience; and it was his genuineness that brought him success in what would otherwise have been disastrous failure.

MISSIONARY QUALIFICATIONS.

[Dear Friend:—I clip the accompanying letter from "The London Friend" of Seventh month 10th, 1903. Feeling, as I do, great sympathy with its message, I hope it may be of help to some upon whom the responsibility for Friends' missions now rests. In pleading for a better literary preparation for service abroad I heard a Japanese missionary say: "If one come to us knowing nothing of our Bible, of Shakespeare, Milton or Tennyson, can they make us understand their message as they would if they could illustrate their meaning from such sources? The missionary cannot afford to place himself in the ignorant class, especially where such veneration is paid to classical learning as in the East." As to etiquette, he said, "Could we easily listen to a religious teacher who put his muddy boots on our center table, or who sat on the piano? So our careless Western ways seem to the Orientals. The greatest missionaries have most scrupulously fulfilled the requirements of their etiquette."

Sincerely thy friend,

CAROLINA M. WOOD.]

Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

Several times I have seen certain qualifications for a missionary life specified and emphasized, and while those qualifications set forth were very good, I was struck with the fact that theology was not mentioned. After nearly fourteen years in the mission field I venture to predict that a thorough knowledge of the great mass of facts and information dealt with by theology is necessary for the missionary who would be successful. A clear call from God, absolute surrender to God's will, strong faith in Christ, and the filling of the Holy Ghost are essentials about which there is no question. But they are not all.

A young man offers for the mission field. He has had an ordinary education, probably considerable experience and success in Christian work. He is accepted and sent forth. The time of study with grammars and dictionaries and a difficult language tests him. The plodding at the language may blunt his enthusiasm, and perhaps waves of discouragement begin to make themselves felt. It is then and at such times afterwards that the certainty of a clear call from God to the work helps to dispel the dark clouds.

The missionary gets to the stage he has so longed for, viz., knowledge of the language to enable him to tell the great message of God's love. In the homelands the missionary's experience was probably in pressing upon nominally Christian people to accept the Saviour. In the mission field the people, in beliefs, history and reasoning, are so very different from anything he has had to do with previously as to be utterly perplexing. Perhaps, after many an earnest talk which seemed utterly to miss the mark, the missionary begins to think, how is it I make no impression? How is it I do not get in touch with the people? He has now arrived at the stage where experience will teach him that he cannot win the world for Christ so quietly or so easily as he imagined, and it will be well if he can escape from his gloomy thoughts without despair and a sense of utter failure settling down on his soul. Honestly facing the situation, it is discovered that there is very much to learn about the people and their history, as well as their inner thoughts, before he can present the Gospel in an effective manner.

Suppose the missionary has to deal with Mohammedans or Druses, he will find a number of questions have to be met and answered that will tax his ability and tact to the uttermost. The divinity and atonement of Christ, the two pillars of the New Testament, are nothing short of blasphemy to either of the above sects. The missionary will discover that to deal with these doctrinal and Biblical questions he will require to know systematic theology, comparative theology, apologetics, Christian evidences, and history, and he will probably have to do what should have been done before coming to the mission field, viz., master the above studies. Mohammedans and Druses have zeal and enthusiasm and a devotion to the religions of their forefathers that can equal the most out-and-out Christians. Therefore appeals to them must be such as touch their intellects, and remove their religious difficulties and prejudices to the religion of Jesus. Only the Holy Spirit can win the hearts and minds of men, but we must recognize that, other things being equal, God can and does make most use of those instruments which are most fully equipped.

I should hope the time is not far distant when it will be possible to get in our Society such a training as I have indicated. I am sure there are not a few Friends who are able to give us in an acceptable form all that is best in theology.

Those who omit to deal with the mental qualifications of the missionary and his ability to deal successfully with the great objections of non-Christian religions to Christianity are overlooking a vital point. If a man like Dr. Fairbairn found himself "perplexed" (as he frankly admits in his preface to "The Philosophy of the Christian Religion") when he had to face Hinduism in India, what must be the perplexities and difficulties of ordinary missionaries? Ours are not the difficulties that arise from doubt or want of faith, but how to deal successfully with gigantic errors.

One other qualification I think very important is good manners. Western lands are woefully behind the East in this respect. For gentleness, courtesy and affability the Arab has no equal. Englishmen are too accustomed to be absorbed in their newspaper to notice their neighbors, and a scramble for a seat in a 'bus on a wet night would greatly shock an Arab, who always waits politely for the eldest to go in front.

I cannot close this letter without mentioning that a most direct way of helping missionaries is by sending them helpful books, up-to-date, on Biblical subjects. Some Friends do help in this way, and they have the heartfelt gratitude of the missionaries.

"For we are ever climbing hills
From the known to the unknown;
Surely at last, on some high mountain top,
To find our Father's throne."

Nine new members were added to the meeting in Whittier, Cal., at the last monthly meeting.

Levi D. Barr preached at both the morning and evening services in the Friends' Meeting at Newberg, Oregon, the 19th ult.

Those who have prospects of attending Ohio Yearly Meeting should communicate with O. C. Tomlinson, Mt. Pleasant, Ohio.

Francis Maxfield, who has had charge of Oakwood Seminary at Union Springs, N. Y., will teach at Germantown the coming year.

Martha Elliott, from near Spiceland, Ind., who has been visiting her son, near Scott's Mills, attended Oregon Yearly Meeting.

Mary Pickett, who has been teaching in a Friends' Mission in Mexico, is at her home, near Annapolis, Ind., for a few months' rest.

A new Friends' Meeting House is being constructed at Farm-land, Ind. It will probably be dedicated about the first of Ninth month.

Friends at Coloma, Ind., are remodelling and enlarging their meeting-house. When complete it will be the nicest meeting-house in the quarterly meeting.

Nathan and Esther Frame stopped at Archer Fla., the 20th to 24th ult., and held four meetings, which were very encouraging to the Friends there.

Nineteen additional Quiet Hour comrades were secured recently at the special Quiet Hour meeting of Whittier, Cal., Friends' Christian Endeavor.

Jonathan and Jane Votaw, of Newberg, Oregon, returned home, Seventh month 21st, after a few weeks' visit with their children in Tacoma, Wash.

Mary Whinnery is attending the Christian Endeavor Convention and Bible Institute at Richmond, Ind., as a delegate from Traverse City, Mich., Friends' Y. P. S. C. E.

Levi Rees and family, who were located at Noblesville, Ind., left the 21st ult for Whittier, Cal., where they have gone hoping that the change in climate will improve his health.

Amos Kenworthy, Levi D. Barr and wife, William Coffin and wife, and C. A. Tebbets and wife, all from California Yearly Meeting were in attendance at Oregon Yearly Meeting.

Amesbury Meeting, Mass., has two time-honored Friends who are still punctual in their attendance of meeting—Gertrude W. Cartland, a minister, and cousin of John G. Whittier, aged 82, and Mary Alice Brown, aged 82, also an early associate of the poet.

The wife of William Sharpless, of Long Beach, attended the Ladies' Missionary Meeting at Whittier, Cal., 23d ult., and told of the needs among Indians in Southern California.

After California Yearly Meeting, Caroline N. Hunnicutt began her fourth year's service in the meeting at Alamitos. The meeting is well united and in earnest for the salvation of souls.

At the evening service, 19th ult., Robert C. Root, of Berkeley, Cal., president of the Yearly Meeting's Christian Endeavor Union, addressed Whittier Friends on the subject of peace.

Fred E. Smith, who has served in Farmland Meeting for the past five years, expects soon to move to Richmond, Ind., where he will take the Biblical course at Earlham College during the coming year.

The Alumni Association of Bloomingdale Academy, Ind., will give a banquet in connection with the annual business meeting on the evening of the 14th inst. Many old students are expected to be in attendance.

Friends at Traverse City, Mich., have just completed a neat, substantial, modern home for the ministers who may be located in the meeting. The house is valued at some $1,600, and was built without soliciting outside aid.

The poem, "No Unbelief," which appeared on our cover of Fourth month 30th, and which was attributed to Charles Kingsley, turns out to be the work of Lizzie York Case. It appeared originally in the "Detroit Free Press" in 1881.

Joseph O. Binford recently visited some of the meetings in Traverse City Quarterly Meeting, Mich. His services were very acceptable. Gurney and Susan Wright, of Cass County, Mich., are now visiting the meetings in Christian love.

Wm. G. Hubbard, superintendent of an organization for the suppression of bad literature, called at THE AMERICAN FRIEND office on the 29th ult. He has changed his address from Lansing, Mich., to Columbus, O. His friends will please take notice.

Benjamin H. Binford and wife, from Westland, Ind., were in attendance at Oregon Yearly Meeting and the commencement exercises of Pacific College. They are now spending some time at Newport, on the Pacific Coast, in company with their children, Prof. R. W. Kelsey and wife.

W. Hayes Phillips and his wife, Lizzie E. Phillips, recently of the Training School in Cleveland, Ohio, are now located in the meeting at Maple City, Mich. W. Hayes Phillips graduated from the Training School this spring, his wife only failing to do so because of severe illness.

J. W. Elder closed a series of meetings at Wonsevu, Kansas, 22d ult., which resulted in some conversions. There were over thirty professions in all. Five gave their names to become members with Friends, and probably others will follow. J. W. Elder is now laboring in a tabernacle north of Homestead School House, Chase County, Kansas.

Isom and Margery Wooten are spending a month with their daughter, Nellie W. Meader, in Boston. Our friend, Isom Wooten, will be remembered as one of the pioneers in Iowa and some of the other yearly meetings. Although he is unable for active service now, he does what he can in his home meeting at Marshalltown, Iowa.

Buffalo Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, will be held Eighth month 21st, 22d and 23d, at Providence School House, about eight miles west of Buffalo. Friends from outside the quarterly meeting will be met at Buffalo by notifying Lou Harrison, R. F. D., Buffalo, Kansas, and giving time of expected arrival. All are gladly welcomed.

We are in receipt of a recent issue of "Daily Bible," a bi-weekly pamphlet published by the Council of the World's Morning Watch. It contains excellent helps for devotional Bible study. The notes in the current number are on the shorter epistles, and those on Galatians are from the pen of William L. Pearson.

The leading article in the current number of the "Psychological Review" is by President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, and is entitled "Psycho-physical Tests of Normal and Abnormal Children." It is a technical report of extensive research work conducted by him in Chicago psychological laboratories, and consists of twenty-seven pages and thirteen tables.

John Frederick Hanson attended Minneapolis Quarterly Meeting, which was held on the evening of the 18th inst. He also attended the morning meeting on First-day, and addressed a meeting on the subject of peace in the evening. All the meetings were unusually large, and all his addresses were listened to with deep interest. He visited Howard Lake and Highland on the days following, and held two meetings at the latter place. His visit and labors were much appreciated and helpful to Friends.

Sarah H. Trueblood, wife of Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Boston, has been an invalid for more than twenty years, but has such close fellowship with Christ, notwithstanding affliction, that it is a joy to converse with her. Through her friends she has kept in touch with the movements of the Church, and converses with as much intelligence as those who are in regular attendance at the services.

The meeting at Smithfield, Ohio, has a goodly number of veteran members. Nathan Hammond, Anna Hammond, Joseph Hoyle, Harriet Hammond, Eliza Lewis, Grandmother Woodward and William Cope, are all lifelong Friends, who are now deprived of the privilege of attending services on account of age. The meeting feels the loss of their presence and testimonies.

Elizabeth Hutchinson, formerly of Des Moines, Iowa, but who has for the past few years made her home with her daughter and husband, John Henry Douglas, Jr., of Newberg, Oregon, started the 21st ult. for an extended visit with her sons. After visiting her son Dr. Hutchinson, of Portland, she will go to Colorado Springs; thence to Des Moines; thence to Canada, and return to Newberg, after an absence of three or four months.

A very pleasant social was enjoyed on the 24th ult., at the home of Frank A. and Lizzie H. Miles. It was the occasion of the eleventh anniversary of their marriage and the ninth of their acceptable service as clerks of the monthly meeting of Ferrisburg, Vt. Fifty of their friends were present, and the chief feature was the presentation of a beautiful table set, which was a great surprise that was much appreciated.

Traverse City (formerly Long Lake) Quarterly Meeting, Michigan, held 17th to 19th ult., was one of spiritual blessing. The business session of the meeting was not very well attended, owing to many of the members being farmers unable to leave the harvest fields, and also to the death of Bertha Pennington upon that morning. Joseph Binford spoke to the edification of his hearers upon Seventh and First-day mornings while others of the eight ministers in attendance had services in the evening meetings.

Alfred T. Ware, who for the past two years has been located in Oak Street Meeting, Portland, Me., is compelled to quit the work on account of his wife's health. Her physician has stated that the Portland climate is not congenial, and that she could not, with safety, remain so near the sea coast. They have the heartfelt sympathy of all the members and friends of the meeting, and much sadness is felt at the thought of their having to leave. They expect to seek a new field after Ninth month 1st.

Some of the ministers and workers of Kansas Yearly Meeting met for Bible study and institute work at Lawrence, evening of Seventh month 7th, and continue their sessions over the 10th. Edgar P. Ellyson, of Iowa; President Stanley and Prof. Jay, of Friends' University, Wichita; I. Emery Pearson, of Lawrence, and Lewis W. McFarland, of Lowell, having been assigned places on the program as instructors were all present and rendered valuable aid in making the meeting a success. The course of instruction given was of a high order, and many things both old and new to many who were privileged to be present were brought out of God's treasury. As on many such former occasions regrets were felt and expressed that so many in the yearly meeting needing the help of such instruction were absent from the meeting.

DIED.

COX.—In Philadelphia, Seventh month 17th, 1903, Joseph J. Cox, in his 58th year. He was very active and influential in North Carolina Yearly Meeting during recent years. He was an elder in High Point Monthly Meeting, mayor of the city, president of Guilford College Board and a practicing physician at the time of his death.

PENNINGTON.—At her home in Traverse City, Mich., Seventh month 18th, 1903, Bertha Mae Waters, wife of Levi T. Pennington, in the 31st year of her age. She joined Friends upon her conversion in 1895, and has remained a true and beloved member.

YEARLY MEETINGS IN 1903.

Ohio Yearly Meeting, at Mt. Pleasant, O., Eighth month 27th. W. Mahlon Perry, clerk, Central City, Neb.

Iowa Yearly Meeting, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, Ninth month 8th. Wm. Jasper Hadley, clerk, 109 South Ninth Street, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Western Yearly Meeting, at Plainfield, Ind., Ninth month 18th. Lewis E. Stout, clerk, Plainfield, Ind.

Indiana Yearly Meeting, at Marion, Ind., Ninth month 30th. Ellwood O. Ellis, clerk, Richmond, Ind.; Hannah Lewis Smith, clerk, Selma, Ind.

Kansas Yearly Meeting, at Wichita, Kan., Tenth month 9th. Edmund Stanley, clerk, Wichita, Kan.

Baltimore Yearly Meeting, at Baltimore, Md., Eleventh month 6th. Allen C. Thomas, clerk, Haverford, Pa.; Anna King Carey, clerk, 838 Park Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

"THIS THING MUST END."

The stodgy-faced boy at the last table in the Public Library reading room is having a struggle most serious. He has covered both sides of a foolscap sheet with a vague smudge over which he still labors. His twisted mouth follows the motion of his creaking pencil. Before him Greene's "Shorter History of the English People" lies open at the year 1688.

Of all the two pages, only so much is decipherable:

"The Abdication of Jams II.

"The english people had born a grate deel from James 2nd but when at last he gave birth to a son they said this thing must end."—Adele Marie Shaw, in "The World's Work."

WAITED THIRTY YEARS

For the Proper Food.

A man who was a semi-invalid for 30 years got well in about a month when he found the right food. He says: "When I was 19 years of age I had a severe attack of typhoid fever, and after almost starving to death I was left in a pitiable condition.

"My nervous system was so shattered that I had to walk with a cane for six months after I got on my feet and my stomach was terribly distended. This was thirty years ago, and since that time I have never known health, although I had tried doctor after doctor, until six months ago I saw an article about Grape-Nuts that impressed me, so I thought I would try it.

"So I gave Grape-Nuts a trial, more as something to eat than with any idea it would help me. My improvement commenced immediately, and has kept right up until now I have used 7 packages and I feel like another person. I am in better health than I have been since boyhood and am strong and contented. Grape-Nuts food helped me after everything else failed, and I look on this as an evidence of the great power of proper food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A SPORTSMAN'S MECCA.

There is no more delightful place in the Western Hemisphere for out-door life and perfect sport with rod and gun, than the famous Muskoka Lakes region of the "Highlands of Ontario" about 100 miles north of Toronto. Canoeing is one of the many pleasures the district affords. The Grand Trunk reaches it with ease and comfort, whirling its passengers through some of the grandest scenery on earth.

ELIJAH'S LOGIC.

Elijah is a guide in the Sierras, and very capable in his calling, but not one of the leading minds of his section of territory. In vacation time last summer the head of the Stanford University geological department engaged Elijah's services.

According to the San Francisco "Wave," the pedagogue and his assistants seemed good men, but daft. One day an old Indian burying-ground was located, and in digging the professor came upon some choice arrow-heads. Thinking to test his guide's geological and ethnological knowledge, he said:

"Elijah, do you know how these arrow-heads came here?"

"Growned thar," replied Elijah, very positively.

"Nonsense! If you were to take an arrow-head and put it on your table and leave it there for a year's time, do you think it would grow?"

"Tain't no nonsense!" retorted Elijah. "If you were to take a potato and put it on your table, and leave it thar for a year, do you think it would grow?"

"I read somewhere the other day," said Mr. Henpeck, "that one of the big mercantile corporations pays a certain man $1,000 for each idea he furnishes. George, I'd like to have a chance of that kind!"

"Wretch!" exclaimed Mrs. Henpeck. "Do you want your innocent wife and child to starve?"—"Chicago Record-Herald."

Events and Comments.

It has been noted that only three of the 15 members of the famous electoral commission of 1877 survive—ex-Senator Edmunds, Senator Hoar and Gen. Eppa Hunton, of Virginia—the two last having been chosen on the part of the House of Representatives. All of the five justices of the Supreme Court who sat on the commission long since passed away.

W. A. Miller, the assistant foreman of the bookbinding department of the Government Printing Office at Washington, resumed his duties last week. Miller was assigned his work in charge of men who have been waging a vigorous campaign against him, but these men, acting under the decision of the union, continued at work technically "under protest."

Senator Lodge since his arrival in London has been making preliminary arrangements for the meeting of the Alaskan boundary tribunal, Ninth month 3d. Senator Turner will arrive there this week; former Secretary of State John W. Foster with the completed brief in the middle of Ninth month, and Secretary Root during the last days of the month.

The province of Porto Rico will produce about 10,000 bales of sea-island cotton this year—the finest grade of the staple—and those who are promoting the cultivation of cotton there believe that within a few years the island will be producing 50,000 bales a year. The next thing will be to establish cotton factories with very cheap labor to work up the product.

A number of cargoes of food stuffs from Europe, suspected of being adulterated, have been refused entry at our ports until the various articles can be analyzed by the chemists of the Department of Agriculture. These cargoes are for the most part canned meats and sausage from Germany, olive oil from France and spices from India. This is the first detention of imported goods under the new law against the admission of adulterated articles of food.

The Russian administration of New Chwang has stopped the exportation of wheat to Japan. The export of grain from Chinese ports is illegal, but the Russians heretofore have ignored the law. During the past week the Japanese obtained many ship loads from New Chwang, apparently preparing for war contingencies. Several ships were employed in bringing wheat from Shanghai and southern parts to New Chwang, where it was trans-shipped as a direct export. This action will compel Japan to look to other countries for her wheat supply.

The seven little islands off the coast of Borneo which the United States recently took possession of may form the basis of a diplomatic dispute. The contention of this Government is that they were Spanish possessions, and were ceded to us as a result of the Spanish War, although they were not defined in the "Paris treaty." Great Britain will object to the seizure of these islands, small and apparently unimportant as they are, because they give us control of the Sulu Sea, and command the passage from British Borneo ports to Singapore, Hong Kong and Australia.

Nearly five years ago the Supreme Court of Illinois decided that the Pullman Palace Car Company was holding land for other than purely corporate purposes contrary to law, and ordered the company to dispose of its holdings before the end of Tenth month of this year. This order compelled the sale of about 4,000 acres underlying the model town of Pullman, together with the many buildings owned by the company and rented to employees or devoted to other uses than the manufacture of cars. Such is the end of Pullman's fond plan of settling the labor problem. He acted sincerely, but instead of improving the relations of labor and capital the town of Pullman scheme was instrumental in bringing on one of the sharpest conflicts between the two factors in production ever known.

An article on "The Concentration of Banking Interests in the United States," by Charles J. Bullock, appears in the "Atlantic Monthly" for Eighth month. From this it appears that in 1902 14,913 associations carried on a banking business in this country. Until recently these institutions occupied an important independent position, but in the last five years, since small industrial establishments have been consolidated into "trusts," whose central executive offices are located in New York, their financial operations are conducted through the banks of that city. When the merger is not actual, a "community of interests" is established, which means the concentration of the banking business of New York and of the United States in the hands of a small coterie of men. It also appears that there are two major spheres of influence in banking circles in New York City, one of which is dominated by the so-called "Standard Oil interests" and the other by the Morgan interests.

THEN SHE WISHED SHE HADN'T.

A Liverpool man, of whom "Tid-Bits" tells, bears such an uncommon name that his acquaintances often inquire how he got it, and laugh over the explanation.

His mother was on the lookout for something original, and one day, before his christening, she noticed upon the door of a building the word "Nosmo."

This struck her fancy. Now, for a middle name. Later, coming past the same building, she saw the name "King."

Ah! this was what she was after.

"Nosmo King Jones he shall be," she said, and he was christened so.

On the way home from the church she passed the building again.

The doors were shut, and behold, the doors with the names on them which she had selected were shut together, and she read—not "Nosmo King," but "No Smoking," and her heart was broken.

CHANGE.

Quit Coffee and Got Well.

A woman's coffee experience is interesting. "For two weeks at a time I have taken no food but skim milk, for solid food would ferment and cause such a pressure of gas and such distress that I could hardly breathe at times, also excruciating pain and heart palpitation, and all the time I was so nervous and restless.

"From childhood up I had been a coffee and tea drinker, and for the past 20 years I have been trying different physicians, but could get only temporary relief. Then I read an article telling how some one had been cured by leaving off coffee and drinking Postum, and it seemed so pleasant just to read about good health I decided to try Postum in place of coffee.

"I made the change from coffee to Postum, and such a change there is in me that I don't feel like the same person. We all found Postum delicious, and like it better than coffee. My health now is wonderfully good.

"As soon as I made the shift from coffee to Postum I got better, and now all of my troubles are gone. I am fleshy, my food assimilates, the pressure in the chest and palpitation are all gone, my bowels are regular, have no more stomach trouble, and my headaches are gone. Remember I did not use medicines at all—just left off coffee and drank Postum steadily." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE NEW GYMNASIUM AT Friends School
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

FRIENDS SCHOOL GYMNASIUM.

A fine new building with complete modern equipment, swimming pool, running track and lockers. To be used by boys and girls at different periods. Another mark in the progress of this school that has been growing for more than a hundred years. The spirit has ever been to add to equipment and methods that which would tend toward the mental, physical and moral growth of its pupils.

Conducted on a wisely arranged plan of co-education. Furnishes a sound thorough education, fitting for business and for college entrance. A quaint building called "The Three Oaks Studio" is set apart for classes in drawing, painting and wood carving. Special courses in music and art. Open to all denominations. Liberal endowments make low tuition. Modern buildings heated by steam. Large and beautiful grounds for outdoor sports. For catalogue address

PAUL'S YEARNING TO SAVE SOME.

*Oft when the Word is on me to deliver,
Opens the heaven and the Lord is there;
Desert or throng, the city or the river,
Melt in a lucid Paradise of air.*

*Only like souls I see the folk thereunder,
Bound who should conquer, slaves who should be kings,
Hearing their one hope with an empty wonder,
Sadly contented with a show of things;—*

*Then with a rush the intolerable craving
Shivers through me like a trumpet call—
Oh to save these! to perish for their saving,
Die for their life, be offered for them all.*

DOORS OPENING OUTWARD.

HE is a poor man, indeed, who has nothing that seems to him worthy of being esteemed and treasured as a valuable asset; but he is a poorer man who concludes that the way to conserve and improve his talents is to shut himself up from the world and become a devotee to "self-culture," neglecting those obligations that belong to mutuality and brotherhood. The parables of the pounds and the talents show but one loss—that of the man who withheld himself from adventure. Selfishness is self-destructive, whether it take the form of a greedy reaching out or of idle indulgence. The measure of utility is not in the degree of self-advancement, but in the broader result of general uplift.

Love demands expression. That "God is love" has been eternally true, but "God manifest in the flesh" expressed the truth as it had never been known before. The cloistered monk with all his study and meditation knew less of the significance of Christ's coming than does the unread private in the ranks of the Salvation Army, whose life is spent in an effort to impart to the deeply sinful a knowledge of the foundation principles of faith. The method of his procedure is to go out of himself for the sake of another, and one result is his own continual growth.

Intellectual enlargement comes by the same process. A scientist of no small renown has said that to carry a class of students along the lines of his research and inductions while he was seeking to enlarge the bounds of knowledge was his best safeguard against error and his best assurance of success. Men grow together if they grow at all. He whose mental treasures cannot be made common property easily develops into an unbalanced theorist, and is, at best, worth but little to the world.

Nor is the case different with reference to social and political ideals; unless we put ourselves upon the expression, the working out in practical form and effectiveness of our best conclusions in these matters, their excellence avails nothing and our holding them unused is to our condemnation rather than to our credit. Civic corruption provokes a call for a "sharpened conscience." But conscience must put itself on record; its sharpening must enable it to cut its own channels, and not let itself be swallowed up in the stream of selfishness and indifference that jeopardizes the welfare not merely of a few cities, but of the nation. The State depends for its advancement upon the infusion into public affairs of the ideals and principles that are fostered by the purest and ablest men—ablest because they are purest, pure enough to "see God," as our Lord promises they shall. And in searching for a vision of God we may not forget that His kingdom is among men.

Christ committed to prejudiced and uncomprehending disciples the highest and most precious teaching that has ever reached the earth, assured of the vitality of truth. Whatever the field of our service or the nature of our gift, we ought as freely and as confidently to impart our best, not waiting to be called out, but ourselves alert for modes of expression.

L. D. C.

VISION AND OBEDIENCE.

VISION, love, submission are three of religion's great words, but no man has any real religion until they are more than words to him. He who has fathomed what they really mean holds the secret of the universe, for they all three lead to one goal—the heart of God.

Vision must come first. We cannot love until we see, but we cannot see without loving. Our great disease is blindness. We gaze and stare, but we do not see. Prophets, Christ and apostles all alike lament the blindness of men—the lack of vision. "Their eyes are dull," "men love darkness," "the god of this world has blinded their eyes." These are familiar words describing the common disease. Why does Christ not have more effect over men? Because they do not see Him. Very few persons have really seen Christ. Many are so full of the glare and dazzle of the world that they have no eyes for Him. Many more never look for Him. He has not yet risen on their horizon. Others have on so many veils of tradition that they cannot see through them. Others distort Him by always looking at Him through their theories about Him, until the very glasses they have put on to see Him with make them miss seeing Him. But there He is—the Life, the Truth, the Way. There He is—God with us. There He is, the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in a human face. Not see Him? Nothing ever was clearer. No such orb ever came above the sky-line before, and it has never set. He is still there as unsetting as the pole star. It is vision that is lacking. All glory and beauty and goodness in one life and yet we cannot see it!

But the moment vision really comes it turns into love. "We needs must love the highest when we see it." No soul yet ever saw Christ and still remained loveless. We may hear about Him and go on unchanged. We may accept some theory about Him, and still remain hard and cold; but nobody can see Him without loving. As the fabled statue of Memnon burst into music when the rising sun struck his lips, so in reality the heart breaks into love when the vision comes—when He is really seen. It could not be otherwise. Here is an infinite Being showing His nature to me, speaking to me, making life clear to me, giving Himself to me in love and sympathy, bearing my burdens, entering into my sufferings, sharing my troubles, giving His life for me. I see it all, and yet it makes no difference to me! That is impossible. The sight will always turn into love. Those who do not love do not see.

So, too, love and submission go together. They are not two different things; they are but two sides of the same fact. Love always "smites the chord of self" until it passes in music out of sight. Self-will and love never yet went harmoniously together. Love changes the order of the personal pronouns, so that the second comes first—"Thou and I," "not my will but thine." This is no accident; it is a necessity. It is the compulsion of love. It cannot be put on; it cannot be imitated. Only one thing melts down the stubborn I and puts thou first. That is love. Any other kind of submission will always remain slavery, but this submission of love is perfect freedom and complete joy. It begins in vision, which is only another name for faith; then love adds itself and submission follows as naturally as color comes from light.

What we want to make us true men, over and above that which we bring into the world with us, is some sort of God-given instinct, motive and new principle of life in us, which shall make us not only to see the right and the true and the noble, but love it, and give up our wills and hearts to it, and find in the confession of our weakness a strength, in the subjection of our wills a freedom, and in the utter carelessness about self a self-respect, such as we have never known before.—Charles Kingsley.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EARLY QUAKERISM AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN.

III.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF EARLY QUAKERISM. THE ESSENTIALS OF AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

The message of Quakerism came not from a body of people organized into a society or church, but, so far as can be learned, it was proclaimed first by one individual. He had no followers as such, and hence, instead of the people coming to him, it was necessary for him to go to them. This he did, and the methods by which he reached the hearts and ears of the people are typical of the methods used by the men and women who came flocking to his belief and went forth on a similar mission to their fellowmen. When Fox once became thoroughly possessed of his message and realized the great need of the wide world, he went forth to proclaim that message to everyone, upon every opportunity, and in every place where he could make the people listen to him. In studying the methods of these early preachers it will be seen that in their going to the people they gained a hearing in two ways, first by proclaiming their message where people were already congregated for one reason or another, not necessarily religious; and, second, by employing certain methods by which they compelled attention from those who were either eye or ear witnesses to their activities.

First, their methods in proclaiming the Gospel to assembled people. Here the opportunity was a large one, and it can never be said that the founders of Quakerism neglected it. It is not too strong a statement to say that in almost every place where groups of people ever came together in such a place at some time during the opening years of this movement would be found a zealous Quaker pleading with the group before him to turn from their sin and give heed to the Inner Light. The market, the store, the ale-house, the inn, became the common meeting places where these people preached the Gospel. It is recorded of Edward Burrough, a Friend of great spiritual power, that often on a summer's evening on the village green, where the peasants were gathered for wrestling and other sports, he would step forward into the ring and "thunder against sin." Whenever they found any one who didn't agree with their opinions they took the opportunity to preach. The State papers of this period record letters of captains in which reference is made to the efforts of these people on shipboard to convince the sailors.* They endeavored thus to reach all classes of people, the high and the low, the peasant, the soldier, and the sailor. It is interesting to note that when they were put in prison because of their preaching they turned the prison itself into a chapel, and pleaded with the criminals for the salvation of their souls. What is more striking still, when Fox and his followers were brought to trial before the courts of the land because of their preaching, a study of these trials bears witness to the fact that their testimony included not only a defense of their position, but often this defense turned into a gospel plea before the court itself.

Thus did they endeavor to reach the irreligious non-church-going people, but the most important part of the work of these early years (I say most important because the records seem most full of such works) was to the church-goers themselves. The Friends, realizing the seriousness of the religious situation, believed that the church people needed conversion as much as any one else, and hence they employed every means to reach them. The initial custom in this regard seemed to be for the Friends or Friend to attend regular meetings of some church in the "steeple-house." At some point in such a meeting these people would rise and begin to proclaim the truth as they understood it, at the same time denouncing the formal religious customs of the day, and the dearth of spiritual life in the church and among the clergy. The effect of this sort of thing on people who already held strong convictions was often very striking. Sometimes the meeting became an uproar, sometimes the new preachers were arrested, sometimes they were turned out of doors, and sometimes they were listened to with patience, if not with interest. How far the Friends were justified in this method of proclaiming the gospel has long been a matter of dispute. There is doubtless some truth on both sides of the question. There was a custom in vogue at that time in church services by which it was perfectly allowable and expected that after the preacher had finished any one who chose could rise and speak. This was doubtless the opportunity which the Friends sought to use, and the great criticism and abuse by the people was due in most cases at least to the nature of their preaching, and their denunciation of the religious life of the people, rather than to any direct violation of church law or custom. There is, however, evidence to show that in some cases at least the more zealous Friends did at times break up the meeting by interposing their remarks and preaching when, according to church custom, they would be decidedly out of order. When driven out of the "steeple-house" they often began to preach in the church yard, or in the near vicinity wherever those who were interested would listen. Very often a meeting would be going on within, and at the same time one without, and it is often recorded that the parish minister failed to get his people, who would remain outside to hear these wandering preachers.

Second, methods by which they compelled the attention of the people. It has already been shown how the early Friends reached the people who in this way or that were already assembled and willing to listen. There were those, however, whom they could not reach in this way; but their message was for all, and they believed they were sent to all; hence the simple logic of the situation aroused them to devise means to compel the attention of the people. The incident of Fox going with bared feet up and down in Litchfield and crying out against the bloody city is an illustration of how they attempted to compel the ears, if they could not reach the hearts, of the people. Some of the preachers seemed to have seized the sign method of teaching used by the prophets of old, and applied it in their own efforts to impress the people. One woman entered the Parliament House with a "trenchard" in her hand, and, breaking it, says, "Thus shall ye be broken in pieces." Thomas Aldam, going before the protector to secure some redress, takes his cap from his head, and, tearing it, says, "So shall the government be torn from thee and thy house."

That such methods as these incidents illustrate border on, if they do not actually show, the spirit of fanaticism, is the opinion expressed by many. Such methods, it is claimed, would not accomplish the end for which they were employed. (Surely they would not in this age.) In justice to an honest interpretation of early Quakerism, it must be stated that these methods were the exception, not the rule which swayed the Society as a whole. But whatever may be the interpretation put on their value in accomplishing the end sought, or the place which they held in the activities of the early Quakers, their presence, be it small or great, at least shows the intensity of these preachers of righteousness and the strenuous efforts they put forward to reach all classes and conditions of men.

Thus did the early preachers in the opening years of the work go to the people. As the years went on their numbers increased and they proclaimed the Gospel at "appointed meetings," where the people by thousands came to them to be ministered unto, instead of their going to the people to minister. This must be recognized as one of the methods emphasized to promulgate the early beliefs of early Quakerism.

Having considered how the message of Quakerism was proclaimed by the voice, brief reference must now be made to the Friends' use of the pen as a means by which the Gospel could permeate the whole fabric of society. Two kinds of writings characterize the work of the Society during the early years of its history. Letters were written in great numbers and sent to all classes of people, and pamphlets setting forth their views were printed and scattered broadcast over the country.

The time when a great many of these writings were composed, the people to whom they were addressed, and the material they contained are all characteristic of the early Friends. The Friend was never sure how long his preaching was to remain undisturbed. He was often prohibited the right of speaking to the people, and when he persisted not unfrequently he found himself in prison. His zeal for the promulgation of the truth, however, did not cease, and so, being forbidden the use of his voice, he continued his message by the use of the pen.

A glance at some of the addresses of the letters of Fox speaks louder than argument can in revealing the scope of Quakerism as it lay, ideally, perhaps, in the minds of its founders. The following list speaks for itself: "To the High and Lofty Ones," "To Rulers of the Earth," "To Jews," "A Cry of Repentance unto the Inhabitants of London Chiefly, etc.," "An Epistle to All Peoples on the Earth," "To the Turk," "For the Emperor of China and His Subordinate Kings and Princes," "For All Bishops and Priests in Christendom," etc., etc.

In reading these early pamphlets and letters one readily gathers the impression that the same message which poured forth from their lips on all occasions flowed from their pens with equal persistence and intensity. Their letters are appeals to turn from sin to righteousness, to follow Truth and give heed to the Inner Light. Their pamphlets reveal the same spirit, and, while explaining to some degree their doctrinal positions, they are nevertheless portrayals of doctrine applied to the life.

Thus by its belief in the awfulness of sin in God's sight and in the saving Gospel of the Christ, by its faithful preachers who were permeated through and through with their message, and by the strenuous activities of these people in the desire to get their message to the people, Quakerism in its early years exemplified the three essential characteristics of those movements which are universally recognized as evangelical, and hence it may rightfully claim the title for itself.

IV.

AN ESTIMATE OF QUAKERISM FROM THE THOUGHT AND ACTIVITY OF ITS CONTEMPORARIES.

[Space forbids the discussion of this point here, but the method of procedure and the result obtained may be summarized as follows:]

A partial inductive study has been made of the thought and activity of that period of church history in which Quakerism arose, with a view to finding a consensus of opinion expressed by its contemporaries in reference to this movement, and also the general treatment which those who professed to be Quakers received from the hands of those who were not its followers. The conclusions reached on these two points are decidedly against the Quakers and may be characterized as a spirit of intense opposition. This conclusion has been in turn examined in the light of the spiritual condition of England at that time [cf. ii.] and in the view also of the spirit of Quakerism as revealed by its followers. The final conclusion from this comparison is rather in favor of Quakerism, and substantiates rather than weakens the claim of its being an evangelical movement.

(To be continued.)

SHEPHERDS AND FISHERMEN.

BY HUGH MACMILLAN.

If I were asked what occupation is most characteristic of the Old Testament Scriptures, I should say the Shepherd. If I were asked what is the occupation that is most characteristic of the New Testament, I should say the Fisherman. The prophets were shepherds, the apostles were fishermen. The Old Testament moves among the scenery of Judea; the New Testament among the scenery of Galilee. The hills of Judea are the pastures of sheep; the sea of Galilee is the haunt of fishes. Moses received the revelation of the Old Testament while tending his father-in-law's flock at the back of Mount Horeb, beside the burning bush; Peter, James and John received the call to become disciples while mending their nets beside the Sea of Galilee, and in connection with the miraculous draught of fishes which they caught in its waters. And all the disciples were made apostles by the significant repetition of the miracle of the great draught of fishes that was taken in the same place after the resurrection.

We see a wonderful significance and appropriateness in these two occupations being so intimately associated with the revelations of the Old and New Testaments. The shepherd life among the mountains, far away from the busy haunts of men, lends itself to meditation, to the seeing of visions and dreaming of dreams in the sleep that is among the lonely hills; and this is the kind of life that suits the prophet, and enables him best to carry out his mission. The fisherman's life, on the contrary, is spent upon the troubled waters, continually changing, calling for activity, energy and fertile resource, and he has to dispose of the produce of his toil where men most do congregate; and that is the kind of life that suits the apostle best, and is best adapted to enable him to fulfill his mission. The prophet is a man of leisure and insight, who sees into the heart of things, who penetrates the haze of the future, and has the harvest of a quiet age which is the bliss of solitude. The apostle is one who mixes in the business of life, in the streets and openings of the gates; and like a stream coming to the homes and hearts of men, the heavenly lessons he has learned high up among the cloudy heights.

The relation between an Eastern shepherd and his flock is peculiarly close and tender. There is a friendship formed between them to which there is nothing analogous in our Western life. He goes before them to their pastures. They know him and answer to their names, and they follow close behind him, sure of his care. He carries the lamb in his bosom; encourages the weak that are not able to keep up with the rest and gently leads them; and should one of them go astray, he searches for it until he finds it, tracking it by the tufts of wool left on the briers and thorns. This tending of the sheep keeps the well-spring of affection ever fresh and full in the shepherd's heart. It helps to educate him, to evoke his self-denial, patience, tenderness and courage. It brings him into close contact with nature in her varying moods. It throws him back upon his own thoughts, and shuts him up to the simplicities of life. David was trained in this way while keeping his father's flocks on the hills of Bethlehem for the great responsibilities of his later years. And He who put into David's heart the thought that the Lord stood towards himself in this tender relation has appeared among men and claimed for Himself the title of the Good Shepherd, who gave His life for the sheep—who leads us into green pastures and beside still waters, and who appears to the eye of faith through the door opened in heaven, a lamb as it had been slain.

What divine instinct led Jesus to select His disciples and apostles from the fisher-folk? Why did He not go to the lonely hills of Judea, and summon the shepherds there to follow Him that He might make them shepherds of men; that by the shepherd's rod like Moses, they might do miracles of grace and accomplish the world's deliverance as he had accomplished the deliverance of Israel? Just for the same reason that He Himself did not act like John the Baptist, the last prophet of the old dispensation, living a lonely wilderness life, far away from human society, but went where the crowds of life were thickest, and the varieties of life were greatest on the shores of the Sea of Galilee. He did not want shepherds to preach the Gospel, though the shepherds had prepared the way for it, and heralded its coming, and heard the angels singing its first song on the plains of Bethlehem, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will to all mankind." Not only in the old primeval shepherd realm of the East, amid calm, lonely, lethargic scenes of nature, and Arab tents, camels and palm trees associated with the infancy and early youth of our race; but also amid the stimulating scenes of the West, amid the arts and sciences of Greek civilization and Roman dominion, amid the bustle and commerce of cities, did He wish His many-sided cosmopolitan Gospel to be preached. He could not have said to shepherds on the lonely hills, the boundaries of the world shutting men out, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel unto every creature," but to fishermen on the wide waste of waters that flow through and amid all lands, uniting them together.

"PETER'S WIFE."

BY WILLIAM T. GUNN.

"Aye, woman, I wish ye had been able to be at the Kirk this day!" said Donald McKenzie to his wife Elspeth. "We had a man frae Drumshalloch to preach to us, and said he, 'It is laid upon me to preach to you this day aboot Peter's wife.'"

"Peter's wife," said Elspeth, "I didna ken he had a wife."

"Hoots, woman, ye're no better than Alistair McDonald, for that's juist what he said, but I gied him a poke. 'Alistair,' said I, 'it's na sae easy having a mither-in-law an no getting a wife. 'There's truth in that,' said Alistair."

"I ken that brawly Donald, my man, so ye needna be lauchin' at me, but it's no what you said I'm waitin' tae hear. I dinna mind that there's anything written aboot Peter's wife forbye a' that."

"Weel, the meenister said there was a good deal written tae them that had eyes tae see. An', noo, Elspeth, tell me did ye ever wunner the reason that the wife's mither had to get the tea that night juist after being cured o' the fever?"

"Na, I canna say," said Elspeth, "unless it was juist she wad like tae show her thanks that way."

"But what was Peter's wife daein at the time, and what for was her mither wi' her?"

"I dinna mind. I supposed she was juist leevin' there. Maybe, her man was deid. Eh! What? Ye dinna mean tae say there was?"

"Aye, but I do, Elspeth, for the meenister says that a wee while aifter, not many months, there was a wee bairn in the house, an' when Jesus wad teach them humility he took the wee bairn in his arms."

"Peter's wife wad hae liked that fine I dout."

"And was that Peter's bairn, Donald?"

"Aye, an' the meenister says the Greek word, 'in His arms,' means i' the hollow of the elbow, sae it maun hae been but a wee ane even then. 'So,' says he, 'they wad apologize for no bein prepared, for the wife micht hae been lyin' wi' the new-born babe in her arms, an' the mither-in-law was sick wi' a great fever, an' the neighbor women daein the best they could. But syne as they telt Him, it was a' richt, ye ken.'"

"Juist that," interjected Elspeth, "aye, an' 'she rose an' meenistered unto them,' that she would, an' be glad tae get things goin' richt again."

"An' aifter tea when the sun had gaen down an' the Sabbath was owre, a' the Capernaum folks brought a' their sick anes doon tae Peter's house, an' He healed them a'. That maun hae been a graund nicht for Capernaum!"

"It was'na lang aifter that till Peter had a job repairin' his roof, for there was sic a crowd o' folk at the door that four men wi' a paralyzed friend could'na win in till Jesus, but they would'na be beat, sae they juist gaed up the outside stairs till they got on the roof. An' then they took off the tiles an' let him down wi' ropes at Jesus' feet."

"An' Peter's wife maun hae had a job clearin' up aifter they had a' gone," said Elspeth.

"But she wad'na mind that, not her. She wad be thinkin' o' the puir fellow that was healed an' his sins forgiven. But go on, Donald man."

"Weel," he said, "it was there the Lord lived a' the time he was in Capernaum, an' there that he telt them the parables o' the hid treasure and the goodly pearl an' the net; aye, an' many another thing. There he took the bairn in his arms, an' there she an' the bairn maun hae stayed while Peter followed the Master. For ye mind when Peter said, 'Lord, we have left all an' followed thee. What shall we have ?' that Jesus told him there was nae man that had left house or wife or bairns an' ither things, but should receive an hundred-fold. Aye, there she stayed till ae morn when they seven brought back the fish 'an said they had seen the Lord close by again, an' Peter would tell her what Jesus had said would come to him by and by, an' that would be sore in her heart for many a day. Then ae day, lang years aifter, the persecutions waxed sore, for she had tae leave the auld hame an' go about wi' her man, as Paul tells in his epistle to the Corinthians.

" 'An' noo,' says the meenister, 'whatna kind o' a woman was this? I'm thinkin', for you aye see a man choosin' his verra opposite, that Peter wad hae chosen a quiet, wee bit woman that wadna' say much but love a great deal, for Peter was aye a nervous body, terrible quick wi' his tongue, but wi' an awfu' big heart. She was a guid manager, no' a clutterin' housekeeper, like Martha; fairly drivin ye wild wi' a' kinds o' entertainment ye didna' want, but juist a Mary an' Martha a' rolled into one.

" 'Tae conclude,' says he, 'I will show you that this wee bit woman has been a mighty power in the warld i' three ways.' An' here, Elspeth, I was fein astonished an' we never sae much as heard o' her before.

" 'Firstly, she has been a great comfort tae young theological students wha desire tae proceed frae ordination tae co-ordination an' whiles get tangled owre Paul's saying that "they bide even as I." Just then up steps Peter's wife and says, "Dinna' mind him, think o' me!" An' then juist like a woman, she casts up his ain words and says, "Have ye no right tae lead aboot a wife that is a believer even as the lave o' the apostles, an' my man Peter?" An' then says she, "A guid wife is from the Lord. Ye canna' meenister tae the haill warld, and ye only half a man. What dae bachelor meenisters, puir things, ken aboot the best half o' their people?" Syne the lads are glad tae tak her advice. Aye, Peter's wife's a great comfort tae theological students. I mind mysel' once—but I'll no' be tellin'.

" 'Secondly, this wee woman, Peter's wife, has been the greatest stumbling-block i' the way o' the great Church o' Rome wi' its doctrine o' the celibacy o' the clergy that ever was. She steps up tae the pope and says, "Wha nicht ye be?" "I," says he, "am the successor o' Peter!"

" 'Ye dinna say!' says she. "An' where's my successor?" "My dear woman," says he, "accordin' tae the Bull o' Pope—"

" 'Accordin' tae the facts," and she speaks right up, "accordin' tae the facts, what will ye do wi' me?" An to this day they dinna ken.

" 'Thirdly, Peter's wife is a representative of a' thae buried women aboot whom the warld never hears. We dinna ken even her name. But behind every guid man that does a guid work in the world there's aye ae woman or may be twa, a guid mither an' a guid wife. Aye, an' the guid wife that has tae bide at hame by hersel' an' her man far awa' may be in danger o' his life. I tell you, she makes far more o' a sacrifice than him. He sees new things an' has stirrin' times, but he kens she's safe an' she bides at hame an' disna ken what's happenin' to him, an' every knock at the door an' every letter an' telegram is like tae burst her heart wi' fear. Aye, he has the name o't but it's she that pays the price. Juist think o' Livingstone's wife an' what it meant tae her tae come hame an' leave him oot there wi' fever an' savages an' lions a' roond him. Aye, an' nobody thinkin' but she was having a fine quiet time at hame. I would like fine for somebody tae build a grand cathedral tae Peter's wife. There's mony a woman whose man is far awa' travelin' an' at conventions an' conferences an' missions while she bides at hame wi' the wind sougin' roond the house an' fearsome noises a' the nicht keepin' her frae sleep, an' the bairns maybe no weel, that wad find a warm friend in Peter's wife. Ye see she kenned a' about it.

" 'Lastly, ye are some of ye sayin': "Ah, but it was a rare preevilege tae hae the Maister bidin' in her hame and her tendin' tae him and listenin' tae him all the while, an' sae nae dout it was. I will no' be minding you this day that he said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me," but I will be asking you tae read his ain words.

" 'Ye wad like fine tae hae him live wi' you? Then listen: "If a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." "Behold, I stand at the door and knock, and if any man hear my voice and open unto me I will come in and sup with him and he with me." "

There was a long silence, and then Elspeth broke it. "Donald, there's the fear o' God an' the wisdom o' his ain wife in that man frae Drumshalloch, and gin he preaches here next Sabbath I'll get till Kirk rheumatiz or no rheumatiz. Noo, take the Book, an' we'll hae prayers."—From "The Congregationalist."

EXCESSES OF THE AGE.*

BY WHITELAW REID.

Of specific excesses toward which our Democratic institutions seem to be tending, perhaps we do not need now to speak in any great detail. It may be enough to recognize that the American who colonized the Atlantic coast and the great Middle West, who framed the Constitution, started the government, developed the country under it, and fought a gigantic civil war to preserve it, is not the American who leads the popular movements of to-day. The type is changing; the beliefs are changing, and the aims.

He is neither Puritan any longer, nor Cavalier. He may outwardly deny the change, but he inwardly feels it. Nothing is more noticeable at the great centers of population and of national activity, or in any large section of what calls itself, and is often called, our best society, than disappearance of the old foundation of character and action; a loss of profound, enduring, restful faith in anything. It is a laissez-aller age; an age of loosening anchors and drifting with the tide; of taking things as they are, with cordial readiness to take them hereafter as they come; of an easy indifference, whose universal attitude toward each startling departure from old standards is "What does it matter, anyway?"—an age, in short, marked by a refined "up-to-date" adaptation of the old Epicurean idea that there is nothing in this world to do but to eat and drink and make merry, for to-morrow we die. As Omar, prime favorite of the flower of this new school, has sung:

"What boots it to repeat
How time is slipping underneath our Feet;
Unborn To-morrow, and dead Yesterday,
Why fret about them if To-day be sweet!"

The loss of faith brings us by this short cut straight to the loss of purpose in life—of any purpose at least beyond purely material ones. To those who need money, the duty of getting it first, and above anything else, becomes the gospel of life. To those who feel the need of position, whether in society, business or elsewhere, their gospel drives them to all means within the law to attain that. To those who have both money and position comes the only remaining purpose in life, that of using them for an existence of amusement and enjoyment. Is it too much to say that never before in our history have such aspirations so completely dominated and limited such large classes?

But this craze for mere amusement and enjoyment, like other perverted appetites, grows by what it feeds on. The amusement soon becomes wearisome, the enjoyment soon palls, unless constantly more and more spectacular and bizarre. Perpetual change and constantly increasing variety of extremes seem to be the ever-rising price of keeping amused. One never is for long where one wants to be, or doing what one desires; there must be incessantly a rushing to and fro, and a change of pursuits, all under the glare of electric lights and the blare of brass bands.

One day we go wild over a guest because he is the brother of an emperor; the next we are in a pet because the same emperor wants to collect money from an unwilling debtor who doesn't pay his debts to us either. One day we proclaim Russia as our dearest friend, and fret with but half-concealed contempt at Chinese complaints about the massacre of their countrymen in Wyoming, or Italian complaints about similar atrocities in Louisiana, or foreign comment generally on our burning of negroes at the stake; and the next day we are demanding that our government shall at once and officially serve peremptory notice on that same dearest friend at St. Petersburg that we won't stand the equally wicked persecution of the Jews in Kishineff in the heart of Russia. We are bent on an isthmus canal at Nicaragua, and can hardly keep our hands off our ancient ally for attempting one at Panama; we laugh loud and long at the De Lesseps collapse at proof of all we have said about the utter impracticability of the Panama route, then suddenly turn around, buy up the bankrupt, abandon the Nicaragua concern and set out to finish the same impracticable and preposterous Panama scheme ourselves.

Thus wave after wave of half-considered opinion sweeps over the country; we flash into flames of sudden excitement, which fortunately, for the most part, die out like heat lightning; feel equally fit to flout all the world's experience, solve at sight all its problems, or fight all creation at the drop of a hat, and are always in danger of going off at half cock into a new party or out of it, into some untried policy or out of it, into some monstrous injustice or out of it, into war or out of it.

But let no hearer for one moment forget that there is another side to the picture. Admitting all faults and inconsistencies and hysterical alternations of heat and cold, our people are still the freest, most generous, most active and daring, our country is still in our eyes the best the sun shines on. But we should be less its admirers, less loyal and less useful as its citizens, if we did not face the known facts with open eyes.

When you ask how it is to be rendered, one cannot be mistaken in turning first to those priceless qualities in any sound national life, whose tendency to decay we noted at the outset. Give back to us a serious and worthy purpose. Restore sane views of life, of our own relations to it, and of our relations to those who share it with us. Moderation in our conceit of our own almightiness will surely follow, moderation in the intolerant assertion of our own rights, moderation in meddling with the rights of others, some tendency to thought before action, some continuity of conduct personal and public, and some reference of policy to enduring principle.

Perhaps the same influence may even penetrate citadels powerfully entrenched, those of evils that come from the ill-judged excesses of the best people. It may possibly infuse moderation into our new and admirable devotion to athletics, and rescue us from those vagaries of sport run mad that have made the football teacher more important in our universities than the professor of chemistry or of philosophy, and the record of the cinder track the essential thing rather than the baccalaureate degree.

Harder task yet, it may restore sanity to our charity run mad; may teach us the infinite harm that lurks in our lazy way of ridding ourselves from each casual beggar with a careless quarter instead of a careful inquiry; and may even, after a time, stop the premium we put upon crime and crankiness when we build palaces for our lunatics and our criminals, and sustain them in these establishments in a comfort and even luxury far beyond the average of what the taxpayers who must meet the bills can afford for themselves. Under your guidance the moderate conclusion may in fact be reached that even for sweet charity's sake the upright, industrious New York farmer or mechanic or shopkeeper is not bound to house and feed the crank and the criminal better than he can the children of his loins and the wife of his bosom.

Outside the immediate and inestimable effect on the family, the conservative power of educated women will naturally show its first and perhaps its chief influence in the next greatest among the forces that guide the world—that of social life. They will surely help to check its degradation. They may make it regain its soothing relaxation, and its benign stimulus for the best in every one. They may even give back to society the inspiration it once had for the leaders of the world's work. They will certainly correct the prevalent vicious conception of its real scope.

When higher ideals do return, the powerful influence of educated women will surely array as never before the best of their sex in compact, resistless phalanx against a social evil, alarming, degrading and demoralizing, which has suddenly become almost too common to provoke surprise—the transformation of marriage from a sacrament of God into a thoughtless and headlong business or social arrangement to be dissolved almost at pleasure. Six hundred and fifty-four thousand persons divorced in this country in the last twenty years—such is the deplorable record on which Catholic and Protestant clergy are already appealing for a union of all moral agencies to resist this downward rush of the multitude.

The same influence should help check the yet more common weakening of family ties and destruction of family life. It should correct at the very root of the evil, the extraordinary development of nervous excitability that accounts for so much of our fickleness of view and instability of belief; for the frequent outbursts of general turbulence and lawlessness through whole zones of population; for the varied and incredible character of the crimes, for the amazing publicity which attends them and the ready imitation which the wide knowledge of every new crime often stimulates.

What we do is transacted on a stage of which all the universe are spectators. What we say is transmitted in echoes that will never cease. What we are is influencing and acting on the rest of mankind. Neutral we cannot be. Living, we act; and dead, we speak; and the whole universe is the mighty company forever looking, forever listening, and all nature the tablets forever recording the words, the deeds, the thoughts, the passions of mankind.—John Cumming.

God in His great mercy will have the soul comprehend that His majesty is so near that it need not send messengers to Him, but may speak to Him itself and not with a loud crying, because so near is He already that He understands even the movements of its lips.—Teresa.

LESSON VIII.

EIGHTH MONTH 23, 1903.

DAVID AND JONATHAN.

1 Samuel 20: 12-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.—Prov. 18: 24.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 17.—David in danger. 1 Sam. 20: 1-11.

First-day, Eighth mo. 23.—True love. 1 John 4: 7-21.

The time of the present lesson was about 1063 or 1024. The place was Gibeah, not far from Jerusalem. Saul was probably about 53 years old, David about 22 or 23, and Jonathan about twelve years older. It is impossible to speak with certainty regarding these data, as our knowledge is not definite enough. David had been about a year at the court of Saul, was an important officer in the army, and had married Michal, a daughter of Saul (1 Samuel 18: 17-20, 28). The story of the friendship of David and Jonathan is one of the most familiar in the Old Testament, and literature is full of allusions to it. Nowhere is there found a better illustration of true friendship.

Saul's jealousy of David increased, "and Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul became David's enemy continually" (1 Samuel 18: 29). In chapter 19 there is an account of how Saul attempted to have David killed, and how David fled for his life. Some sort of a reconciliation seems to have been arranged, for in chapter 20 we find David back at the court of Saul, but still suspicious. Though Jonathan insisted that his father had no evil intentions, David determined to put Saul to the test. How this was to be done is told in verses 5 to 10. After an earnest conversation "Jonathan said unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field." The object of this was to talk and make their plans where there would be no risk of being overheard.

12. "Jehovah, the God of Israel, be witness: when I have sounded my father about this time tomorrow, or the third day, behold, if there be good towards David, shall I not then send unto thee, and disclose it unto thee?" Amer. R. V. This is clearer than the Authorized Version.

13. "Jehovah do so to Jonathan, and much more also should it please my father to do thee evil, if I disclose it not unto thee and send thee away, that thou mayst go in peace." Amer. R. V. This, again, is much clearer than the common translation. Jonathan's adjuration ends here. The meaning is, that if he finds all is well, he will tell David; but if evil is likely and he does not tell David, then let a curse come upon his (Jonathan's) head.

14, 15. It is evident from these verses that Jonathan was convinced that David would some day be king. It was customary in the East when a new dynasty seized a throne to put all the family of the preceding monarch to death. (Compare 1 Kings 15: 29; 2 Kings 10: 6, 7; 11: 1.) Jonathan, therefore, asked David to show mercy to his family in the future. David kept this covenant with Jonathan in showing kindness to Mephibosheth. (See 2 Samuel 9: 1-13; 21: 7.)

16. This verse, as it stands, is not very clear. It seems to mean either, if David broke the covenant, Jehovah would punish him by means of his enemies, or it may be a remark of the historian saying that Jehovah would thus punish him.

17. Jonathan now asks another oath from David. He evidently wished to bind David in the strongest way possible.

18. See verses 5, 8, 25 of this chapter.

19. "Three days." According to the Hebrew method of reckoning this might be one complete day and parts of two. "The place." Possibly Bethlehem (verse 6). "The business." Either the incident related in verses 1-7 or something not recorded. "The stone Ezel." This means "stone of departure." This may have been some well-known stone, or the word may not be a proper name, for the Septuagint has it "beside this heap of stones." It was near this stone, probably in a cave, that David was to await the signal from Jonathan.

20. The arrangement was made in case Jonathan should be watched and kept from meeting David personally. "The general sense of the verse must be that Jonathan will choose some object by the side of David's hiding place as a mark at which to shoot."

21, 22. "The lad." The boy taken to bring back the arrows shot while practicing, like a "caddie" in golf. The signal was well conceived, and it was impossible for one who did not have the key to understand it. If Jonathan said, "This side," all was well, and David could return with safety; but if he said, "Beyond thee," then David must fly.

23. "The matter." The covenant of friendship mentioned in verse 16. "The Lord is between thee and me forever." As a witness of the covenant and as an avenger if it is not kept. Compare verse 42 and Gen. 31: 49, 53. The remainder of the chapter should be read, to learn how the arrangement was carried out, and how David and Jonathan parted. So far as recorded David and Jonathan only met once after this in the wilderness of Ziph (1 Samuel 23: 16).

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. True friendship is founded on the recognition of good qualities in others.
2. True friendship is unselfish.
3. Reciprocity is the joy of friendship. Prov. 18: 24, first part.

How often we cry mightily to God, as if He were far away, resident only in the starry heavens, when, if we would drop into silence we would find Him near at hand in the sweetness of our solitude.—"United Presbyterian."

LESSONS FROM PAUL: HOW TO MAKE OUR LIVES COUNT LIKE HIS.

A young woman who was being urged to use her influence to change the vote of her father who resided in an adjoining State, was asked, "What is your father? What does he do?" "He is a Quaker preacher," was the reply. "Well," said the unchristian politician who was talking to her, "You needn't say anything to him, then, for he'll vote the way he says he's going to." It is good to have the reputation that one is so sure to maintain and testify to his convictions that he can be counted on as soon as the proposition is defined.

Peter stood for one thing in the presence of Gentile Christians alone, and for another when the Jewish party appeared, and we can but feel that Paul was right to "withstand him to the face." But with which is our own record more comparable? We can learn, if we cannot glory; and the lesson of Timothy's early training and the persistent need that he stir up his gift encourages us to the effort to attain even where we are conscious of present shortcomings. If God became discouraged with us as quickly as we frequently do with one another, this would be a gloomy world. But the opportunity of the new day offers hope, and our record can be bettered as we learn to live more and more perfectly by the rule of alert faithfulness.

It is so easy to admire the grandeur of martyrdom or the heroism of a conspicuous sacrifice that we are apt to be led into a disregard for the opportunities of our own lives. We may need to be shown—not for self-satisfaction, but for encouragement—how some very quiet routine is really our contribution to a valuable result. One who is called to give up a chosen career to make possible a home for the parents' declining years has a service often much more difficult and as much more worthy of approbation than one whose work is before the public, and is thus supported by a wider sympathy and interest.

Not the deed alone, but the doing—the spirit—counts. And even a small deed done faithfully may be progenitor of undreamed of successors. One of the books of my earliest recollection was a faded, pink-covered copy of "The Dairyman's Daughter," a religious story, which, more than fifty years ago, had reached a circulation of four million copies in fifty languages. The life of Leigh Richmond, its writer, was influenced by Wilberforce's "Practical View of Christianity," and he in turn, the great champion of the enslaved negro, became a Christian from reading "The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul," written by Philip Doddridge. Doddridge was a valiant and effectual worker for Christ, having been brought to Him through the perusal of "A Call to the Unconverted," by Richard Baxter, author also of "The Saints' Rest," a book widely known after more than two centuries of usefulness. And all this tree whose branches reach to heaven had as seed a little tract written by one Richard Gibbs, a copy of which was handed by a peddler to Baxter when he was yet an unconverted lad.

WORK IN CEYLON.

[The following extracts are taken from a circular letter sent out from the mission at Clodagh, Matale, Ceylon, dated Sixth month, 1903.]

As we look back over the work here for the last six years we see in all of its details the parable of the Sower. I will not dwell upon the disappointments of "the fowles of the air," "the thorns," or "the stony places," but I shall in gratitude to, and for the glory of the "Lord of the Harvest," make mention of some of the seed which has fallen on good ground. Last month we began with three lads of from 18 to 21, the training of our own teachers. We should have had four, but one was sick, and is still not well enough to leave his village and come to Clodagh to begin his studies. These four young fellows are all the fruits of seed sowing during the early days of the Mission, and have been brought to Christ while in our schools. Three of them have, we believe, been true Christians for about four years, and have lived consistently, so we trust, with God's blessing, they will have useful lives before them, and will, in their turn, become seed sowers in the future.

E. P. Fonseka, who, some Friends will remember, joined our Mission lately, having been a Wesleyan minister for about 28 years, and who for the last five years has felt drawn to the Friends' Mission, and has come to us at considerable sacrifice of worldly prospects, has opened what we should call a Sunday School, only that it is held on a week-day, at a village called Golahauwatte, about three miles from our old location at Aluwihare. He began with boys, then girls wanted to come, so his wife and daughter began teaching them; and the older people came also. They are putting up a shed to hold the school in, with a little help from us, in one of the villager's gardens. This is the village which the Monitor in Aluwihari School lives in, and he is, I believe, a Christian, which shows how wide the influence of a Christian school is.

Last month we started another colporteur to work. His name is William Hendrick, a Sinhalese. He is chiefly supported by the British and Foreign Bible Society, but is under my charge. Stephen, our Tamil colporteur, is supported chiefly by our native Christians, those in Clodagh being at present the largest subscribers. We are hoping soon to have a Sinhalese evangelist, also supported by the native Christians, and we expect those in the other stations will then take up more of the burden; in fact, they have promised to do so.

Our two boys are greatly interested in the engine and machinery in the Tea Factory at Clodagh, which has now been working for some time, and just lately in the building of the Cocoa Store, and in the two elephants, which are working for us sometimes, carrying big stones which ten men could hardly carry, to build the retaining wall of the barbecue (a large flat place where cocoa is to be dried in the sun). I think the little people at home would be interested in seeing them too. Around the stone is put a piece of chain strong enough for the cable of a ship of 200 or 300 tons, and then a thick rope tied to that. The elephant takes this rope in his mouth, taking hold of it with his trunk to put it in, and walks away with the stone. The elephants are so careful that, though the path where they carry the stones goes through the tea, and is less than three feet wide, they have, I think, only broken one plant all the time they have been working. Though we are using these big stones which it takes an elephant to carry the wall could not be well built without lots of little stones too to fill in the spaces between the big stones and keep them tightly in their places, and these can be carried by the little boys and girls; so in God's building there is a lot of work the little people can do, and those of us who know how God answers prayer value their prayers, and Jesus, who sat over against the treasury, and saw what was put therein, still sees and knows about every gift, and rejoices when He sees children as well as grown-up people love Him well enough to do and to give that which costs them much. In God's building there are many "costly stones," and it is not always the big ones that are the most costly. The widow's mite was small, but she cast in "more than they all."

Absalom Rosenberger and wife, who have been in Whittier, Cal., for some time, have returned to their home in Oscaloosa, Iowa.

Scranton Quarterly Meeting was held at Paton, Ia., the 25th and 26th ult. Fred Coppock was present at two sessions, and definite work was done. Two young people professed conversion in the afternoon meeting on Sabbath.

Short Creek Quarterly Meeting of Friends will be held at Smithfield, O., the 15th instant. Select meeting on the day following, at 2 p.m.

Edgar S. Nickolson, of Baltimore, Md., preached a temperance sermon at First Friends' Meeting, Indianapolis, Ind., on First-day, second inst.

Thomas J. Kiphart, of Cincinnati, is expecting to attend Wilmington College and take the Biblical course. At the same time he will do religious work in nearby meetings.

Irvin and Margaret Taber, Sarah Baldwin, Isaac Kenworthy, Theodore Jessup, Brother Johnson and wife and Stella Edwards attended Pasadena Quarterly Meeting the 25th ult.

Bennet Shugart, of Jonesboro, Ind., gave three temperance lectures in Barbers Mill Monthly Meeting, Indiana, 1st and 2d instant, which were very instructive and highly appreciated by all that heard him.

President E. Stanley, while engaged in the work of increasing the endowment fund to Friends' University, attended Kansas City Meeting, Sabbath morning, the 19th ult., and dispensed the Gospel to the edification of those present.

Traverse City Friends have a public missionary meeting once a quarter in place of the regular Sabbath evening meeting. A carefully-arranged program is prepared, and the meetings are very popular. An offering is taken on these occasions for the Friends' African Industrial Mission.

W. A. Freeman and wife, Mary C., of Sheffield, Ala., visit the meeting at Mountain Home, Ala., regularly on the second and fourth Sabbaths in each month. They attended the Mountain Home Monthly Meeting on the 25th ult., and the ministry of W. A. Freeman was very helpful and encouraging.

Those wishing to attend Western Yearly Meeting who desire information with reference to board and lodging, can obtain the same by addressing Evan Hadley, Plainfield, Ind. Parties can reach Plainfield from Indianapolis on the Interurban cars, leaving corner of Illinois and Washington Streets at any hour of the day. There is no small-pox at present in Plainfield.

Western Quarterly Meeting was held at Spring, N. C., the 24th, 25th and 26th ult. The ministry of Thomas Newlin from Guilford College, and Rufus King and Thomas Anderson, from Deep River Quarter, was very much appreciated. The annual reports from the monthly meetings, together with the report of the Educational Committee show that some progress is being made in church work, and the unity of feeling and harmony of sentiment give evidence that there is a growth in the spirit of the gospel.

J. L. Spicer was with the Children's Home of Cincinnati, as superintendent of home-finding and placed-out children something more than four and one-half years. During this time he traveled 115,127 miles and put children in 615 homes. He entered upon the work of superintendent of the evangelistic and church extension work of New York Yearly Meeting the 5th instant. He expects to attend Butternuts Quarterly Meeting the 15th. His present address is at 106 Montgomery Street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Raisin Valley, near Adrian, Mich., the 1st and 2d inst. Josiah Pennington, a minister from Traverse City, Mich., was present, and his ministry, with that of the home ministers, made it a time of blessing. In the business meeting on Seventh-day the report of the trustees of Raisin Valley Seminary was an item of interest. Many improvements have been made the past year, and Professor Jonathan Dickinson, Jr., with his wife and an able corps of assistant teachers, give promise of a prosperous year of school work the coming year. On First-day afternoon an interesting and profitable Christian Endeavor meeting was held, and various topics discussed pertaining to the work.

In view of the fact that James B. Unthank and wife expect soon to leave their old home, Wilmington, O., a pleasant surprise reception was tendered them by his Sabbath School class at the home of A. S. Bailey and wife, on the evening of the 30th ult. About fifty guests were present, most of whom had enjoyed the rare privilege of being members of President Unthank's Bible class. They expressed their love for him and appreciation of his work in appropriate sentiments inscribed on the backs of calling cards strung on a ribbon which, together with a handsome leather chair, were presented by Lola Street.

In simple and heartfelt language she voiced the gratitude of the class for his earnest efforts in their behalf, and their deep regret at losing so efficient and helpful a leader.

Portland, Indiana, Monthly Meeting was held Seventh month 25th. The attendance was larger than usual, and quite a good interest manifested. The statistics for the quarterly and yearly meetings were prepared and read. The additions and losses in membership were just equal, leaving the membership 448; two meetings had a net gain of 21; one meeting and two unorganized neighborhoods the same number of net losses. The total accessions and total losses were 32. The local meeting at Pike gained 3 and lost 3. Total, 75. The Friends at Portland are repairing their meeting house by giving the outer wood work much-needed paint, replacing loosened slate and re-papering the inside. The Ladies' Aid Society has reorganized and is at work to furnish some of the needed finances. The meetings all appear to be revived and manifest a good degree of spiritual life.

Eleanor Wood sailed from Montreal on the steamer "Ionian" on the 25th ult., for Liverpool, thence to York, England. She is to attend the Summer School at Birmingham, in which she is to read a paper on "Social Settlement Work in Chicago." She is then to take up work as "Social Secretary" at the Rowntree Cocoa Works at York, working among the employees for their social elevation. As her father, S. Adelbert Wood, was taking her to the train at Adrian, Mich., en route to Montreal, Fifth-day evening, the 23d ult., they were attacked by two highwaymen, one of whom seized the reins and tried to tip the buggy over. Meanwhile the other man hit S. A. Wood twice on the back of his head. But for her screams and the providential coming of another buggy, which frightened the men away, the results might have been serious. Although the wound on S. A. Wood's head was quite severe, no lasting injury was sustained.

MARRIED.

COPELAND—BARRETT.—At Spiceland, Ind., Eighth month 5th, 1903, Albert Luther Copeland and Alice Hiatt Barrett. They will be at home at the Indiana Boys' School, Plainfield, Ind., after Ninth month 1st.

TABER—CLARKE.—At the Friends' Meeting House, Milton, N. Y., Seventh month 29th, 1903, Charles Russell Taber, son of Solomon B. and Kate A. Taber, and Helen Birdsall Clarke, daughter of Edgar M. and Caroline H. Clarke.

DIED.

BARRETT.—At her home, Milton, N. Y., Seventh month 17th, 1903, Margaret Barrett, aged 73 years. She was for many years an esteemed and useful member of Milton Meeting.

DILLON.—At his home at Northbranch, Kan., First month 25th, 1903, Dillon Haworth Dillon, in the 57th year of his age. The deceased was a minister and was active in his home meeting until death. A few years ago he attended London Yearly Meeting and visited Egypt and the Holy Land.

HUNT.—At the home of his daughter, Mattie Hadley, Northbranch, Kan., First month 23d, 1903, Asa Hunt, aged 72 years. He was a Friend and an earnest Christian.

MABBS.—At Deadwood, South Dakota, Sixth month 22d, 1903, Eliza Mabbs, in her 80th year. She was a minister in Deadwood Monthly Meeting of Friends, and was one of the prime movers in establishing and maintaining the meeting. She was active in reform movements, having done much in the anti-slavery and temperance work. Evangelistic and missionary efforts claimed her attention in later years. She was thrice married: First to Elias H. Heacock, in 1843; then to Francis L. Frantz, 1851, and finally to Austin Mabbs, in 1893.

TALBERT.—Near Liberty, Ind., Sixth month 4th, 1903, Asa Talbert, son of Richard and Rhoda Talbert, aged 79 years. He was a lifelong member of Friends and for many years he acceptably filled the station of elder.

WEST.—At his home, near Martinsville, Clinton County, O., Sixth month 28th, 1903, James H. West, aged 82 years. He was a lifelong member of Newberry Monthly Meeting of Friends, Ohio.

WILSON.—At the home of Robert and Eunice Wilson, near Fairmount, Ind., Eighth month 2d, 1903, Russel Dean, son of Paxton and Amanda D. Wilson, in his fifth year.

Events and Comments.

Canada's population now stands about 5,500,000, and her foreign trade per capita is more than twice that of the United States.

King Edward declares, in answer to an inquiry, that he will feel just as much honored when his health is drunk in water as when it is drunk in wine, and that he will be glad if his sentiments in this matter are made known privately. This is good sense, and will no doubt help conscientious teetotalers to combine loyalty to principle with loyalty to their king.

The shrinkage of over one and three-fourths billions of dollars in the estimated wealth of Americans during the last few months is checking lavish expenditures for banquets, dress, jewelry and other extravagances which were becoming a discredit to the nation and an injury to its people. This is a large item to the credit side in the great decline of stocks.

The "Times" correspondent at Odessa says that vast crowds, estimated at between 500,000 and 600,000, flocked to Saroff to witness the canonization of a monk known as Saint Seraphin. The newspapers publish marvelous tales of the miracles performed at the Saint's shrine, the blind made to see, the lame to walk, and the infirm cured of incurable ailments. Intense religious enthusiasm seems to prevail.

The special train bearing Henry P. Lowe, Chief Engineer of the United States Steel Corporation, recently completed a run from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a distance of more than 3,200 miles, in 73 hours and 21 minutes. The time from Chicago to Los Angeles was 52 hours and 51 minutes, an average speed of 42.7 miles an hour, including all stops. This run clips 5 hours and 5 minutes off all previous records.

The first practical test overland of the Deforest wireless telegraph system was made last week. Signals were received at Cleveland from Buffalo, 180 miles distant, three-fourths of this distance being overland. The experiments extended over a period of several hours, the communications received consisting of cipher and the wireless code messages. The messages received were sent a longer distance overland than had heretofore been accomplished.

Government reports show that 5,217,000,000 pounds of sugar, valued at more than $100,000,000, were brought into the United States in the fiscal year just ended. Adding to this enormous importation 600,000,000 pounds as the domestic production, would give a total sugar supply of 5,817,000,000 pounds for the year, or sufficient to furnish an average of seventy-two pounds for each individual in the United States, estimating the present population at 80,000,000.

Western railroads running out from Chicago have for some years sold a 1,000-mile mileage ticket for $20, good on any lines within the passenger association of that region; but it has been accompanied by such restrictions regarding purchase and use as to cause much complaint. Now the Chicago Great Western road plans the issue of a mileage book of its own at the two-cent rate on which anybody besides the purchaser can ride, and the effect of the step will be to compel the general adoption of such a ticket by western roads.

The consumption of spirits of all kinds increased 9,615,820 gallons during the past year, and the consumption of fermented liquors increased 2,171,898 barrels over the previous year and 9,157,427 barrels over the consumption of 1898. Tax receipts from tobacco during the past year amounted to $43,514,810, a decrease of $8,423,114 as compared with the previous year; but the number of cigars smoked during the year reached the enormous total of 6,786,390,533, an increase over the previous year of 682,823,268; and the number of cigarettes smoked during 1902-1903 was 3,031,893,732, an increase of 388,931,788 over 1901-1902.

Secretary Root refuses to accept the resignation of three young lieutenants of the artillery unless they give better reasons for desiring to leave the service than a mere desire to engage in other pursuits. The government, according to the Secretary, is entitled to the benefit of the services of officers who have been educated and trained by the government at considerable expense. Ten years ago young West Pointers were almost driven out of the service because of the few opportunities to employ them to advantage in a small army. Now they are denied the unrestricted right to leave it whenever they choose to resign their commissions.

Prof. Langley's ideas in aerial navigation are about to have practical tests on the Potomac River, upon which a large float has been built as a base of operations. The Langley aeroplane appears to be different from Prof. Bell's new kite structures. Both, however, dispense with gas-bags, such as Santos Dumont uses in his voyages in the air. Prof. Langley has the support of the government in his experiments, and a government appropriation has enabled him to defray the large expense attending the construction of his aeroplane and the experimental use of it on the Potomac. The professor anticipates many failures before final success is attained.

A marked increase in evangelistic work by tent meetings in cities and in places of resort is noticeable in many parts of the country. Philadelphia probably has more of this work than any other city. By request of the Presbyterian Evangelistic Committee, statistics were gathered Seventh month 26th, in all parts of this city by the chief of police and his assistants. It was found that 127 meetings were held with an aggregate attendance of about 25,000 people. These meetings were conducted by 22 organizations, representing almost as many denominations. While no exact results can be tabulated from this giving the message of the gospel to those outside the usual bounds of church work, there is evidence that it is fruitful in conversions.

Secretary Cortelyou has decided to select a limited number of women from eligible lists furnished by the civil service commission for appointment as "matrons" in the immigration service. The societies interested in the welfare of the women who come to this country without friends, and who need them sadly enough, have all protested against the unfair treatment and the summary dismissal of the women inspectors. It is unfit that men should have the only influence in respect to these women; they should have the help of those of their own sex; a fair opportunity should be given, and the women, whether called "matrons" or "inspectors," should meet assistance and support instead of the disfavor and discourtesy to which the pioneers of last spring were subjected.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, who headed the French Parliamentary arbitration group on its recent visit to London, in his letter to Foreign Minister Delcasse, sets forth the results of the recent exchanges of views in London and Paris between members of the British and French Parliaments and the leading Ministers of the two Governments relative to the settlement of the outstanding Anglo-French difficulties by arbitration and the reduction of the navies. The new policy has three essential objects: First, the conclusion of a reasonable arbitration treaty, similar to that negotiated between Great Britain and the United States, and in accordance with clause 19 of The Hague International Arbitration Convention; second, a reduction in the overwhelming naval expenses, in agreement with France and Russia, concerning which the Baron claims to have received categorical verbal and written assurances; third, a friendly settlement of the outstanding differences which, for twenty years, have vainly exhausted the resources of diplomacy.

Sixty-three out of sixty-four cardinals participated in the election of Leo XIII.'s successor. Ceremonial preparation for the task having been perfected, on Eighth month 1st, the formal, secret balloting began, and on the 4th inst., on the seventh ballot, Cardinal Joseph Sarto, Patriarch of Venice, was elected. He was born in Treviso, Sixth month 2d, 1835, and hence is well on in years. Most estimates of him which have been volunteered by those who have speculated on the succession have described the new Pope, who has chosen the name of Pius X. as that by which he hereafter will be known, as an opportunist, a man of tact and prudence, fairly liberal in his views, correct in his manner of living, and unusually popular with Italians. His relations with the Italian Government have been more cordial than have those of most of the Italian cardinals, and his election presumably betokens the coming consummation of a thorough understanding between the Vatican and the Quirinal. He has scholarship, preaching power and administrative skill.

The speculative manipulation of the market here, aided by short crops, is stimulating cotton production abroad. England, Germany and France have been experimenting in cotton culture in their colonies, and associations have been formed in each of these countries to secure economic independence with respect to this important product. American cotton experts have been shrewdly selected to examine the colonial field and determine what shall be done. A large fund has been raised by the British Cotton Growing Association for experiments, and the Colonial Office is actively co-operating in the movement. The German Government is operating on

A BACK NUMBER,

The Milk and Egg Diet.

Starving the patient who has a sick stomach is an out-of-date treatment and no longer necessary with the predigested and nourishing food Grape-Nuts that the weakest stomach can handle and grow strong upon.

There is plenty of proof of this: "I had suffered from stomach trouble for six years, and for most of the last two years had been confined to my bed, the trouble having become chronic in spite of the very best medical attention. I had always been a coffee drinker, but for the past year I could not drink it at all because it made me so nervous I could not sleep, and my appetite was almost entirely gone.

"Then some friend advised me to try the predigested food Grape-Nuts, and about three months ago I did so and since that time my improvement has been so rapid that my customers and friends are astonished, and every day some one remarks upon my changed condition. I have gained 15 pounds, sleep well, my appetite is good and my digestion is perfect. Where I have lived on milk and light diet for years I now eat most anything I want and don't suffer any inconvenience, either. The way Grape-Nuts food has built up my stomach and strengthened my nervous system particularly is just wonderful.

"I drink your food-drink Postum, too, and no longer feel the want of coffee. There is absolutely no doubt that leaving off coffee and using Grape-Nuts and Postum has brought me out of my bed from an invalid back to fine health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and that reason is plain to any one who will spend a few minutes investigating in the interest of health.

the same lines. The American experts report that cotton can be produced in the German West African colonies in great quantities, and that only capital is required for the development of the industry. The French manufacturers have founded a Colonial Cotton Association, and are about to send an expedition to the Soudan and the Valley of the Niger to study the conditions of cotton culture there. It will be some years, however, before the industry can be developed in these new fields sufficiently to bring about any great change in the markets of the world.

MORE WORK FOR INVENTORS.

With wireless telegraphy to stimulate the mind,

We ought to set to work at once, nor rest until we find

A lot of undiscovered things to amplify our joy.

And do away with many cares that bother and annoy.

A trackless railway route would save a mountain of expense,

A boatless line of steamships, too, would surely prove immense;

And let some mind evolve for us a go-less kind of go,

So we can travel round the world, yet stay at home, you know.

And since it costs so much to live, we scarce can save a cent,

A foodless dinner is the thing some genius should invent;

And after that, if we would have existence truly cheap,

Some grand philanthropist should make a bedless kind of sleep.

To-day the trouble is that things are as they have to be,

Whereas we'd rather have them as we'd rather have them; see?

(These verses seem so tangled that the author here explains It's all because they're fashioned from a brainless kind of brains.)

"A SUMMER FAIRYLAND."

To those who are planning a summer outing and seeking "green fields and pastures new," some place where they may cast care aside and commune with primitive nature, where, though the sun shines ever brightly, cooling breezes always blow, and great heat is unknown, it is safely promised that among the rocks and lakes of the Muskoka district, about 100 miles north of Toronto, situate in the Highlands of Ontario (1,000 feet above sea level), they will find enchantment.

Handsomeness, illustrated, descriptive publications will be sent free to any address on application to Mr. F. P. Dwyer, E. P. A., G. T. Ry., 290 Broadway, New York.

No man should be entrusted with power who will not use it for some good.

*Speak, Father—in the awful stillness speak,
Speak human-wise to one so human-weak;
For if I look above the sky is dumb,
Or to the nearer Earth, there is but hum
Of other souls as freighted with the sense
Of their despair, of Thine omnipotence, Beyond, Beyond.*

*Thou canst content the nestling in the nest;
Or if disquietude be Thy behest,
Teach me to see those beacon lights afar,
Where the Amens of mortal longings are!
So to keep constant watch, nor find my soul
Turning forever to some new-found goal
Beyond, Beyond.*

*Find it I cannot. Lead me through the dark!
Suffer the outstretched Angel of the Ark,
Close at the end, to lean o'er me and say:
"He whom thou seekest is Himself the way!
Dimly through earth fogs thou hast sought Him—See How on the other side He waits for thee
Beyond, Beyond."*

Castile soap is supposed to be made of olive oil, hence its presumed purity. Some Castile soap is made of olive oil and some is not. Some Castile soap is good and some is bad. In purchasing you can not tell which kind you are getting.

In buying Ivory Soap you are always getting a vegetable oil soap of known purity. It is also more attractive in form, lathers more freely and is therefore more convenient to use.

EDITORIAL LETTER.

I HAVE shared so much with the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND during these last ten years, that I must share with them now the unutterable grief which has fallen upon me. My dear little son, my only child, has been taken. Every parent knows, through bitter experience, or by the thought of such a possible calamity, what those words mean; but after all every sorrow, when it comes, has its own peculiar depth and is unlike any other in the world. Our two lives were woven all together. For years I had been to him father and mother both. We prayed our simple prayers together, and we were always thinking of each other and planning for each other. It had never seemed that one could go on living without the other. Of all the influences which have come upon me since my mother's, none have so changed and shaped my life as has the influence of this boy, with whom I have learned what fatherhood, both human and divine, must mean.

And now the beautiful life which has so marvelously blessed me has gone beyond my reach and sight, and I must go on trying to live without the daily joy of it. I am deeply versed in sorrows. I have sounded many hard experiences which have left wounds that no lapse of time can cure. But no other suffering makes this last suffering any easier. It only makes life ever more mysterious and unfathomable. The one comfort which breaks out through the dark is the overwhelming sense of God's love. It has been steadily growing more real through all these years of struggle and pain, and now in the moments of crushing loss it blazes out like a new star in the sky. I have lost much and I have been sadly stripped, but I have found God. I know Him as one knows a lifelong friend, and it is this which makes life still endurable; yes, much more than endurable—really good. I shall have two persons' work now to do, though I can but imperfectly do what my little companion, with his love of everything beautiful, might have done, but through the years that are left there must be no slackness in showing the infinite love and goodness of God which we have learned together. He knows it now face to face. I see it dimly, but enough to take a lifetime to tell.

I am not sure how long I shall be able to go on with THE AMERICAN FRIEND work. I have a burning passion to serve our branch of the Church. I drew in a love for it with my mother's milk, and every year the love for it and the desire to serve it have grown. The greatest issue in the world to-day is that between spiritual Christianity and formal, traditional religion. Friends ought to be in the forefront with shoulders together, but they are not at all awake to the real battle. They are hardly aware that the trumpet of advance has sounded. Our little differences and contentions seem very petty to one who sees all the time before his eyes the great world issues and who wants to speak his straight ringing word for the truth. If Friends could be brought to enter really into the work of to-day, and could be lifted to their old-time devotion to making spiritual Christianity prevail in the world THE AMERICAN FRIEND would be the best field of service one could wish, but alas such a hope is so slow of fulfillment, and the ten years of work have produced such meager results! But this is certain, whether through these pages or in some other way, my life, baptized in sufferings and taught by fellowship with Him who suffered for us all, is henceforth to count as far as it can in making the religion of Jesus Christ a power in men's lives and in the world.

THE MEASURE OF A LIFE'S WORK.

IN all our undertakings, whether with the purpose of earning a livelihood or of contributing something to the progress of society, the question of the effectiveness of methods seems most vital. It is in large part because men have not agreed what is the best and surest way to overcome evil that so much still exists. We pray for the coming of the kingdom of God because Jesus taught us that petition. Some specific forms of the evil which hinders its coming were condemned by Him while on earth; others have sprung up in the newer developments of society, but all come under the same rule. We must oppose what opposes Him. When it is once seen that there in an antagonism, there is no room for choice. But we will still consider the questions, What is practical? What methods will be effective? How will results be most surely and promptly secured?

The temptation is to be impatient of slow processes. We desire a finished work. We like movement and recognizable achievement. One man will yield to this impulse and circumscribe his life with a circle of small radius, that its completeness may be early realized. Another's life moves on so far ranging an arc that obviously it will never return upon itself. His work will never seem complete; but he has traveled on a gradient that leads up to the eternal verities, a real Jacob's ladder, on which the angels of God ascend and descend. In some such way as this, perhaps, does the point of view of the politician differ from that of the reformer. Garrison and Phillips seemed for a long time to be making far less progress than the compromisers on the question of the restriction of slavery. To-day their work is built into the constitution of every commonwealth of the union, while the compromise laws are as obsolete as hieroglyphics.

Problems of society touch every citizen. Some seem far from solution, yet the side of righteousness is unmistakable. Can I justify myself in such case by saying that another generation will have to settle this, that I must work where I can see results? No one man is bound to perfect the social, economic and moral adjustments and maladjustments of to-day; nor is it necessarily to his best interests to affiliate with the most popular religious organization; neither is it required of him to cast his ballot with an office-filling political party. What is required of him is to apply the rules of Christian living to these and all other questions that confront him. The Christian is bound to be convinced that Christianity is the true philosophy of life here and hereafter, and that no department of life is exempt from its influence. To choose to do less than to seek the establishment of the kingdom in its entirety is like choosing to build a hovel because one can complete it in a month, when the opportunity is offered to build a few stones into an imperishable temple whose completeness will appear only to coming generations.

Moses endured as seeing Him who is invisible. Isaiah describes the heavenly Canaan as "a land of far distances." The measure of an effective life's work may well be the standard set by One who could see beyond meager apparent results, beyond what His enemies reckoned an ignominious defeat, to a victory that increases with the passing years, because His work was based on the changeless principles of uncompromising right.

EARLY QUAKERISM AN EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN.

V.

THE GROWTH OF QUAKERISM.

That early Quakerism was evangelical in spirit and action has already been shown; that it was a movement of more or less power and efficiency has also been hinted at, and may be inferred from the previous discussion. To make this latter point clear, however, and to further substantiate the fact that Quakerism was truly a great movement it is necessary to examine in a general way the results accomplished by their strenuous activity, a description of which has been given in a previous section. For the sake of simplifying the discussion these results will be examined from two standpoints, first the work in England and second the work in other countries.

(1.) The Movement in England.

That there was great activity in England on the part of the Friends during the first half century of their existence has already been made evident. That this activity brought definite and abundant results can be shown by the study of a few statements. George Fox began to preach about 1644, commencing his itinerant missionary ministry about four years later. From his own pen there is found a statement which best summarizes the work of these early years: * "The truth sprang up first to us so as to be a people to the Lord, in Leicestershire in 1644, in Warwickshire in 1645, in Nottinghamshire in 1646, in Derbyshire in 1647, and the adjacent counties in 1648, 1649, and 1650; in Yorkshire in 1651, in Lancaster and Westmoreland in 1652, in Cumberland, Durham and Northumberland in 1653, in London and most of the other parts of England, Scotland and Ireland in 1654." These facts give an idea of the scope of the work geographically. They would mean very little as signifying growth, were it not possible to fill in the enumeration of these places with figures or estimates of the response which such activity met, for otherwise they might mean simply that Fox went alone to these different counties, all of which he might have visited in those ten years, and preached without getting any remarkable results. Such, however, was not the case. His message met with response on every side. Meetings were held in which multitudes of people came together. Thousands during that time accepted the gospel he preached. Many became ministers and some began an itinerant ministry similar to that which Fox was carrying on himself. In 1652 there were twenty-five of these traveling preachers; in 1653 the number was increased to thirty, and in 1654 sixty ministers were going up and down the country preaching. Soon after this seventy-three preachers were traveling at one time. The people who were reached through this means naturally came together, and very soon meetings were formed. Fox devoted much of his time after the earliest years in establishing meetings and caring for the government of the Society. By 1654 most of the Friends in Northern England had settled meetings. In the year 1716 there were not less than four hundred meetings of Friends in Great Britain. As to membership, in 1678 there were ten thousand Friends in the city of London. At the end of the century it is estimated that there were sixty thousand members of the Society in England and Wales. * Robert Barclay speaks as follows in reference to the increase of the early years: "Then probably no Dissenting Church was increasing its membership so rapidly or attracting so large a number of the public to its gatherings. John S. Rowntree has computed that in 1660 one in every 130 of the population was a member of the Society of Friends."

* "Journal," Vol. II., p. 251.

The rapid growth of Quakerism is further substantiated by a study of the feeling in the nation at that time. This feeling may be illustrated by the following quotations which are isolated instances of great masses of material bearing on this subject. The treatment of the Quakers often came up as a subject for discussion in Parliament, and Burton's "Parliamentary Diary" gives a reflection of these discussions. From the discussion of December 18th, 1656, the following will illustrate the point in question: † "Alderman Tigh: 'I have received a letter from Dublin desiring me to represent unto you the growing of the Quakers there.' Colonel Coker said he had a letter to the same purpose from Dorset. . . . Alderman Foot proposed that all these petitions might be referred to the same committee, for they increase in other places, and ought to be taken a speedy course with."

"Lord Chief Justice Glynn: 'It is high time to take a course with them, . . . for they grow to a great number.'"

‡ "Sir Christopher Pack: 'Though you have no petition from London, yet ye are no less infested with them than other parts of the nation.'"

The following from the "Diary" ¶ on a discussion which took place May 5th, 1657, reveals the feeling against this growing people: "Major-General Desbrowe: 'There is a short Bill before you touching vagrants, which is engrossed. I am informed out of Somersetshire, that a sort of people called Quakers did meet in meetings there, and for want of a Bill there might be danger in it.'"

"Mr. Barupfield: 'I am informed from my county (Devonshire) that Quakers grow numerous and dangerous, especially toward the sea-coast.' . . .

"Sir Christopher Pack: 'I move that the Bill be read, for if there is not a speedy course taken with them, they will grow to a great height.'"

Turning from the opinions expressed in Parliament, a quotation from a pamphlet of the time dated 1656, and one from Richard Baxter will serve to illustrate the feeling of the religious elements in England in reference to the spread of Quakerism.

* "But of all the enemies of Truth in this age none are more proud and wicked (though extremely ignorant) perverters thereof than that generation of men called Quakers, who seem the most numerous and prevailing party of all the rest." Again speaking of their work, he says, "Some that once go to hear them are hardly kept back from being their disciples."

† "Baxter said that the Quakers 'empty the churches of the Anabaptists and Separatists—the young, unsettled—and those who have no religiousness,' and 'therefore I would do all that I can to hinder such an emptying of their churches as tendeth to the more certain filling of Hell.'"

From the State papers of 1660 come such phrases as these, which testify to the same feeling: "Anabaptists and Quakers swarm in every corner of the country." "They are still forced to raise trained bands for the safety of the city, which abounds with Quakers and Anabaptists."

The feeling throughout the nation on the part of those who were not in sympathy with Quakerism was one of grave apprehension and fear. Of the numerous religious sects of the time this was one which on account of its rapid growth seemed to these people to threaten the existing forms of religious belief and worship.

The Quaker uprising was beyond all question a great movement, so great indeed that many careful students of history are coming to believe that in view of the population of England at that time it equalled in importance and effect the great Wesleyan movement which swept over the country in the next century.

(2.) The Movement in Foreign Countries.

The early Quaker believed that the message he had received was universal in its scope. It necessarily followed, if this belief was sincere, that he should manifest it in some way by endeavoring to proclaim his message to all men, irrespective of racial or geographical distinctions. Beginning with one man, it has been shown how Quakerism naturally reached out to others whom it could touch. Beginning with one location, a limited section of England, it extended in ever widening circles until the whole of England, Scotland and Wales were touched by the influence of Quakerism. In keeping with the import of his message the Quaker did not stop with the limits of his homeland, but with a naturalness which revealed the true missionary spirit he passed beyond the seas to other lands and different people. This movement abroad began about ten years after the beginning of the Society. * "In 1655," says Fox, "many went beyond sea, where truth also sprang up, and in 1656 it broke forth in America." In 1655, Mary Fisher and Anne Austin, two Quaker preachers, arrived at Barbadoes. During the next year they went to New England. In 1658 two women started for Egypt to proclaim the gospel in Alexandria. They distributed books in Italy, and arrived at the Island of Malta, where they preached, and as a result were imprisoned for three years. John Stubbs, Henry Fall and Richard Castrap, in 1661, started for China. They went to Holland because they were refused passage from England. Failing again to secure passage for China, John Stubbs and Henry Fall embarked for Alexandria, intending to go by caravans from there. They were driven out of Alexandria by the English consul, and after preaching among the Turks and Grecians returned to England. Thus did the missionary spirit drive these people forth until France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Italy, Venice, Turkey, Egypt, the West Indies and North America heard the Gospel from the lips of Quakers before the death of George Fox. So remarkable was the growth and development of the meetings abroad that in the year 1689 London Yearly Meeting held correspondence with twenty-six yearly meetings scattered in all parts of the world.

The spirit manifested by these missionaries was similar to the spirit which was shown by the early preachers at home. The effort (mentioned above) put forth by John Stubbs and Henry Fall to reach China is a case in point. Another illustration of this spirit is seen in the story of how Quakerism was introduced into New England. It has been claimed by some that Quakerism began in America through the lives and preaching of those who came out here not primarily to preach the Gospel, but to profit by trade or to avoid the persecution to which the Society was subjected in England. The reverse of this, however, is the truth. Anne Austin and Mary Fisher were the first two Friends who came to America, and they came for the express purpose of promulgating their conception of the Gospel; in other words, to convert the Puritans and bring them to a true spiritual conception of Christianity. This is shown not only from the knowledge of their work as history records it, but also from the declaration of the Council, in Boston, July 11th, 1656, which Council convened for the purpose of passing judgment upon the Friends. The statement referred to is as follows. † "They do also acknowledge that they came here purposely to propagate their said errors and heresies, bringing with them and spreading here sundry books, wherein are contained most corrupt, heretical and blasphemous doctrines, contrary to the truth of the Gospel here professed among us."

The second company of Friends which came to New England came likewise to preach the Gospel as their own words testify. * "They had been brought here in the will of God, having been made sensible of the cries and groans of His seed, which was crying out unto Him for help and deliverance under cruel bondage." The treatment received by the Friends in America was even worse, if possible, than that which they received in England. The first few companies were returned after severe suffering to the mother country, and shipmasters were forbidden, under penalty, to bring any Quakers to New England. So great, however, was the zeal of these people, that many of the very ones who had been persecuted and cast out of New England banded themselves together with others, and, building their own ship, brought again the Gospel to the land which had rejected it before, and this in the face of the severest kind of persecution.

The missionary spirit of those who went abroad was no less a characteristic of the Church at home. The Friends were a missionary Church, and their great aim was the spread of the Gospel in its essential spiritual nature to all nations. The missionary Church of to-day manifests its interest mainly in two directions aside from the producing of missionaries—first, in a prayerful concern for the work abroad, and second in giving for the support of that work. These two things characterized the early Friends. In their general assemblies much time was spent in considering the work of their brethren "beyond the seas," and there is abundant evidence to show that they practiced method and liberality in the financial support of the workers abroad.

Thus abroad and at home early Quakerism attested by the scope and greatness of its development the genuineness of its evangelical characteristics in their efficiency, and thereby laid rightful claim to the title "Evangelical Movement."

THE PLACE OF RELIGION IN OUR COLLEGES.†

BY RUFUS M. JONES.

In the period of mediæval faith the devout Christian believed he could glorify his God in the highest way by piling up marvelous Gothic cathedrals, with airy spires and carven saints. In the new world the aspiration of faith found a new outlet for devotion. Instead of cathedrals our men of faith built colleges. The oldest institution in the land still bears the motto which its founders gave it, "For Christ and the Church." The foundations of all our colleges were laid with prayer, and the inspiration of religion built them. They were built to make men, through whom a fuller light of truth could shine than had ever been in the holy place of shrine or temple. They were built to produce effective citizens both of the earthly and the heavenly commonwealth.

Even beyond the expectation of its founders the American college has proved an incalculably potent factor in the development of manhood, in the widening of the intellectual horizon, in the creation of ideals, and in the formation of sinewy moral fiber. In a thousand ways it has done yeoman service in the making of America. But we must admit at once that it has not taken its true part in the religious training of the race. It has put sufficient emphasis on the development of the body and the culture of the mind, but it has not dealt wisely or greatly with spiritual development. As Josiah Royce has said, "No other great issue of life has been so badly managed as has religion."

A man is only a part of a man, even after his body is at its best and his mind has been informed with facts and trained to interpret them. The true end of education is not knowledge, but character, personality, power to make one's life count. Education has missed its aim if it has discovered how to do only the former service and blunders in the presence of the final task.

Religion is as much a fact of human history as civil government is. It is one of the most controlling and determining facts which a student can ever face. But it has almost no place in the college curriculum. The most influential book which now is or ever has been in the world is practically ignored in the college course. The literature of Greece and Rome, of France and Germany, of the ancient and the modern Anglo-Saxon peoples, is carefully studied. The Bible, which contains the sifted literature of a race which has influenced the world certainly not less than Greece or Rome is left to volunteer Y. M. C. A. classes, is read publicly in little blocks cut out of their connection, and is practically never made to live again in the thoughts of the students as the poems of Homer, Shakespeare and Goethe do. The college is the only place where the Bible can be properly studied, and it ought to take its place in every such institution along with the other great departments of human learning. Christianity, again, is a fact. It is the supreme fact of civilization. No man's education is finished until he knows at least as much about the rise and significance of Christianity as he knows about the combination of elements in chemistry, or the reduction of quadratic equations in mathematics.

And now to-day the college is face to face with a new duty, which it cannot dodge and which it must take up calmly and reverently. The development of science and of historical investigation has raised questions which have brought perplexity to all serious-minded men and women who cherish the faith of their fathers. Those who think at all are asking questions which they must be helped to answer. If the college is to teach what its learned men have discovered, if it is to take its students fearlessly wherever truth leads, then it becomes an imperative duty of the college to show them how they are to interpret the spiritual legacies of the ages in the light of these new discoveries, and how they are to adjust the facts which they learn to the faith by which they are to live and die.

This work is too large to be done in twenty-minute sermons on one day of the week. More and more the work of the Church is growing practical. To the Church belongs the task of carrying Christianity into the lives not only of its own members, but also into the fiber of the community. Its work is to call men to positive decision and to make Christianity an actual living force in society. As the Church rises to these clear duties, the great work of religious education, the work of training persons through the truth, will devolve upon the colleges.

It has slowly dawned upon men that truth is a unity, an organic whole. It cannot be cut apart into fragments. The institution which teaches the laws of nature, the facts of history and the ideals of literature must go farther and show how all its branches of truth converge, how each aspect of life throws its light on the whole of life, and how the facts in all the departments of knowledge call for an attitude of heart and will, as well as a theoretical interpretation. The tremendously important work of showing that the religious life is grounded in eternal reality, and has as solid a foundation as the laws of nature and mind will in the future be one of the duties of the college, for this is a work which from the nature of the case cannot be satisfactorily done by the Sabbath School or in Church services and only partially in the home.

A high spirit of patriotism has always prevailed in our colleges, and every national crisis has found shining examples of daring, of sacrifice and of devotion in our halls of learning. To-day we are moving toward a crisis which is all the more serious that it does not come with the roll of drum and challenge of war. The selfishness of labor and capital, the gathering of power of sordid commercialism, the prevailing heresy that the first article in the creed is "I believe in the power of money." All these things call for men who kindle with passion for the higher ideals of life. Dooley has shown his fine irony in dealing with the materialism of our time. "What has it done f'r the wurr'd?" says he. "It's done ivry-thing. It's give us fast ships and an autymatic h'ist for the hod, and small flats, and a taste iv solder in our peaches. If anybody says the wurr'd aint better off thin it was, tell him that a masheen has been invinted that makes honey out iv pethrolyum. If he asts ye why there aint any Shakspeare to-day, say: 'No, but we no longer make sausages be hand.'" It is better for a country to lose some of its territory than to lose its ideals, to have its borders contracted than to have its spiritual outlook narrowed.

The situation now before us calls for persons who have had the whole quality of their lives raised and exalted by the years of their college work, so that they will approach all the problems of life, whether civic or social, with a devoted purpose to serve. Our new volunteers must go out with a patriotism which is rich and redolent with a faith in the things of the Spirit. But such faith does not drop out of the clouds into men's lives. It must be nourished and cultivated, fed and watered. It must be fostered with the same patient care which is now bestowed to produce the scientific spirit.

In a word, my claim is that the college must deal with the whole of life. It shall not be allowed to become a place for training football champions alone, and men "whose spirit works lest arms and legs want play." Nor again shall it become a mere place for fashioning the subtle skill of intellect, whose soul task is to think, and think, and think. Nor, again, is it to be a place for training practical money-getters, for teaching the secrets of manipulating the great material forces for personal ends. No, it was not founded for that! It was the college which taught us that life is an organic whole, and that every part must function to its full; it must now take up the practical work of developing and training every part of the being. A man who has received no clear intimation of spiritual realities, and who has not learned that life is more than meat and more than thought has not had a fair nurture in the truth. We want no scholar who has not grown in reverence. We want no college which is not consecrated to the task of making its students feel the worth of goodness and the value of a completely fashioned character, and that demands a college which gives religion its true place among the other forces which constitute the whole of life.

LETTER TO A YOUNG FRIEND LEAVING HOME FOR SCHOOL.

My Dear Friend:—A good many years ago I did what you are doing now. Since then things have changed a little in our American schools and colleges. The term opens later in the fall and closes earlier in the summer. Students' rooms are finer and warmer. "Entrance requirements" are larger and stiffer. Tallow candles have gone out, electric lights have come in, and even kerosene oil has been refined to astral brilliancy. You are going to have more teachers, more elective courses, more expenses, more athletic trainers, more "modern advantages," including probably more kinds of food, than I had. But, after all, these changes do not make any real difference in the meaning of the fact that you are going away from home to get an education. Your outfit may be better than mine, and the road may be a bit smoother; but you are starting on the same journey, and you have to face the same question: What goal are you going to make for, and how are you going to travel, straight or crooked?

To answer this question rightly you must, first of all, remember that you are now a member of a privileged class. You are old enough to earn your own living. Under ordinary conditions, you would have to do it. But you are going to be exempt from that necessity, in all probability, for four years, seven years, ten years,—as long as it may need to complete your course. During all that time you will be let off from the common duty of taking part in the world's work. Even if you should do something to help pay the expenses of your education by laboring in vacation and between times, you would give far less than you would get; and the opportunity to do at least that much has been made possible only by the generous benefactions and endowments of unknown friends.

Yes, you owe it to yourself to look the fact in the eyes. You are a person set apart; a guest at the world's table; a consumer, not a producer. No one will ask you what your trade or your business is. All that will be asked of you is how you are getting on with your education. You will be permitted to devote all your time and energy to yourself, and somebody else will pay for your living.

Who is going to do this generous thing for you? Well, a good many people will have a share in it. First of all, your parents will do the greater part of it. You know something of the sacrifices and gifts that they will have to make in order that you may enjoy your years of privilege and opportunity. Then, the community to which they belong has a part, indirectly, in making it possible for them to give you an education. Then, the people who have given the money to found institutions of learning and keep them going for the sake of you and others like you, contribute directly to your benefit. Then, the great army of teachers who are spending their lives in hard work for small pay make an offering on your behalf. Finally, the State, the nation, by its appropriation of public money for educational purposes (which are all really bound together and interdependent), makes you its beneficiary.

Now, your own sense of honor must tell you, at once, that you cannot fairly accept such benefits as these without incurring great obligations. Why have these people put you into a privileged class? Why does the world, in effect, agree to pay for your living while you go on with your education? The question comes up to you.

The answer is plain and straight. The world pays for your living in order that your life, through education, may become of more value to the world. That is the essential fact, the point of honor, which you must never forget. You are taken care of and provided for during a period of years when you are (or at least you ought to be) able to provide for yourself, with the definite design that your intelligence, your character, your purpose and power of doing good work may be so developed that you may be worth more to your fellow men than you are now—and worth enough more to pay for what it is going to cost to educate you. If you accept your place in a privileged class on this condition, it is all right.

You are not an idler, a burden, a pauper. You are an investment. But if you take the privilege and refuse or dishonor the obligation, you are an object of misplaced charity, a cheat, a fraud.

What you have to do, then, is to make up your mind that you will get out of your education the thing for which it is given to you—a richer, fuller, stronger life, of which the world shall receive the benefit.

The general scheme and system of education, with the improvements suggested by experience, and the variations needed to adapt it to different individuals, is waiting for you. If you are wise, you will put yourself into it, not with flabby indifference, nor with blind resignation, but with the clear and steady purpose of making it give you just as much as possible for the training of your mind and for the increase of your power as a person and of your worth as a member of society.

Take your studies as they come, but make them count for something before they go. They will be of two kinds: those that you like and those that you dislike. Use the former to develop your natural gifts, and the latter to correct your natural defects. There is a great difference in minds. Some are first-class, some are second-class, and so on. You can never tell what kind of mind you have got unless you test it thoroughly by hard work. Even if it should appear to be second-class, do not be discouraged. A second-class mind well cultivated will yield a great deal more than a first-class mind left fallow. All that you have to do is to make your own garden (not some other man's) give the best crop of which it is capable. Examinations and grades and class-room marks are "government crop estimates." As a rule, they are fairly accurate. But, after all, it is not the estimate, but the crop itself that comes to market and feeds the world. You know what you have learned. And you have learned just as much as you know.

Make your friends with a purpose of enlarging your life, your tastes, your sympathies, your hopes. Follow your inclinations in forming acquaintances, but keep your eyes open, and see where they are leading you. Unless you enjoy a friendship it is not likely to be of much good to you. But, on the other hand, unless it really does you good, your joy in it will soon grow barren, or turn to pain. Have some friends to whom you look up, and some who look up to you. Be a grateful receiver as well as a generous giver. Let the secrets you share with your friends be such as will make you not ashamed but glad to look deeper into each other's eyes.

Play the out-of-door games that suit you and give you honest pleasure. They will suffice to give you all the physical training that you need. The object of athletic sports among amateurs is two-fold: first, to relax and amuse the mind; second, to keep the body in good condition for the real work of life—which is not athletic sports. There is no advantage in cultivating more muscle than you are likely to have any use for unless you are going to be a professional athlete. On the contrary, it is a burden and a danger. What you want is a body that will be a ready, cheerful and capable servant to your mind.

Do not starve or neglect the spiritual side of your nature. The best and wisest men of the world have all agreed that a full and noble life is not possible for a man without religion. It would be a poor outcome for you and for the world if your education should end in that half-knowledge which, as Lord Bacon says, tends to atheism. But even atheism, it seems to me, is better than the dead and dry religion which exists without praise, without good works, without personal prayer. Give your best thought, your deepest feeling, to the subject that means most—the true and immortal life that is brought to light in Jesus Christ.

A hundred questions, and some of them very perplexing, are sure to meet you as you go on with your education. Do not try to anticipate them. Do not try to answer them now. Let yourself go, with a good heart and a cheerful courage, into the course that opens before you. Take your privilege with its obligations. Let the world pay for your living now. But make sure that your education fits you to pay the world back for all you have received, in a life equipped and disciplined for fine service among men.

Fraternally yours,

HENRY VAN DYKE.

Some Views on Present Topics.

A NEW RESPONSIBILITY.

BY THOMAS NEWLIN.

With the exception of about 10,000 members, all of the 93,000 Friends in America are living and working under the Uniform Discipline, which says "Children of members are enrolled as Associate members." Not only a new responsibility is added, but a splendid opportunity is offered, by the recent study of childhood and the changed attitude toward children. This new knowledge has given a changed view of religious growth. This is to be expected, for, as the good old pastor, John Robinson, said to the Pilgrim Fathers, as they were setting sail for America, "I am convinced that the Lord hath yet more light and truth to break forth from his holy Word." Steadily the light has been breaking, and most Friends have been saying, with Whittier, "And all the windows of my heart I open to the day." How sad that any should close their hearts to light and truth, and consider them closed volumes! It has been clearly shown that children are not merely small adults. Education is a process of adjusting the individual to his surroundings, physical, mental and moral. If this is true, our problem is to adjust the children to the religious elements of life. More study is given to childhood now than ever before. As a people our work has been very deficient with the children within our reach. This may seem like a grave charge, but I believe the facts will justify it. We have depended upon birthright membership, but from this source our increase of active workers has not kept pace with the birth rate. The loss has been through negligence, indifference and ignorance. We have not been paying enough attention to the religious life of the children. The best methods of child study should be applied in the realm of religious culture. We are now forced to a new point of view. The Associate members bear a different relation to us from that of the Birthright members. This disciplinary change is no innovation or arbitrary enactment, but it is a necessary result of the onward progress of the times. The new light of psychology, and the new methods in pedagogy have forced us to take these steps. This new attitude does not depend upon the disciplinary change, but it is just as binding where there is no such law. If we fail to recognize it and to adapt ourselves accordingly, we shall lose very much in the next few years.

In the first place, then, it is necessary that we get the right notion of religion. What is it to be religious? Some of us can tell precisely what we once thought it meant. It was to wear a certain kind of clothes, speak a certain kind of language, go to certain places and abstain from going to certain others, have certain forms in worship and bear testimony against those who believe in or practice any other form. There are some people who seem to hold a similar view of religion yet. The true essence of religion is in the response one gives to the supernatural, and such response will soon pass into voluntary worship and action. The things named above are important elements in our lives, but they are never more than accidents or accessories in religion. The thought of God is a large factor in the life of every child, brought up in a Christian home, or in a Christian community, and He is ever seeking recognition. What a privilege it is to lead the child to give this response, and when this is done from the heart his language, dress, conduct and service will fall into safe channels. All other worship and service must needs be cold and formal. On the contrary, the true and humble response to God can never be formal or vain.

To teach the theological notions about Christ to young children is, in my opinion, an educational mistake. The Christ as a boy, as a young man, and as a real, historic character, is intensely interesting to children. The Christ is a man first, and something more—infinitely more—but the latter idea will come naturally to the child, after he thoroughly knows the man Christ Jesus. This is no change of theology, but a changed point of view, and a rational way of presenting the subject. Likewise, to have in our meetings for worship only forms and exercises fitted for mature minds, and for the more contemplative moods of mature minds, is both an educational and religious mistake. If we enlist our children and young people as active members, our methods and procedure in some cases will have to be changed. The changed social and economic conditions in family life in the present day have made it quite impossible to rear children now as the last generation was brought up. Whether we like all these changes or not we must live with them. We may not like railroads in certain places, or trolley cars, or automobiles, but it is much safer to keep out of their way, and make all our arrangements in full view of the fact of their existence. Isolation is now almost impossible, and the social life is the rule and the secluded life the exception.

Now, how can we utilize these surroundings for the church, and for the promotion of religious culture? Certainly the old procedure, and the old methods will not answer when so many of the relations in life are new. It is often remarked by elderly people on festive occasions that they enjoyed certain sports and recreations because the children and young people enjoyed them so much. These things were not necessary for them, nor would they personally have chosen them, but they entered into them for others' sakes, and therein found their enjoyment. Let those who are interested in the religious culture of the young take a lesson from this. In religious matters we pay relatively too much attention to adults, and think too little what the children will enjoy and what their natures demand for growth. In the Church, Sabbath School and Young People's Society we have members in all stages of physical and intellectual development. The child mind develops gradually, and his religious life falls into periods, ranging from the spontaneous period of infancy, through the intelligent questionings of youth, to the years of adolescence and maturity. These are critical periods in every young person's life; much wisdom and sympathy are needed by those who guide the young through these wandering paths. Failure in any of these stages will dwarf and stunt the whole life. Though the child finds himself weak and depraved by heredity, yet he is not born a sinner. Depravity is not sin until consciously and freely chosen. This weakness gives a tendency toward sin, and makes sin easy, but it is not sin, nor does it make sin necessary. This distinction should be clearly held in mind. We should strive to enable the child to come into his estate unprejudiced toward sin. The plan of associate membership gives a method and organic action to the free will. Otherwise we were members without our willing. I am not discussing the wisdom or folly of the change in our discipline as to membership, but only trying to show our duty as facts exist. No amount of investigation will change the great and essential fact of conversion, but we must understand what we mean by the term. We generally refer to adult conversion when the term is used, but I trust we all believe that conversion is possible and natural before the years of full moral responsibility, which comes with the dawning of adolescence. Now, there are great changes in the child's physical life before that time, and there are changes as great in his mental and emotional life during these years. If the child of tender age is taught to respond to the touch of God, he is in a state of acceptance, and will remain so as long as he responds to the will of God.

I care little for names, and perhaps we would better reserve the term conversion for the more mature changes, but the facts and states of experience will not change with names. I have here simply stated the old idea of "Infant regeneration" in the language of present thought. A thing is none the less divine because gradual, and it can only be wrought by the power and grace of God. The years between twelve and twenty seem to be nature's appointed time for the conversion of those who come to these years in negligence and waywardness. This does not mean that this is the best time for conversion. The most natural thing would be for young people to claim their inheritance near the beginning of these years, and thus come into active Christian fellowship. Fewer striking conversions will occur when the home, Sabbath School and Church fulfill their true mission.

Because we differ in temperament as well as in training, the religious experiences will be of various types. Souls differ, and the elements that make Christian character are hereditary endowments, temperament, training in habits and general surroundings. The basis of any kind of character is habit, and the basis of habit is in our physical natures. We see from this that the motor side of religious training is very important. Religious feelings arise from suitable actions. This is the only reason for the kneeling posture and reverent attitude in worship. If we lead the child to assume proper religious attitudes, the proper religious feelings will result. We need earnestly to seek for proper methods of religious activity for the early years of childhood. Much can be done in these early years to fasten the child in active Christian character, or to estrange him from the Church. The means of grace in the home, prayer, family worship, singing, social converse are all ways suited to train the growing child in religious activity, for religious feeling is a social product to a large extent. We laugh with those who laugh, and weep with those who weep. Children more than adults are imitators, and they will easily learn to do what others do in their presence. It is very important to cultivate the emotions along right lines, for any child can be taught to love good and hate evil. But the unconscious influence of the personality of the parent, teacher and minister, will have a powerful influence upon the growing child. If these, or any of them, tend in the wrong direction, the child may be led far astray in forbidden paths of sin. How we need to study these things and make wise selections. A noisy teacher will have a noisy school; irritable parents will have passionate children, more from training than heredity; an emotional preacher will have an emotional congregation, and a reverent, devout and polite parent or teacher will be copied by the average child. What kind of leaders do we need, then, for the infant classes, primary schools and children's meetings? These, with the parents, are giving the formative trend to our future church life.

This is written that we may see something of the problem before us in our church life. We must be careful and thoughtful that no traditional ideas about our church work, our Sabbath Schools or our meetings for worship, prevent us from taking good care of the children. We must remember that in normal cases the large majority of attenders in any general congregation are children and adolescents. What do they need? What will they enjoy? What will tend to fix them in love for the Church? What will aid this larger number in giving a response to the Spirit of God? These are the questions we should be asking, rather than philosophically and theologically discussing what a Friends' meeting should be. I believe in the children and the young people, and I believe the Church should spend more time in seeking to save them and to engraft them into active Christian service, than in planning to please those who are already saved and firmly fixed in Christian character.

The International Lesson.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON IX.

EIGHTH MONTH 30, 1903.

DAVID SPARES SAUL.

1 Samuel 26: 5-12, 21-25.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you.—Luke 6: 27.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 24.—David spares Saul. 1 Sam. 26: 1-12.
Third-day, Eighth mo. 25.—David's expostulation. 1 Sam. 26: 13-25.
Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 26.—Safety of the godly. Psalm 91.
Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 27.—The righteous deliverer. Psa. 37: 7-22.
Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 28.—Our duty to forgive. Matt. 5: 21-26.
Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 29.—Christ forgiving. Luke 23: 33-43.
First-day, Eighth mo. 30.—True repentance. Acts 3: 17-26.

The chapters which intervene between the last lesson and the present, record the incidents of David's flight to Nob, a little north of Jerusalem, where was the tabernacle in which the ark was kept. David here met the high priest and told him a falsehood. Psalm 52 is supposed to refer to this incident. From Nob David fled to Gath. Feigning madness he managed to escape from the Philistines. Then he took refuge in the cave of Adullam, which was about six miles southwest of Bethlehem. Here he was joined by the discontented of all sorts. Again he leaves this place of refuge and goes to the wilderness of Engedi, west of the Dead Sea. While at Engedi he spares Saul in a manner like that described in the present lesson. About this time Samuel died. David, by the unabated hostility of Saul, was compelled to continue his wandering life. The incident of Nabal, David's marriage with Abigail, and with Ahinoam, also took place at this time. How long a period is covered by these chapters is not recorded. It was probably not many months. He was now in the country of the Ziphites, which was west of the Dead Sea, in the hill Hachilah, the exact location of which is doubtful. David hearing that Saul was come in pursuit of him, sent out spies and "understood that Saul was come in very deed."

5. "And David arose," etc. After he was satisfied that Saul was in the neighborhood. "Abner" was a first cousin of Saul and a brave and skillful soldier and general. "And Saul lay within the place of the wagons, and the people were encamped round about him." American Revised Version. This translation is perfectly clear.

6. "Ahimelech the Hittite." He is mentioned only in this place. "Abishai the son of Zeruiah." Zeruiah was David's sister, so Joab and Abishai were David's nephews (see 2 Sam. 10: 10; 21: 17; 16: 9; 18: 2.)

7. "Saul lay sleeping within the place of the wagons, with his spear stuck in the ground at his head." American Revised Version. The spear was a symbol of authority, and was always kept near the king.

8. "To the earth with one stroke." American Revised Version. The temptation to David was great. He might well believe that Saul had been providentially given into his hand, and his nephew was ready to act for him.

9. "The Lord's anointed." The divinely appointed king. David would not allow another to do that which he would not do himself.

10. David seems to be revolving the case in his mind. His conclusion is that all must be left in the hands of Jehovah. Saul will be smitten with some sudden disease as Nabal (1 Sam. 25: 37, 38); or he will die in accordance with some fixed decree; or he will be slain in battle. "In any case David refuses to take the matter in his own hands."

11. "Cruse." A small cup or jar.

12. "No man saw it." Sentinels do not seem to have been employed. Both David and Abishai had been trained by the life they had led to become skillful spies or scouts. "Because a deep sleep from the Lord was fallen upon them." So sound were their slumbers that it was ascribed to the work of the Lord. David took these things to show that Saul had been in his power.

Verses 13-20 tell how David and Abishai went a safe distance from Saul's camp and then shouted to Abner, deriding him for his lack of watchfulness. Compare Judges 9: 7. Saul recognizes David's voice in the darkness and calls to him. David answers, affirming his own innocence by calling upon Saul to give his reasons for persecuting him. He calls attention to the spear and cruse as evidence of the truth of his statement. Saul is for the moment touched by David's words.

21. "I have sinned." He acknowledges his cruel persecution of David as a sin. Compare 1 Sam. 24: 16-21. "I have played the fool," etc. There is no reason to doubt that Saul's penitence was sincere for the moment, but it was simply sorrow, not a change of heart. It was like the drunkard who is sorry and ashamed for being drunk, and yet will drink and get drunk again.

22. David was too wise to take or send them. He felt that Saul could not be depended upon.

23. "And Jehovah will render." American Revised Version. David is expressing his confidence that Jehovah will some day recompense him for his right action. There is no boasting intended. Compare Ps. 7: 8; 18: 20.

24. A continuation of the sentiment of the previous verse.

25. Notwithstanding Saul's words, "David went his way." This seems to have been the last meeting of David and Saul.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."
2. "Overcome evil with good."
3. Penitence is not necessarily true repentance. To repent is to forsake.

TOPIC FOR EIGHTH MONTH THIRTIETH.

OUR DUTY TO THE STRANGER.

Deut. 7: 7, 8; 2 Chron. 6: 32, 33. (Home Missions.)

Second-day, Eighth mo. 24.—Not our own. 1 Cor. 7: 21-24.

Third-day, Eighth mo. 25.—"Other sheep." John 10: 14-18.

Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 26.—The stranger's Sabbath. Ex. 20: 8-10.

Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 27.—Promise to Abraham. Rom. 4: 13-18.

Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 28.—Jesus and the stranger. Matt. 25: 34-40.

Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 29.—Their share in the lamb. Ex. 12: 43-49

The day is not entirely past when men leave their homes to find freedom of worship, but the proportion of our immigrants who profess that motive is very small. Temporal prosperity and the opportunities of a free and growing country are the attractions. Why do we differ so much from other lands not crowded, and where enterprise and industry can find wide fields? Mexico and Brazil and Argentina have salubrious climate and vast domains and unexploited resources; but in them the light of Christianity has been obscured. Spiritual degradation prevails, and it is safe to say that that fact in itself answers the question why they so lack in progress within and additions from without. Without recognizing the fact, the Italian and the Pole and the German are coming to a land that is a land of opportunity because in it is spiritual enlightenment.

But our attainments are far from complete. We need home mission work to make our own people such agencies and witnesses that they shall each be an epistle read by the observant alien that works for or with him. And we need to shape every possible instrument to lay hold upon those who come to us freed for the first time from the repressions and restraints that made them practically inaccessible to Protestant influence in their own land. We need to remember that they are likewise freed from those checks and influences that operated in some measure at least to turn their thoughts toward religious considerations and observances.

Our Appalachian natives have come before us recently as much in need of religious and educational work. The sparsely-settled country district, old or new, needs to be provided for, so that those who would go a mile but will not go five may have opportunity for Bible study and for worship. And the unprecedented mass of foreign immigration settling in congested areas in our cities need "settlement work" to reach them in their homes and influence them day and night.

The Japanese gentleman who said, "What we need in my country more than any other one thing is the Christian home," spoke from his observation in America, and laid his hand upon the keystone of our structure. With the Christian home our country stands or falls. The establishment and protection and maintenance of such homes is the vast and fruitful field in which we may every one be home missionaries.

ANNUAL STATISTICAL REPORT, FRIENDS' INTERNATIONAL C. E. UNION.

PROGRESS AT THE TOKIO MISSION.

The readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND may remember that last Twelfth month the Girls' School building belonging to the Friends' Japan Mission in Tokio was destroyed by fire, the teachers and scholars escaping with little beside the clothes in which they were dressed. A small part of the furniture, desks, etc., were saved by prompt efforts of those near by, but were in a damaged condition.

The Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia, in the First month of the year, deputed its newly-elected president, Asa S. Wing, and the corresponding secretary, M. W. Haines, to go to Japan and confer with the missionaries on the field about the general aspect of the work, and its future possibilities; also to consider the advisability of rebuilding the school and dormitories.

Our friends, while thus engaged, received abundant testimonials from neighboring missionaries of other boards and from the Japanese to the valuable work heretofore done by the school, and to the wisdom in placing such a school in this location, where it seemed needed, and they all expressed the hope that it should be rebuilt. Thus encouraged, after conference with our own missionaries on the ground, the deputation felt that it would be right to proceed with arrangements and plans for rebuilding and to enlarge the accommodations of the school, as there seems to be an increasing demand for girls' education. Our friends felt much gratified to note the friendly interest expressed by other missionaries when they learned of the decision to rebuild, and they were especially grateful to Mr. Landis, of the Presbyterian Board, who lives near our mission, for his constant aid and helpful suggestions in making plans, contracts, etc., as he has had much experience in such work. The plans finally selected provide for three buildings. Of these we are informed, in recent letters, that the dormitory, built in Japanese style, to accommodate about fifty girls, with rooms for one foreign teacher and the Japanese matron, is completed sufficiently to be occupied by a caretaker. The residence for the foreign lady teachers, connected with the dormitory by a covered passageway in the second story, is already under roof. The school building, with class rooms, and an assembly room capable of seating one hundred girls, and quite separated from the other buildings, is well on its way toward completion, though, of course, inside work is yet to be finished in all. The last two buildings are of frame and built in foreign style.

By their liberal contributions to the building fund Friends have made it possible to erect these buildings, but thus far there has been no provision for furnishing and equipping the same. We hope that mention of this urgent need will be a sufficient appeal to the further generosity of those who desire the prosperity of this work in Japan.

The visiting Friends were much pleased to note that the regular branches of work at the mission were continued with but little interruption on account of the fire. They attended the monthly mothers' meeting, held at the mission residence; the several Bible classes, at the meeting house and school on First-day mornings; the afternoon First-day schools for children, held in several places and taught by the teachers and older pupils from the Girls' School; the King's Daughters and Christian Endeavor meetings, as well as the meetings for worship, held in the meeting house on First-day mornings and evenings and in the middle of the week.

The young people connected with the mission seem much in earnest in their endeavors to spread the knowledge of the gospel among their fellow men. Three of the most helpful workers in the various departments were teachers in the school and were our own graduates. One of these has since been married, but, with her husband, is hoping to spend her life in active Christian service.

The deputation attended the annual meeting held this year at Mito, Fourth month 3d to Fourth month 6th. It proved to be an occasion full of interest and spiritual blessing. About fifty or more Japanese and foreigners were in attendance. Reports were presented from the several stations, showing the progress and condition of the work in each, the number of regular and special meetings held, and the results, the First-day School work, woman's work, etc. At other sessions special topics were considered and an address on "Sabbath Observance," and one on "The Ideal Home," were much appreciated. Of course all communications were in Japanese, or if in English were translated into the language of the people. The last evening session was a mass meeting for gospel preaching, held in a large lecture hall, with over three hundred persons in attendance. The audience listened attentively to the several speakers, and at the close two or three decided in favor of Christianity, and others became "inquirers."

After the sessions of the annual meeting had closed our Friends remained a few days longer at Mito, in order to visit the mission stations and "preaching places," Tsuchiura and Ishioka, and four smaller villages, in two of which there are a few who are connected with our mission. Very precious were the meetings held with the Christians in several of these villages, and as the little company, so different as to the outward, gathered to worship the one true God whom they all wished to serve and honor, He seemed to be in their midst to bless. The four Japanese brethren on whom devolves the burden of the work of the Church are "strong in the faith," and are used of God in the upbuilding of His Church among their countrymen. They were ever ready to do all in their power for the furtherance of the spread of the gospel.

As our Friends went up and down through the land they felt that Japan was awakening as never before to the light of the gospel. There seemed to be a readiness to hear on the part of the people, but so many have never even heard of Christianity that there is yet "very much land to be possessed" for the Master. Many are ready to hear and only waiting to hear in order to accept the message of the gospel. Are we ready and willing to do our part and provide the ways and means by which our workers can send it to them?

Correspondence.

Dear Friend: I wish to call attention of Friends to the matter of Book of Meetings, and say that a large number of meetings have not yet been heard from. Early attention to the subject will not only hasten the appearance, but will lighten the labor of preparing the book. If the questions sent out by the committee are carefully answered we can soon have a Book of Meetings which will be of great value to Friends. I shall be glad to answer any questions that will facilitate the work.

Very truly,

The Bible School and Christian Endeavor Assembly of Western Yearly Meeting was in session the 11th to 13th instant at Noblesville, Ind.

Morris H. Moore, superintendent of the West Side Mission Sabbath School at Emporia, Kan., is recovering slowly from a severe spell of sickness.

John Franklin Brown, of Iowa University, and Marianna Brown, of Colorado College, are spending the summer at their old home at Carmel, Ind.

Susie Fox, a minister from Leavenworth, recently visited Friends in La Crosse Monthly Meeting, Kansas. She is laboring in evangelistic work as the way opens.

Wm. P. and Abigail Haworth, who have served in the meeting at Kansas City with success for the past three years and a half, will close their labors there with Ninth month.

Friends at Emporia, Kan., will enjoy the services of Asher Mott for another year. His address is 622 Cottonwood Street. The latest statistical report gives the membership as 315.

The County Institute Instructors of the State of Indiana recently effected a permanent organization, to the presidency of which they elected President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College.

Susan Berry Sisson, formerly of Maine, has been laboring for a few months at Paton, Ia. Several souls have been blessed in conversion and a revival spirit is manifest in the meeting.

Ex-President J. J. Mills called at THE AMERICAN FRIEND office the 14th instant on the eve of his departure for Europe. All his mail should be addressed care of Isaac Sharp, 2 Bishopsgate, Without, London, England.

William A. Freeman, of Sheffield, Ala., had two very helpful services at Mountain Home, Ala., the 9th instant. There is a great need of doctrinal teaching at that point, and his discourse in the evening was on women's ministry.

The $500 appropriated by the yearly meeting has enabled the committee of Oak Grove Seminary, Maine, to make preparations for many needed improvements. Among others is a new steel ceiling for the school room. The prospect for an excellent attendance this year is very encouraging.

George A. Barton has been asked to write the commentary on "Ecclesiastes" in the "International Critical Commentary," the commentary in which Driver's "Deuteronomy," Moore's "Judges," and Sanday's "Romans" have appeared. We understand that he has accepted the invitation.

The prospects of Spiceland Academy are brightening. New departments have been added. Excellent teachers have been secured. A new interest has been aroused. Everything seems to point to a successful year. The work of Spiceland Academy is so important that it is hoped a good endowment may be secured.

The next term at Friends School, Providence, R. I., will open Ninth month 9th. There will be no change in its teachers. Charles M. Woodman will continue as minister next year at the school. A full school is expected. The new gymnasium is proving quite an attraction. There will be two recognized ministers among the students.

A very large number greeted J. L. Spicer in his last meeting in Cincinnati. Many not Friends were present. He preached at Wilmington, O., and gave his lecture, "The Quaker of the Olden Time and His Message," at New Castle, Ind., recently. The prayers and best wishes of many go with him to his new field of labor in New York.

Nathan and Esther Frame, ministers from Caesar's Creek Monthly Meeting, Ohio, attended Friendsville Quarterly Meeting, held at Friendsville, Tenn., the 25th ult. They continued in a series of meetings for ten days thereafter. In these Christians were greatly strengthened and edified, and sinners were constrained to turn to Jesus Christ.

Pleasant Plain Academy, Iowa, is situated in a quiet village of about 300 inhabitants. There are no saloons or billiard halls in the town, while the religious surroundings are good. The school for next year has been placed under the charge of R. H. Williams, A.B. (Penn College), as principal, and Bessie Q. Smith, A.B. (Penn College), as assistant.

Muncie Friends' Meeting, Indiana, extended a unanimous expression of their desire to Charles E. Hiatt that he remain in the meeting for the ensuing year, which begins Tenth month 7th. At a recent monthly meeting the annual statistical report showed a net gain of fifteen members; additions, 43; loss, by death, 7; by certificate, 20. Total membership, 419.

D. H. Holt, principal-elect of Lowell Academy, Lowell, Kan., reports that the outlook for the coming year is quite encouraging. On account of the establishment of a county high school the attendance has fallen off considerably for the past two or three years, so that it has been difficult to maintain the Academy. W. E. Morgan will assist him the coming year.

George H. Moore, from Paoli, Ind., had very acceptable service at the meeting at Westfield, Ind., on Sabbath evening, Ninth instant. George Moore is yearly meeting superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Western Yearly Meeting.

Those wishing to attend Western Yearly Meeting who desire information with reference to board and lodging, can obtain the same by addressing Evan Hadley, Plainfield, Ind. Parties can reach Plainfield from Indianapolis on the Inter-urban cars, leaving corner of Illinois and Washington Streets at any hour of the day. There is no smallpox at present in Plainfield.

Stella Quarterly Meeting is to meet at Friends' Valley Ninth month 4th, 5th and 6th. Any one coming by rail on the Rock Island should stop at Pond Creek, O. T. Please correspond with N. Brown, Pond Creek, O. T., R. R. 1, stating whether on morning or evening train. Those coming on the Frisco should stop at Hunter, O. T. Please write Henry B. Lynes, Pond Creek, O. T., R. R. 1.

Alice Mendenhall discontinued her work in the meeting at Newberg, Oregon, after a year of faithful service. She preached her last sermons the 26th ult. On the evening of the 27th a very pleasant farewell reception was given her at the home of E. H. Woodward. After a pleasure trip up the Columbia and a few days' restful outing at the Yaquina Beach, she expects to return East.

Rufus M. Jones and wife have returned to the United States, arriving in New York the 12th instant. Their stay in England was cut short by the sad news of the death of his little son, Lowell. Excellent reports reach us through the columns of the "London Friend" concerning his work there. The sad spirit of their home-coming is echoed in the editorial letter which appears in this issue.

Levi Gregory, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work of Northern California, writes: "As requests are coming to us to go out to other places to hold religious services, and as we are now well supplied with ministers and workers, we hope soon to be able to report new fields entered. Already good work is being done at the Crittenton Mission, County Hospital, Old People's Home and Aguear Asylum."

One of the most interesting things in connection with the prospective opening of Earlham College in Ninth month is the fact that so large a number of young ministers and workers are planning to take work in the Department of Biblical Study. The college aspires to be an instrument in God's hands in aiding our young people to equip themselves for delivering the message of Quakerism during this generation.

Gilbert Farr is located for the time being in High Point Meeting, Gargen Grove, Ia., Carrie Butler, the local minister, having been called away from the meeting by the illness of her mother. In a recent letter Gilbert Farr writes: "I find an interesting company of Friends here. Not more than two or three of them had ever known Friends. The nucleus of the little meeting came out from among other denominations."

The outlook for a good attendance and a successful year were never better at Oakwood Seminary, Union Springs, N. Y. The number of applications thus far for entrance is greater than it has been at this time for many years. Lindley M. Stevens, the superintendent, and wife, are now taking their annual vacation. They will spend the greater part of the time in Canada. The matron has returned from a visit to her home in Indiana.

The Alumni of Haverford College propose to erect a cricket pavilion on Cope Field. The main room, about 20x40, will be decorated with the names of the cricket elevens from the beginning of the college, and with portraits of noted English and American cricketers. Above will be a grandstand for spectators. The principal summer improvement has been the completion of the ducts to carry heat and light from the power plant to all the buildings.

After several weeks of religious service in Westfield, Blue River and New London Quarterly Meetings, Indiana, Tilman Hobson leaves for similar service in Iowa, where he will occupy the time till Iowa Yearly Meeting, Ninth month 8th. He spent three weeks this summer in delivering gospel temperance addresses under the auspices of the temperance superintendent of Western Yearly Meeting. The Nicholson law is being enforced, and many towns are now free from saloons.

Friends' School at Chapel, Mo., taught this summer by Royal P. Bogue, was a success. Royal P. Bogue will remain as principal, and the prospects are bright for a large attendance this winter. The assistant teacher for this year has not yet been employed.

The ninth annual convention of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union was held at Earlham College, Richmond, the 28th and 29th ultimo. Earlham is a good place for Quaker Endeavorers to be; it is especially beautiful at this time of the year. The attendance was not large, but the grade of work presented throughout the convention was highly commendable. The Endeavorers of the yearly meeting seem to be thoroughly alive, and much good is certainly being accomplished for Christ and the Church, as shown by the many letters received.

Fairmount Academy, Ind., is entering upon its 18th year under favorable auspices. The endowment fund started last year has reached $13,000, and will doubtless grow materially during the ensuing year. A department of music has been made a permanent part of the school. One additional teacher has been added. Gertrude Mills, daughter of ex-President Mills, of Earlham, retires from the department of Latin, and Frances Sheppard, of Earlham, has been elected to fill the vacancy. Principal Tyler has been taking an advanced course in literature in Harvard this summer.

Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at South Starksboro, Vt., the 8th and 9th inst. A goodly number attended, considering the weather. On First-day, though raining, the meeting house was more than filled at both morning and afternoon sessions. The meeting enjoyed the acceptable services of Lindley Stevens and wife and Walter Aldrich; also of Carolina Wood, who on Seventh-day evening gave a lecture on "Our Mexican Missions," illustrated with magic lantern pictures and Mexican curio. She also gave her lecture at North Ferrisburg and Monkton Ridge.

Penn College has formed an alliance with the city Y. M. C. A., by which all students, members of the Young Men's Christian Association of the College will have the use of the splendidly-equipped gymnasium in the city. Not only this, but they are to have instruction by the physical director, a Christian gentleman, and one specially and thoroughly trained for the work. Each student entering the work will have a careful physical examination, and work prescribed according to his needs. This gymnasium is one of the best-equipped in the State and good results are expected.

This is to be a summit year at Friends' University. The closing up of the first endowment fund of $50,000 is to be completed, and the school, which has so rapidly gained a firm college rank, is enjoying an encouraging prospect. President Stanley is spending the summer in the endowment field, and Professor Jay has put forth untiring efforts in behalf of the advertising and general educational interests. The faculty for the coming year is composed of six men and five women, besides assistants, and all are persons of excellent preparation and fine talent for their respective positions.

On the 2d inst. seven new members were welcomed into the meeting at San Jose, Cal., six of whom came by their request and one by certificate. At the evening service an earnest appeal was made for the unsaved to accept Christ, and two women, past the meridian of life, came forward and sought and found the Saviour. Under a feeling that perhaps all the members had loved ones, out of the fold, a blackboard was brought into the mid-week meeting, and a prayer list was made. The board is left in a prominent place, and reference is made to the list at every meeting. Already there is a deeper interest awakened, and many feel that good results will follow.

"The Central American Bulletin" of Seventh month 15th contains the following: "Since the issuance of our last 'Bulletin' our young brother, Joseph M. Purdie, has returned to the United States to complete his college course, and take a course of study in the Scriptures. While we miss him in the work of this mission, where he proved to be a faithful messenger and endured hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, still we think he is taking the right course, especially in seeking to become well grounded in the Word. We trust our friends may keep him on their prayer list, and that he may still keep his eyes on this or some other foreign field, where the need for consecrated young men is so great."

E. W. Weesner has located in the vicinity of Bishop, Cal., in the Owens River Valley. He is well pleased with the location, the climate being especially healthful. He writes: "Three families of Friends are living in and near Bishop. Two families near Big Pine and a few families at the Friends' Colony, sixty miles south of us. We advise Friends who are seeking a good climate and cheap homes to visit this section before locating elsewhere. We need a few more to be able to establish a Friends' meeting. Is not God calling some of His ministering servants this way? There is surely a good opening for Friends to work."

Southland College, Southland, Ark., is the oldest and one of the best organized schools of the South for the education and training of the negro race. It is under the management of the Missionary Board of Indiana Yearly Meeting. The school has an endowment fund of $36,000, interest of which, with benevolent donations, is used in the running expenses of the school, and by which it is made possible for a good education to be extended to many who never would have enjoyed the blessing of an education if left to their own resources. The school has a good reputation for the training of teachers, hundreds of whom have been and are now teaching. Great stress is placed on the moral and industrial training, and that success crowns personal effort. The school opens Tenth month 5th.

Joseph Stanley, notice of whose death is given this week, was till in later life a member of Ohio Yearly Meeting. He was recorded a minister by Goshen Monthly Meeting and Alum Creek Quarterly Meeting in 1861, and later was a member of Damascus Monthly Meeting, Ohio. Friends in these meetings bear grateful testimony to the value of his life and labors amongst them. In 1885, declining health led him and his esteemed wife, Lydia Stanley, to Florida, where they settled with a colony of Friends on Lake Kerr, and for twelve years were, as it were, the mainstay of the little meeting. After the death of his wife in 1898 he visited in Gospel love many of the Friends scattered through the State of Florida, and following, as he believed, the leading of the Spirit, he delivered his message of love in many meetings of California and Oregon Yearly Meetings, and returning visited in Baltimore and North Carolina Yearly Meetings.

The Friends at New London, Ind., are just ready to begin the building of a new meeting house. On Seventh-day, the 8th inst., was held the last monthly meeting in the old house. Murray S. Kenworthy, a former member of the meeting, but now of Kokomo, Ind., was present, and was blessed in the preaching of the Word. On Sabbath a basket meeting was planned by the local minister, John Reagan. At the morning session Emily Ellis preached an excellent sermon on "The Ideal Church." In the afternoon the farewell service was conducted by James Newlin. Many took part in this meeting, especially the old people. There were six present who helped to build the old meeting house fifty-two years ago. Many spoke of the blessings of the past, and of the sacred and pleasant memories that cluster about the old place of worship and its surroundings. The Lord has wonderfully blessed New London Meeting, and many have gone forth from there to labor in His vineyard.

MARRIED.

MARTIN—HOLLINGSWORTH.—At Newberg, Oregon, Sixth month 23d, 1903, Calvin Martin, son of Evangeline Martin, to Frances Hollingsworth. Their home is Newberg, Oregon.

STOUT—WADDELL.—At the home of the bride's parents, Galveston, Ind., Sixth month 11th, 1903, Howard M. Stout, of New London, Ind., to Tessa Waddell. They go to Worcester, Mass., where Prof. Stout will teach.

DIED.

HOLLINGSWORTH.—At his home, New Sharon, Ia., Seventh month 30th, 1903, Eli Hollingsworth, aged nearly 72 years. He was a lifelong member of Friends, and died trusting his Saviour.

STANLEY.—At the home of his daughter in Brookhaven, Miss., on the 7th of Sixth month, 1903, Joseph Stanley, aged 84 years. The deceased was a minister of more than forty years' standing, and at the time of his death was a member of Whitewater Monthly Meeting of Friends, Richmond, Ind.

PERSONALITY OF THE TEACHER.

In these days of smokeless powder, horseless carriages and wireless telegraphy, we are waiting for a suggestion of teacherless schoolrooms. Teacher and pupil could work out of sight of each other, and just as much information be imparted and received. What a relief to the instructor! Why not? Simply because the pupil's education consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he knoweth. It is important that he should learn some things which the teacher can impart. It is more important that he should gain elements of character which he cannot acquire in a teacherless schoolroom. The impress of personality, the largest and most lasting element in education, comes from direct every day contact. The State is supporting our system of public education, not to make experts in grammar, geography and arithmetic; but to educate the youth to be good citizens. Whatever can be said for machine-made clothes, we must have hand-made citizens.

In colleges and universities where the world-leaders are trained for their task, character is an element of at least equal importance, and the personality of the lecturer repeats itself in the generations of students who unconsciously absorb principle and motive while they are becoming skilled in philosophy, language or science. College studies are forgotten, but the impress of the instructor remains. Knowledge shall pass away, but the increments of character, gained daily, are immortal. The great Teacher, while saying much of the importance of

WON'T MIX.

Bad Food and Good Health Won't Mix.

The human stomach stands much abuse, but it won't return good health if you give it bad food.

If you feed right you will feel right, for proper food and a good mind is the sure road to health. "A year ago I became much alarmed about my health, for I began to suffer after each meal no matter how little I ate," says a Denver woman. "I lost my appetite, and the very thought of food grew distasteful, with the result that I was not nourished and got weak and thin. My home cares were very heavy, for beside a large family of my own I have also to look out for an aged mother. There was no one to shoulder my household burdens, and come what might I must bear them, and this thought nearly drove me frantic when I realized that my health was breaking down.

"I read an article in the paper about some one with trouble just like mine being cured on the food Grape-Nuts, and acting on this suggestion I gave Grape-Nuts a trial. The first dish of this delicious food told me I had struck the right thing. My uncomfortable feelings in stomach and brain disappeared as if by magic, and in an incredibly short space of time I was again myself. Since then I have gained 12 pounds in weight through a summer of hard work, and realize I am a very different woman, all due to the splendid food Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Trial will prove.

truth, added, in addressing his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world." A high moral purpose can be implanted in the pupil only by the personality of a teacher in whom that purpose is incarnate. Precepts, rules, printed exhortations are all good, but they are only the letter. The spirit is the life. Without this purpose in the student, education is worse than a mistake. Its presence often largely atones for lack of mind and manners, but no superiority of the other two can atone for the lack of this. It is the greatest thing in the world—the school world.—E. T. Jeffers, in "United Presbyterian."

WHEN JOHN COMES HOME.

When he comes home from college, why,
I cal'late John'll know
'Bout all there is worth findin' out, if what he writes is so.
He sort o' intimates it won't be worth our while to look Fer things that he can't tell us, 'twixt the covers of a book.

Last week an agent come along an'
wasted half a day,
An' done his best to make me buy a cyclo-pe-di-a
In thirty-five big volumes; but I told him from the start
My boy'd be home from college soon an' knowed 'em all by heart.

I sort o' snap my fingers now at every gazetteer
An' dictionary an' the like, fer John'll soon be here,
An' then instead o' havin' fer to study out the fac's
Our John'll up an' tell us, fer I s'pose he's sharper'n tax.

But Mandy—she's his mother—well, she sort o' shakes her head,
An' says some boys ain't much improved by bein' college-bred;
The more the brain develops an' the more the head expands,
The less o' homely strength there is fer workin' with the hands.

Concernin' hands that may be true, but with the legs I know
A thorough college trainin' is the thing to make 'em grow;
Fer Jones's boy from Harvard hit the barn-door every shot
In kickin' all the pumpkins from a big three-acre lot.

I don't jest understand it, but I've heard from two or three That John's the best at fencin'; well, that suits me to a T, Fer half the fences round the farm need buildin' over new;
So jest the minute John arrives I'll give him lots to do.

In highly educatin' him, I hain't spared
no expense;
Says I, "I'll get the dollars, John, if you'll jest get the sense;"
An' one thing I'm convinced he's learned, an' got it very pat,
Is how to spend the money; I can testify to that!

Endeavor World."

"Sally Wister is one of those charming maidens whose memory has been preserved,—like that of Dorothy Osborne or the Jessamy Bride,—by a fortunate accident. . . . We profess ourselves her devoted servants." THE ATHENÆUM (London).

Sally Wister's Journal

although a strictly historical document, is also a romance of unequalled charm. "The Journal has in many respects the attractions of a work of fiction. In fact, we have had considerable difficulty in persuading ourselves that we are not dealing with a wholly imaginative work. It throws many side lights upon the history of the times, giving interesting pictures of the society of the Revolution. . . . It is one of those books that one needs to read in order to get rid of the unreality that is apt to hang about the pages of history," says the Baltimore Sun. "A most delicious piece of literature," says the Philadelphia Inquirer. "The love-story is very pretty. This little scene has the color of an artist's interior,"—says the Hartford Courant.

SALLY WISTER, 16 years old, daughter of Daniel Wister, merchant, of Philadelphia, kept a journal of her experiences during the winter of 1777-1778, while exiled from Philadelphia during its occupation by the British. The family lived with relatives in an old farm house on the Wissahickon, which was occupied at times by various prominent officers of the Continental army. Sally saw much of the officers and heard much of the fighting, and comments on both freely and quaintly. Gen. Smallwood is "tall, portly, well-made: a truly martial air, the behaviour and manners of a gentleman"; Capt. Furnival, "the handsomest face I ever saw, a very fine person"; Captain Finley is "wretched ugly"; Maj. Stoddert, "very reserved" but has "an engaging countenance and address," etc. Later the Major grows much less reserved. Another officer who throws off his reserve is Capt. Alexander Spotswood Dandridge, of Virginia, a relative of Martha Washington. Sally calls him in the Journal "the handsomest man I ever beheld."

We are learning that the chief functions of our schools are to educate citizens. We are comprehending that something more is needed than the impartation of mathematics, the sciences, the languages, and chiefest of all the mastery of our own tongue. We are having it impressed upon us that a young man or young woman may have all of these and yet add nothing to the true welfare of the State. To do that demands the building up of character. To do that requires that the principles of integrity, and political honesty and personal purity be woven into the very fibers of the soul. To do that makes it imperative that our school system somehow shall impart to the boy and girl a something that shall enable them to say to the boddler, I am beyond your reach, and to political trickery and chicanery, you can have no lot in me. To do that needs that there shall be trained-up men and women who love country more than their own gain, respect the law even in the teeth of their own passions, and who can learn in the largest sense to sink and second personal interest in the larger area of the public good.—"The Baptist Commonwealth."

The advantage of a well-trained mind does not lie in the amount of things one knows, but in the use that one makes of them. Knowledge is useful only when directed to right ends.

"Education is the leading human souls to what is best, and in making what is best out of them: and these two objects are always attainable together and by the same means. The training which makes men happiest in themselves also makes them most serviceable to others."—Ruskin.

OKLAHOMA FARMS.

Any one desiring to come west wanting to locate among "Friends," and near Stella Academy, will do well to write us for price-lists of bargains in farms and town property.

Cherokee is a Quaker town, located in the center of a very rich valley country, on the main line of the K. C. Mexico and Orient Railroad, is a thriving young place of a little more than two years, and will soon have a population of 1,000 people. Has many good general stores, two banks, two elevators, a large mill of 300 barrel capacity, four churches, splendid schools, and is a clean temperance town. We have a strong Friends' Meeting here, and the Stella Academy furnishes a splendid place for educating and training your children for life and Christian service.

We desire especially to have Friends come and let us show you what we have as good bargains and a pleasant climate. Our principal products are wheat, oats, corn, alfalfa hay, potatoes and fruit of most all kinds, and is one of the best stock countries known. Come to a warm climate, where you can pasture your cattle on the wheat all winter; then harvest 15 to 35 bushels per acre; and cut 4 tons of alfalfa hay per acre, besides harvesting a seed crop paying in all $25.00 to $35.00 per acre each year. Farms improved are selling $25.00 to $50.00 per acre; town lots, $20.00 to $50.00. Write us to-day for special price-list.

HAY FEVER UNKNOWN.

Certain it is, and many years of careful experience are back of the statement, that hay fever, and kindred annoying and troublesome summer affections distressing to so many thousands all over the country, recurring as regularly as July and August, are absolutely unknown in the "Highlands of Ontario." Thousands of people go to Muskoka, Georgian Bay or the Lake of Bays every year for nothing else but to avoid hay fever, and find perfect immunity from the ailment, and many by going there regularly for a period of a few years are said to be permanently cured.

Hay fever booklet can be had free for the asking by applying to F. P. Dwyer, E. P. A., G. T. Ry., 290 Broadway, New York.

THE BOY SCORED.

A Philadelphia paper relates this story, which is credited to a prominent lawyer at Pottsville, who was once a high school principal. The former pedagogue said:

"One day at school I gave a very bright boy a sum in algebra, and, although the problem was comparatively easy, he couldn't do it. I remarked:

"You should be ashamed of yourself. At your age George Washington was a surveyor."

"The boy looked me straight in the eyes and replied:

"Yes, sir, and at your age he was President of the United States."

He who rears up one child in Christian virtue, or recovers one fellow-creature to God, builds a temple more precious than Solomon's or St. Peter's, more enduring than earth or heaven.—Channing.

Oak Grove Seminary

AND BAILEY INSTITUTE

Vassalboro, Maine

LOCATION. The location of the school is one of great natural beauty. In a remarkably healthful locality, on a hill of moderate height, but commanding to the south and west an extensive view of farmland, river, forest, and distant mountain ranges; on the north and east large forests of hemlock, pine and oak. It is doubtful if the lover of nature and outdoor life could find a more attractive school-home.

RELIGIOUS LIFE. Oak Grove Seminary was founded by members of the Society of Friends in order to give their children a thorough education under Christian influences, and in the forty-six years of its existence, the aim of the school has remained unchanged. The majority of the graduates leave the school earnest Christians, imbued with the idea of personal duty and service.

COURSES OF STUDY. The Courses of Study are carefully arranged. The College-Preparatory is strong and thorough. The Literary-Scientific is based on the modern elective method, and offers opportunity for a selection of such studies as are best suited to the needs and conditions of the individual pupil. The Commercial Course, covering two years, is thoroughly up-to-date.

ATHLETICS. The value of athletics in school life is thoroughly recognized, and all forms of pure, healthy sport are encouraged. There is ample opportunity for all kinds of out-door games and recreation.

EXPENSES. Through the generosity of many interested friends, it is possible to make the price for board and tuition very low. The total necessary expense for the year varies from $130 to $150. This can be reduced in many cases, if early application is made, by labor on the part of the pupils, or by income from funds.

Year opens Ninth month fifteenth. Catalogues on request.

Bryn Mawr College for Women is situated in the suburbs of Philadelphia, five miles to the west of the city, on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The college grounds cover fifty acres and include tennis courts, golf links, and a large athletic field and skating pond. The gymnasium, fitted with Dr. Sargent's complete apparatus and open to the students at all times, contains a swimming tank seventy feet in length.

Full graduate and undergraduate instruction is offered in Greek, Latin, English, German, French, Italian, Spanish, History, Political Science, Philosophy, Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry and Biology, and graduate and elective courses in Sanskrit and Indo-European Philology, Old French, Gothic, Teutonic Philology, Old Norse, Old High German, Middle High German, Old Saxon, Anglo-Saxon, Celtic and Slavonic Languages, Hebrew, Aramaic, Assyrian, Biblical Literature, Education, History of Art, Experimental Psychology, Physical Chemistry, Geology, Mineralogy, Palaeontology, and Physiological Chemistry. The laboratories are well equipped with apparatus. The college library contains an excellent working collection of thirty-nine thousand volumes, all purchased within the last fifteen years; three hundred and twenty-five periodicals and reviews are taken by the library.

Graduates of all colleges of good standing are admitted to the graduate school without examination. All undergraduates must pass the entrance examinations of Bryn Mawr College. Eight competitive scholarships, four of the value of three hundred dollars, and four of the value of two hundred dollars, are awarded annually to the eight candidates passing the best entrance examinations.

One scholarship of the value of two hundred dollars, renewable for four years, is awarded each year to the Member of the Society of Friends needing assistance passing the best entrance examination. A graduate scholarship of four hundred dollars is awarded each year to the best woman graduate of Earlham, Penn and Guilford Colleges respectively, and two additional graduate scholarships of the value of two hundred dollars each are open for competition to graduate students who are members of the Society of Friends and need financial assistance. These scholarships were established by the Trustees in accordance with the desire of the founder of the college to promote the advanced education of women in the Society of Friends.

There are also open each year for competition to all members of the graduate school eleven resident fellowships of the value of five hundred and twenty-five dollars each, two European traveling fellowships of the value of five hundred dollars each, and eight resident graduate scholarships of the value of two hundred dollars each.

Applications for the program of studies and all inquiries may be addressed to the Secretary's Office, Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

EARLHAM COLLEGE

RICHMOND, INDIANA

THE MEASURE OF A COLLEGE

Suppose a college is splendidly furnished with material equipment. Suppose it has excellent Buildings, well-equipped Laboratories, a splendid Museum, large and well-selected Libraries, Athletic Field, Gymnasium, many courses of study, and a Faculty of men and women of high scholarship and character. Earlham College has all these. What else is required?

Colleges are being scrutinized pretty closely these days. Here are some of the standards by which they are being measured.

COLLEGE IDEALS. In a recent address at the college, Superintendent J. W. Carr, of the Anderson schools, said: "If the college hero is the center rush on the football team, if the college journal is filled with athletics, with accounts of bets on the side, if college spirit manifests itself with flaunting colors and cat-calls and boisterous yells, if college victories are celebrated by giving night-shirt parades through the campus and streets of the city, if college discipline is set at naught and the college students engage in all sorts of horse-play, even to downright lawlessness—if if these things come to high school pupils as college ideals and be accepted by them as high school ideals, then the glory of the high school will soon depart." These signs of rowdyism, unfortunately so common in many institutions, are conspicuously absent from Earlham College.

COLLEGE ATMOSPHERE. President Faunce, of Brown University, says: "The most important thing about a college, after all, is that subtle thing called atmosphere." It is a subtle thing, indeed, and often not taken into account by those choosing the place where young men and young women are to spend the most critical period of their lives. Prof. William James, of Harvard, calls it "the spiritual tone" of a college. There is no doubt but that an exceptionable choice company of young men and young women is to be found in Earlham.

THE COLLEGE HOME. Earlham cannot answer the old conundrum as to how to both eat your cake and keep it, but she does offer an answer to the question, "How may one go away from home to college and at the same time be surrounded by healthy home influences?" This is a problem not many colleges have fully appreciated, much less solved. Earlham would emphasize the meaning of her beautiful and clean home life.

BIBLE STUDY. The Bible is used as a text book at Earlham. A student may take a strong four years' course in Biblical Literature and Interpretation. For those who are unable to spend so long a time, a one year's course has been outlined. The earnest Christian student would find even one term of incalculable benefit to him.

THE EXPENSE. This question is always bobbing up sooner or later. A student can pay all his college expenses except books and stationery, at Earlham, for a full year for $215. This includes his tuition, room, light, heat, bath, board, laundry and attendance of a trained nurse in case of sickness. A business man of large experience recently said: "I do not see how you do it." Then, many students who cannot even meet these charges are helped each year by liberal scholarships.

Fall term opens September 14th. Allow us to send you some literature.

Address the President,

ROBERT LINCOLN KELLY.

Haverford College

IS SITUATED IN A BEAUTIFUL SUBURB OF PHILADELPHIA ON A TRACT OF 225 ACRES

ABOUT sixty of these were laid out seventy years ago as a park for the new College. They have been improved since then, and now supply every facility for healthful retirement and recreation. Cricket, football, tennis, golf and skating are the outdoor sports for the students, and for these there is every advantage. On this tract there are (a) Founders' Hall, opened in 1833, now containing the scientific laboratories and the dining rooms; (b) the Library, containing 42,000 books, and ample space for reading and study, with 273 periodicals and many pamphlets; it is open all day for free use; (c) Barclay Hall, a dormitory for eighty students, opened in 1877; (d) Chase Hall, for recitations; (e) Whitall Hall, for mechanical work and draughting; (f) the Observatory, with two equatorials and a full line of minor instruments; (g) Lloyd Hall, a new dormitory; (h) the Gymnasium, a new building, costing $50,000, containing a main room 60x90 feet, swimming pool, bowling alley, reading room and trophy room; (i) Roberts Hall, just completed, containing college offices, an auditorium seating one thousand persons, and fireproof rooms to house the valuable autograph collection of the late Charles Roberts. In addition to the above the College is now fitting up the old Grammar School building for a new dormitory.

The Faculty contains the following, all men of learning and experience:

ISAAC SHARPLESS, Sc.D., LL.D., PRESIDENT, and Professor of Ethics.

ALLEN C. THOMAS, A.M., LIBRARIAN, and Professor of History.

LYMAN BEECHER HALL, Ph.D.,

DON C. BARRETT, Ph.D.,
Associate Professor of Political Science.

ALBERT ELMER HANCOCK, Ph.D.,
Associate Professor of English and German.

LEGH WILBER REID, Ph.D.,
Associate Professor of Mathematics.

WILLIAM WISTAR COMFORT, Ph.D.,
Instructor in Romance Languages.

Instructor in Physics.
(Chair not yet filled for 1903-1904.)

The annual cost of maintaining this Faculty is over $40,000, which is about one-half the total running expenses of the College, including the board of students. The charges, including board, room rent and tuition, are as follows:

Lloyd Hall $575.
Barclay Hall $500 and $450.
Founders' Hall $400.
New Dormitory . . . $350.

Board for all students is the same, irrespective of the position of the room. Scholarships, won in open competition, may reduce the above expenses.

Haverford is especially a Friends' College, though one-half of its students are members of other denominations, received on equal footing. Its managers desire to make it a headquarters for Quaker scholarship and ideals, and invite the co-operation of all favorable to this conception.

ENDURING SCHOLARSHIP.

From the days of the Hebrew Prophets until now the men who have been the leaders of the race in its upward struggle have been men to whom has come the vision of God incarnate in human society. So it shall be in the time to come. In all fields of social and moral reform, in its bearing upon the life and destiny of human souls, in its dealing with the individual and collective rights of man in the realms of industry and trade, and in its influence upon the civil and political relations of men, that scholarship and that alone, will abide and bear beneficent fruit which subordinates investigations and conclusions at every step to the controlling concepts of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The pattern and spirit of the historic Christ must be received as a factor in every scientific solution of the social and spiritual problems of the age.

YEARLY MEETING BUSINESS.

THE great object of the Church is to bring men into the kingdom of God and then to help them grow in the likeness of Jesus Christ. The chief agencies for this are instruction in the gospel and the testimony of believers. The latter includes the example of Christian living as well as the word of testimony. But the work in all its relations to the world has many divisions and is complicated with many interests. These require regulation and direction for their efficiency. Hence the Church, of necessity, has much "business" to attend to, and for this special meetings are provided which, in a regular progression, reach that of the highest authority in the yearly meeting. The proper transaction of the business of that meeting is, as a matter of course, of great importance, and its best direction requires sound judgment.

One of the points requiring careful consideration is the division of time between the devotional services and the transaction of business. All these are alike religious services to be performed under the divine guidance. Upon this apportionment of time there is often considerable difference of opinion. To some minds the business is of secondary importance, while the preaching of the gospel should be given the first place, for which the yearly meeting gathering furnishes a splendid opportunity. Others would not belittle this while they insist that, as the Church must have its business attended to, and the meeting is held, primarily, for this purpose, and it is truly the service of God, it should have the first consideration. To properly balance these is often no easy matter.

Meetings for worship are held at stated times with the one definite object. Usually there are regularly-appointed devotional meetings at some specified hour each day. Each business session is opened with a devotional period. It is manifestly improper to use the last-named occasions for lengthy discourses. They are for silent waiting before the Lord, for vocal prayer or brief exhortation. They are not time for teaching, but for inspiration for service. All these occasions should be under the watchful care of a special committee, whose members are selected because of their sound judgment and spiritual discernment. While the opening period of the business sessions is within the jurisdiction of the clerk, he should be assisted by others who are as keenly alive as he to the proprieties of the time. But during the transaction of the business there are occasions when some one feels that he or she has a message to deliver, and then a serious question arises. Shall the time then be taken to deliver what may prove to be of considerable length? We think there can be but one rule, everyone who speaks must "speak to the business." If the concern properly belongs to the business before the meeting, opportunity should be given for its deliverance within reasonable limits. But any other matter, however good and important it may be of itself, should not be introduced, and general "preaching" should be excluded. It is within the prerogative of the clerk to control this, and, however disagreeable it may be to him, at times, to exercise this duty, he should, in the service of the meeting, do it without hesitation.

In the transaction of business care should be taken to do it in a businesslike way. Some yearly meetings have grown into the habit of wasting much valuable time in disposing of questions that cannot be justified from any point of view. Every person who wishes to speak should be given an opportunity to do so, and there should never be any haste in reaching a decision; but when the mind of the meeting is apparent it is useless to protract the discussion further, and the record should be promptly made. In this one point the efficiency of a good clerk is demonstrated more than in any other. Now, more than in former years, the conserving of time is a duty. At no yearly meeting can the membership be held beyond a reasonable period, and this period seems to be steadily shortening. For the best preparation for the work of the new year the best use must be made of the time while the greatest number are in attendance. W.

THE CROWN OF LIFE.

THE mystery of death is immemorial. It has puzzled and baffled men ever since there were men. Not a syllable ever comes back to tell us of the new scenes and the changed activities upon which a departed loved one has entered. Not a breathed whisper is granted which might make us know the joy of being a heavenly inhabitant.

"Where wert thou, brother, those four days?"
There lives no record of reply;
Which, telling what it is to die,
Had surely added praise to praise.

Behold a man raised up by Christ!
The rest remaineth unrevealed;
He told it not; or something sealed
The lips of that evangelist.

The age-long secret is kept from us, and in vain our eyes try to follow beyond these shores of time and place and sense.

The imagination cannot picture a scene except with the material which it has received through the eye and ear and touch; therefore we are unable to construct the scenery and circumstance of a newly-parted soul, for we have no sense relations with that realm. We walk here, truly, "not by sight."

But yet we are not left in hopeless confusion. A great spiritual prophet tells us that those who overcome receive "the crown of life." This takes us into the very heart of mystery, and if we are only spiritual enough to see, it solves our problem.

We know a little what it means to "overcome." There are all kinds of struggles going on in this world for all kinds of victories and prizes, but the supreme struggle is that of a redeemed inward self, a pure heart, a life victorious over sin, and a nature in which selfishness is completely replaced by love. We do not need now to tell how this supreme battle is won, for that would be to tell the whole gospel story. But it is enough to know that men—any man—in the very midst of temptation and sin may overcome. What shall come to him as a result—what does he "get" when he has overcome? What could he receive in a spiritual world but a crowned and complete life? Anything else would be commercial, not spiritual. What does the scholar get for his years of patient study and persistent toil? Not merely degrees after his name; not simply prizes and temporal rewards; not primarily a professorship somewhere. He has the reward of knowing; he finds his chief reward in his enlarged capacity for truth. For him who overcomes the hard intellectual problems there is a crown of education, which means increased capacity. The reward for doing anything faithfully and well is the ability to do it better and to do harder things. The reward for bravery is greater courage to face the difficult things that ought to be done. The reward of any virtue is more virtue of a higher order.

Now we come back to our mystery of the life beyond, and we ask our immemorial question, How fares it with our beloved dead? Whatever else heaven may be, it is the crown of life. The spirit that has fought selfishness, as Paul fought beasts at Ephesus, for the love of Christ; the soul that has learned to give itself to others out of pure love, as Christ gave Himself; the heart that loves God's will, no matter through how hard a path it may sometimes lead, can have but one goal in God's spiritual universe. There can be but one result if God is God.

It must be a divine law that such a life enters into larger life. Every spiritual victory through the earthly life increases the capacity of the soul for more life; every expression of love adds to the power of loving; every pulse of sympathy makes the heart larger and so life's crown comes. We cannot follow the course of a dear soul who drops the visible to enter the invisible; we cannot picture or imagine the new activities or forecast the daily life of the heavenly saint; but we do know that that life completes this and crowns it, as the wise thought and trained intellect of the white-haired scholar crowns the honest effort of the young student who solves the problem before him; as the noble spirit, the four-square character and the perfect deed crown the first right choices which shaped the boy's life.

THE OBLIGATIONS AND PRIVILEGES OF CITIZENSHIP.*

BY FRANCIS R. COPE, JR.

All relationships in life bring with them obligations of some sort, and I trust there are none here to-night so high and none so low as to imagine that they do not owe the duty of service. But before any of us can properly appreciate our obligations and privileges as citizens it is absolutely necessary that we understand the nature of the civic conditions which confront us. Perhaps in the present case this ought not to be necessary, and yet I believe that today Philadelphia justly deserves her title as one of the most corrupt cities in the country, simply because a large majority of her citizens have persistently refused, either consciously or unconsciously, to open their eyes to the nature of the moral and political evils which surround them. I use both the adjectives "moral" and "political" because the two are in my mind essentially complementary. The character of the one is the natural result of the character of the other; and if, for instance, we, as members of the Society of Friends, were convinced that the root of the political corruption which is cursing this community to-day is at bottom a moral corruption due to the moral debauchery both of private citizens and of public office holders, we would be the very last not to appreciate the sacred obligations of good citizenship. Once you persuade the good people of this town to open their eyes and then show them that the disease from which they are suffering is largely one of moral degradation, I am convinced that they will not be long in applying the proper remedy.

* This article is part of an address delivered before a Germantown Tea Meeting by Francis R. Cope, Jr., on the eve of the city election, Second month 16th, 1903. It gives such a vigorous picture of the corruption in Philadelphia, its causes and its possible cure that it deserves the notice of Friends everywhere. The writer of it is a student of social, moral and political conditions in civic life, and his words carry weight.—EDITOR.

What, then, are some of the political and social conditions which we as citizens of Philadelphia are now facing, throughout the entire community?

The first fact which is most apparent is that many of us are neglecting to appreciate and therefore to exercise that right which must ever be the cornerstone of good government in a democracy—the right to vote. But perhaps some one will exclaim: “Why, I thought the trouble with Philadelphia was not lack of votes, but too many votes, that it is always a city of large majorities.” Very true, to be sure, if we take into account the large number of fraudulent ballots that are thrown in by the “Machine.” Yet if we glance at the size of the vote and the character of the voter here in our own ward (the Twenty-second), we shall find that during recent elections from one-third to two-thirds of the better class of citizens never even went to the polls at all.

And what, pray, is the inevitable result of this immoral laziness—this criminal neglect of a most sacred duty? Why, a condition of fraud, dishonesty, moral degradation on the part of our political office holders which has made the fair name of this city of “brotherly love” a synonym for all that is most foul and corrupt in democratic government!

At the last November election not a single honest, intelligent citizen was willing to act as a watcher at the voting booth. As a result the only minority inspector, who is a Democrat, was permitted to go home to his work as soon as the polls had opened. Thus, entirely contrary to the law, the booth was left without any minority inspector or clerk; the returns were sent in with forged signatures, and nobody knows how many fraudulent votes were cast.

In another division a policeman, who was not a resident of that division, and therefore not entitled to vote, came to the booth and demanded a ballot. He was promptly challenged; but the judge, being a mere tool of the “Machine,” although an officer theoretically chosen by the people, overruled the challenge and permitted him to vote. In both these cases the offender was arrested, and in the latter instance indicted by the grand jury. But for some unknown reason the trials were indefinitely postponed.

In my own division, where I acted as a watcher at the last election, the “Machine” feared that they were going to lose, and accordingly in the last half hour before the polls closed tried to vote a crowd of negroes, thereby swelling their own majority and preventing several men on the other side from getting into the booth before it was too late. Fortunately, in this case, the judge did not have the courage of many of his “ring” associates, and by a little moral firmness on the part of the minority watchers he was compelled to heed the challenges and at least ten illegal votes were thrown out. Later, by a further show of what the “Machine” calls “—reform spirit,” we even succeeded in persuading the judge to throw away the large bottle of whiskey with which he attempted to treat his colleagues before the vote was counted. And finally, when the minority watchers continued to stand firm and the last opportunity of manipulating the ballots was lost, the “gang” abandoned its efforts, and the day was won!

Many other instances of gross misconduct on the part of our election officers might be cited, but I must pass on to a far more serious result of the moral lethargy which at present seems to hold so many honest Philadelphians in its grasp. This is the very evident demoralization and corruption of the police force—that body of some 4,200 men and officers who may become a mighty tool for good or bad in this community largely as its citizens shall decide. For here in Philadelphia the Mayor appoints the Director of Public Safety, who in turn names his Chief of Police, and as is the character of the chief so in large measure must be the discipline and efficiency of his men. If, then, the average police officer of this city is compelled to openly intimidate voters, or worse yet, to countenance the vilest forms of vice and sin in our very midst, we as citizens have, in the last analysis, nobody but ourselves to blame.

Yet I wonder how many of us fully appreciate the magnitude of this evil as it exists in Philadelphia to-day. Do I need to tell you of the many cases of brutal police interference and intimidation at the recent city elections? Do I need to tell about the election judge in a Fourth Ward polling booth who was shot at by a lot of drunken negroes and then assaulted and illegally arrested by a police sergeant because, strictly in accordance with his rights, he refused to let the men who attacked him receive outside assistance in casting their votes? Nor ought it to be necessary to remind you of the innumerable instances where police officers have illegally interfered at the polls when the law says they shall not come within thirty feet of the booth; or of how, at the last election, several anti-machine watchers who were trying to faithfully perform their duties were forcefully ejected by policemen, and then arrested and locked up on the charge of creating a disturbance.

Yet these demoralized men are but taking their orders from headquarters, and they dare not disobey so long as we leave them in the clutches of the political “ringsters.”

Nor is this the worst result of a police force which is honeycombed with political corruption. For mark now, how in the very midst of our own city there are openly flourishing to-day the foulest of gambling dens and houses of ill-fame, which would not be tolerated for a single moment were our policemen performing their proper duties. If any evidence were needed as to the existence of this "white slave traffic," as it has been justly called, it could be found in the carefully-planned and successful police raids two months ago on disorderly houses in the Seventh and Eighth districts. And although the lieutenants who were responsible for these precincts were temporarily suspended for neglect of duty, it is now generally admitted that the resorts had long been known at headquarters and that the recent raids were only carried out to allay popular feeling by making scapegoats of the lieutenants and thereby relieving those higher in authority from all responsibility.

At any rate, we Philadelphians may as well make up our minds that so long as the present political machine remains in control of the city we need expect no real reform in the police force, and therefore no substantial improvement of moral conditions. For the raids just alluded to proved conclusively two things: first, that the police if they so desire can put a stop to this awful traffic; second, that, as at present organized, they do not intend to put a stop to it.

I cannot go into further particulars here, but if there be any who still doubt the truth of my assertions I can tell them where they can see these dens of iniquity with their own eyes. I can show them resorts in certain parts of this city which will sicken them with shame—resorts which pay our police captains large sums of money every month for the privilege of remaining open in defiance of the law, and for the privilege of destroying the sanctity of many a Christian home! Yet many of us still continue to close our eyes to this worst form of all civic corruption and to the remedy which lies within our power. For depend upon it, these are but fair examples of the general moral and political conditions which confront this community at the present time.

And notice, I have not said a single word of many another misdeed of the present city officials—of how our debt has doubled, while at the same time the Mayor and Councils have deliberately robbed Philadelphia of valuable franchises for which a reputable citizen offered to pay $2,500,000, and which were later reported sold to a transit company for $7,000,000; of how contracts are invariably awarded to the highest instead of to the lowest responsible bidder; of how a regular yearly tribute is levied upon the salaries of our city employees, from professors in the High School down to the lowest grade of office holders, in order to swell a political corruption fund for the pollution of the ballot; or again, of how a small gang of politicians publicly dictate to the citizens who shall be their next Mayor, and to the fifteen judges of our courts who shall be the next District Attorney. All these vital facts I pass by, simply for lack of time and because I want to show that the things of which I have spoken to-night relate to questions of morality rather than to cold cash.

Liberality consists not so much in giving a great deal as in giving seasonably.—Bruyere.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

The 106th annual convocation of North Carolina Friends convened at Highpoint, N. C., from the 4th to the 10th of Eighth month, 1903.

The visiting ministers peresent with minutes were John M. Watson, of Indian Territory, Kansas Yearly Meeting; Samuel R. Neave and George C. Wise, of Maryland, Baltimore Yearly Meeting; Allen Jay and Irene Hunicutt, Indiana; Anna May Pemberton, Ohio, Indiana Yearly Meeting; Willis Hotchkiss, Ohio, missionary from African Industrial Mission; Martilla Cox, accompanied by her mother, Emily Cox, as companion, from Indiana, Western Yearly Meeting; and Frank H. Clark, New York. These all received returning minutes, as did Allen C. Dick, a member in attendance from Indiana.

The several meetings on ministry and oversight were marked by earnest gospel messages. A venerable visiting minister quoted "For ye shall go out with joy and be led forth with peace," and discoursed further. A young minister, referring to the same quotation, regarded it as the keynote of the yearly meeting and an augury of the future of North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

The spirit of these words seemed to characterize all the proceedings and exercises of every session, baptizing all in love and grateful thanksgiving. Many were made specially glad when John M. Watson, who had so endeared himself to the members of this meeting in his association and service with Joseph Neave during his labors among us, announced his purpose to visit very extensively the homes of our membership. The same spirit of joyfulness permeated the meeting in considering the duties of ministers, elders and overseers. There was much excellent discussion about the development of the ministry through the use of the Bible School, Bible classes, Bible institutes, and, with all, private, prayerful, personal study and meditation; also about the way to get all the membership to do some sort of religious service.

In the consideration of worship in the family there was exhortation not to let the competition and commercialism of this active age prevent family devotion. Methods for enlisting the interest of children in the devotional reading of the Scriptures were discussed. The occasional asking of questions, observations and explanations were suggested as means for enlisting many who would otherwise be indifferent. It was very apparent that the consensus of opinion was that the future of the Church is so dependent upon the children and young people of to-day that parents, teachers and ministers should be entreated to look after the training and seek the conversion of children as early as possible, and that ministers, in preaching, should seek to so divide the Word as to adapt it to children, and through parental love and general affection which adult people have for children all will be edified. Visiting Friends contributed very largely to the preciousness of these sessions. The importance of impressing children with the probability of a divine call to the ministry was emphasized; especially was this true with reference to girls, since there is a dearth of women ministers in the yearly meeting.

The London general epistle had the very closest attention from all. Far more people expressed high appreciation of this epistle than the writer has noted for thirty years of observation in hearing the responses. It was regarded by many as the best they ever heard, and was highly valued because of its fitness for present conditions. It was directed that the epistle be printed with the minutes of the yearly meeting, and that 2,500 copies be printed in addition, separately, for distribution.

Appreciated epistles were received as usual from the other yearly meetings. It was interesting to note that these emphasized the same subjects that claimed in much the same manner the attention of this meeting.

Education claimed and received a large share of attention. The reports from different departments of Guilford College were well received, showing a larger attendance than ever before. The alumni association is taking active interest in the college, and has been the means of securing funds to establish an electric light plant for lighting, watering and warming the various buildings. This plant is now being installed.

President L. L. Hobbs is to spend most of the year in securing additions to its endowment fund, which is much needed because of the greater demands upon the college for more and better work. There seems to be a growing demand for a first-class Friends' college in the South.

A department of Biblical instruction was provided last spring for the college to begin this autumn. Since then the death of Harriet Green occurred, followed by a movement to endow this department with a fund called "The Harriet Green Memorial Endowment Fund." This fund has been contributed to by individuals and meetings in North Carolina. At the yearly meeting additional subscriptions were made to this fund. There is more activity among Friends in North Carolina on the subject of Education than ever before. The same is true of the general citizenship throughout the State.

The Committee on Peace seemed to have been more active and successful than usual. The progress of peace as reported throughout the world and the settlement by arbitration of difficulties between nations and of labor troubles in this country, and the passage of the Militia Bill by the United States Congress, all elicited inspiring and hopeful utterances from different persons in the meeting. It was especially urged in the committee's report that Friends labor to form peace societies among all citizens, irrespective of denominational lines.

Our interest and activity in the suppression of the liquor traffic is increasing because of the passage by our last Legislature of the Watts Bill, which prohibits distilleries outside of incorporated towns and allows a vote to prohibit them in incorporated cities and towns. This gives opportunity for agitation, education and probably eventual prohibition.

New inspiration was given the meeting on this subject because the Five Years Meeting issued a call for a conference of all religious denominations in this country.

This yearly meeting feels an increased responsibility in the matter since the Five Years Meeting has taken the initiative. On First-day afternoon E. C. Dinwiddie, of Washington, D.C., secretary of the Department of Legislation for the National Anti-Saloon League, gave a temperance lecture which held the audience for an hour.

Bible School work received the usual attention. The report showed about as many schools as last year, and more money collected through them for their own use, for missions, the orphanage, etc. An encouraging fact was that the yearly meeting made an appropriation this year for the first time to forward this work.

The watchwords seemed to be "more Bible study and better teaching" henceforth.

The Christian Endeavor work is kept in tact and in touch with both the younger and the older people. It is interested in mission work, for which it appropriated $100.

The orphanage has advanced in its work in the interest of unfortunate children. Since last year a large two-story school house has been erected and one term of school taught in it.

Interesting facts about it are that professional medical attendance has never cost anything, nor has there been a death among the children or the resident officers throughout the history of the institution, which extends through eleven years. More funds are needed to increase its usefulness and to care for more of those for whom admission is asked.

Mission work received the usual attention, and reports show progress in it. Anna Edgerton, a minister of this yearly meeting and missionary in India, is supported by this yearly meeting. She has been there five years. Her health from the first has been good and her work satisfactory. Willis R. Hotchkiss gave one intensely interesting lecture on mission work in India, and one more interesting on the industrial mission work in Africa. The usual appropriation was made and the usual collection taken for missions, and the outlook for next year is filled with hopefulness for greater blessings. The report of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee showed continued interest and work done, but not so much apparent good accomplished as heretofore, still it is one of the things for which no specific reason can be given to explain the lack of more work. Much interest was manifest in the work, and great desire expressed that this, perhaps the most important department of the Church's work, be prayerfully prosecuted during the coming year, and the confident expectation is that this will be done and crowned with rich results.

One quarterly meeting failed to send representatives on account of some difficulties and differences. In response to the request from said quarter for help to adjust the difficulties a judicious committee was appointed to visit and labor in the quarter and report next year.

Inquiry being made as to whether persons who use tobacco can be set apart as ministers, elders or overseers, it was agreed by the meeting that all such should be pure in heart, free from the use of tobacco, and a minute was issued, "that in any case the use of tobacco should be considered in some measure objectionable to the appointment of ministers of the gospel, of elders and overseers in the Church."

The attendance of the membership was larger than usual, and an unusual number remained to the final adjournment, before which many stated that this had been the best yearly meeting North Carolina has ever had, and expressed gratitude for the benefit they had derived from it. Visiting Friends expressed very great appreciation of the kind hospitality that had been shown them on every occasion. It has been many years, if ever before, since so much genuine Christian love and business harmony marked so very conspicuously all the exercises and transactions of North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

Meetings for preaching the gospel were held in the tent in the grove as usual each morning at 8.30 o'clock.

On First-day many thousands were in town, and on the yearly meeting grounds. Possibly 1,000 people heard Wilis Hotchkiss and Allen Jay preach at 11 o'clock on First-day in the meeting house, and perhaps as many heard others of the visiting ministers under the tent in the grove. Correspondents to daily State papers reported twice as many people as this report gives. The best of order prevailed.

Some years ago several Friends from Guilford College built a row of one-story houses in the fine grove belonging to the yearly meeting in which to live and entertain their friends during the yearly meetings. These were all full this year, as usual. On First-day evening, just at the close of the meetings, fire was discovered in one of the houses. The buildings were all quickly burned, with some of the contents, clothing, bedding, trunks, etc., but most of the contents were saved. No one was hurt.

Fewer covered wagons were seen this year in the grove than ever before. More people came by railroad, for they get good lodging at twenty-five cents per night, and meals provided by the yearly meeting at twenty cents each.

Visiting ministers went to different parts of the State at the close of the yearly meeting.

Allen Jay came by Guilford College and left for home on the 11th.

Anna May Pemberton and George Wise attended meeting at New Garden, Guilford College, on the 12th inst., morning and evening, and went from there to Deep River.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting was held in the auditorium on the campus of the College, beginning with its meeting of ministry and oversight, on Eighth month 12th, and continuing one week.

The weather was dry, and the roads exceedingly dusty, yet the attendance was large throughout, and on First-day the campus was thronged by a vast multitude of people, many of whom were deeply impressed by the earnest, searching and powerful preaching heard from the auditorium, from the study room and from two stands on the grounds.

The meeting for ministry and oversight was marked by a deep concern, not only that the sessions of the yearly meeting might be seasons for the saving of souls, and the edification of believers, but that also proper care might be used to provide local ministers who are able to feed the flock of God, and win men for Christ.

The consideration of the state of the Church, brought the meeting into a solemn sense of responsibility, as it was shown that the meeting has made little if any growth in the year, and that many friends are careless and remiss in attendance of meetings, that many meetings make no adequate provision for pastoral care, and that we have few young people coming on in the ministry. It is said that the average age of our ministers is in excess of sixty years. Yet the meeting was encouraged by the fact that among the visiting ministers there was an unusually large number of young men.

The duty and necessity of cheerful and liberal giving for the carrying on of our Lord's work was earnestly and strongly preached.

The ministers and workers from other yearly meetings, mostly with minutes, were: From Indiana, Professor Elbert Russell, Elwood Scott, Daisy Barr, Anna Russell and Leona Wright; from Western, David Hadley, Richard Haworth, Leanna Hobson, Murray Kenworthy and William Pyle; from Ohio, Emma Malone, S. Adelbert Wood, Willis Hotchkiss and Rebecca Pickering; from Kansas, Achsa Kenyon, and from New England, William J. Sayres.

Among these there was great unity of purpose and an earnest desire to be helpful in their services and expression, and much good of a permanent character was done by their preaching and presence in both the meetings for worship and those devoted to business.

David Hadley and Emma Malone were in attendance by arrangement of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of the yearly meeting. They had charge of an "inquiry room" in the College.

Professor Russell, of Earlham College, addressed the sessions devoted to Sabbath Schools and to peace and arbitration. At the former he spoke on "Education as a Training for Christian Belief and Work." At the latter his subject was "The Conquering Christ." He also preached a sermon on the "Vicarious Sacrifice," in which he made interesting allusion to the London general epistle, and undertook to show that the death of Christ is not the unique thing in experience that science has been wont to regard it.

The meeting on temperance, as usual, called out a very large attendance. It was addressed by Edwin C. Dinwiddie, national secretary of the Anti-Saloon League. His speech called forth a resolution favoring certain legislative measures. The resolution was carried by a unanimous vote.

College Day also called out a large attendance. The address of the afternoon was given by Albert J. Brown, president-elect of Wilmington College. His subject was, "What Education Does for People." His definition of an educated person was "one who has the abundant life." Robert Pretlow then made some remarks on the necessity of giving for the support of this branch of the Lord's work. He superintended the taking of a subscription in money and scholarships amounting to $705.

As shown by the report, the work of the College is in a satisfactory condition. The outlook is hopeful.

The session devoted to Home Missions was addressed by John Kittrell, who made some interesting allusions to the work in Tennessee, with which he is familiar, and earnestly appealed to Friends to occupy for the Master the fruitful fields at their very doors.

The report of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee told of the organization of a new and interesting meeting at Blanchester, O., and of the building of a new meeting house at Grassy Flats, in Tennessee. Joseph Hoskins was re-appointed superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work, and a subscription of $500 was raised.

A committee was appointed to visit the quarterly meetings, except those in Tennessee, and as way opens co-operate with them in making proper combinations of meetings for the more convenient providing of local ministers.

The local meeting in Wilmington held a reception on Second-day evening at their meeting house in town for the visiting Friends.

Richard Haworth had a concern which led him to ask for a meeting with those young people who felt called to some special Christian work. The meeting brought out the interesting and important fact that we have a number of young people who are being thus called and who are seriously concerned to heed and obey the call.

The meeting on Christian Endeavor was a large and interesting one. Edgar Strannahan presided, and a valuable address was given by Murray S. Kenworthy, of Western Yearly Meeting. His subject was the parting advice of David to Solomon.

The session devoted to Foreign Missions was addressed by Edgar Strannahan and Willis Hotchkiss. The former spoke of his recent visit to Cuba and of the great need of mission labor, and of the great door wide opened there by means of the mission station selected and started there under the direction of our own yearly meeting this year. Willis Hotchkiss spoke of the darkness and death where Christianity is not known and of the wonderful opening for the truth in Friends' Mission station in the heart of the Dark Continent.

Emma Malone spoke with much earnestness to the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the yearly meeting, and aroused a feeling of deep maternal concern that the new-born child, the Cuba Mission, might be duly cared for and cherished. She also had a special meeting for girls and young women.

Emma Townsend and Edgar Strannahan were appointed on the Bible Institute Committee, and at a subsequent session E. Strannahan tendered his resignation, in favor of Albert Brown, to take effect when President Brown's right of membership, which is now in transit between Western and Wilmington Yearly Meetings, is received.

This committee was authorized by the meeting to extend to the Program Committee an invitation to hold the next Bible Institute at Wilmington, if, on investigation, it be found that accommodation can be furnished.

The yearly meeting began with a feeling of unity and fellowship, which grew and developed until all were a marvelous melting together into one spirit and one purpose to live, know and do the blessed will of God.

One of the last acts of the meeting was to give a heartfelt expression of appreciation of the long and faithful service of James B. Unthank as clerk.

The amounts appropriated and subscribed, including subscription obtained by Edgar Strannahan for Cuba, are for the three most important works of the Church, about as follows: Foreign Missions, $1,500; Evangelistic and Church Extension, $1,100; College, $1,300.

DEATH OF SAUL AND JONATHAN.

1 Samuel 31 : 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—There is a way which seemeth right, but the end thereof are the ways of death.—Prov. 14 : 12.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 31.—Death of Saul and Jonathan. 1 Sam. 31 : 1-13.

First-day, Ninth mo. 6.—The remedy provided. 1 John 3 : 1-11.

The incidents occurring between the present lesson and the last should be read in the intervening chapters. The points dwelt on are the wanderings of David and the great invasion of Israel by the Philistines. The time for the latter seemed opportune. Saul by his strange behavior had alienated many, and David, who had been the champion of Israel, had taken refuge with the Philistines themselves and apparently might be counted on to remain neutral if nothing else.

The scene of the conflict was the fertile plain of Esdraelon, which lay east and southeast of Mt. Carmel. The Philistines came northeast until they reached Shunem, about seven miles from Nazareth. Saul, with his army from the south, came to Mt. Gilboa, not far from where Gideon's army had encamped. Saul's army, doubtless, was composed wholly of foot soldiers, while the Philistines had chariots and horsemen (2 Sam. 1: 6). These no doubt contributed to the discomfiture of the Israelites. But the whole tone of the history implies that Saul was cast down and almost in despair. The consultation of the Witch of Endor is also intended to show this. The date of the death of Saul differs according to the chronology accepted. The old places it at 1055 B.C., the more recent at 1017. David was now about thirty years old, and at the time was among the Philistines.

1. "The men of Israel fled." The conflict may have begun on the plain, where the Philistines with their chariots and horsemen would have the advantage; but the chief struggle would seem to have been on the high ground—"the high places." The Philistines were better warriors than the Israelites.

2. "Saul's sons." There was another son—Ishbosheth—who was not present. He was afterwards murdered. When the news reached Gibeah, Saul's residence, the household was terrified and fled, the nurse dropped the child of Jonathan, and the boy of five years was lamed. His name was Mephibosheth (lame in his feet). See 2 Sam. 4: 4-7.

3. "The archers overtook him; and he was greatly distressed by reason of the archers." Revised Version. Saul was apparently recognized and made a mark of. His army was defeated, his sons slain, and he badly wounded by the arrows.

4. "Uncircumcised ones." The Philistines. "Abuse me." "Make sport of me." Compare Judg. 16: 25. He preferred to die at once rather than be tortured and mocked at. "Would not." The armor-bearer would not take the heavy responsibility. Saul then fell upon his own sword and killed himself. It is impossible to harmonize this account of Saul's death and that in 2 Sam. 1: 9, 10, where Saul is said to have been slain at his own request by an Amalekite. Some think the Amalekite lied in hopes of getting a reward.

5. His armor-bearer, either from fear of punishment, or more likely from fidelity, slew himself, unwilling to survive his master.

6. "All his men." His immediate followers.

7. "Other side of the valley." That is, on the Jordan side of Gilboa, that part of Jezreel nearest the Jordan. "They that were beyond Jordan." That is, the panic spread beyond the river Jordan. This seems so very improbable that many commentators think that the text is wrong, as it seems inconsistent with 2 Sam. 2: 8-10. The words may mean "along the river Jordan." The idea which the verse is intended to convey is, that Israel was filled with terror, and that the Philistines seized many of the cities of Israel.

8, 9. This was a common thing to do in those days. Similar deeds are often mentioned in Greek literature. The news was sent all through Philistia, and was carried especially "to the house of their idols."

10. "Ashtaroth." "This was doubtless the famous temple of Venus in Askelon." Compare 2 Sam. 1: 20. "Bethshan." Now known as Beisan, four miles west of the Jordan. The account here differs from that in Chronicles, where it is stated that his head was fastened in the temple of Dagon. (1 Chron. 10: 10.)

11. "The men of Jabesh-gilead, who had special reasons for remembering Saul with gratitude (1 Sam. 11: 1-11), undertook to remove the disgrace."

12. "Went all night." The distance was about twenty miles. "Burnt them there." "Cremation was not a Hebrew practice, but in the present case was probably adopted to avoid the possibility of further insult to the bodies if the Philistines should take Jabesh."

13. "And they took their bones and buried them under the tamarisk tree in Jabesh, and fasted seven days." Revised Version. This tree was probably well known at the time. The fasting was to show their grief. David subsequently had the bones of Saul and Jonathan removed to the sepulchre of Kish at Zelah in Benjamin (2 Sam. 21: 12-14).

Read the lament over Saul and Jonathan ascribed to David, and taken from the Book of Jasher, which seems to have been a book of national songs or ballads (2 Sam. 1: 19-27).

The lessons of Saul's life are obvious.

The dissensions to which sin gave rise caused the race to forget that God had made of one every nation of men. When Cain lifted up his hand against Abel, war and strife began; and we know no nation of antiquity, nor any religion or philosophy that stood for the unity or even the common interest of humanity. The Greek disdained the Barbarian; the Roman enslaved his conquered enemies, and the Jew held the Gentile as unclean. The raveled threads of clan and tribe and nation needed to be gathered up so that man might be brought to realize his oneness, and this work Christ wrought in the new creation.

How many times in this discourse that John records does the prayer for unity recur! And let us note the reason. Reasons are plenty, and not far to seek, from the mere human standpoint. The personal gain and public advantage in concord as contrasted with the wastefulness of strife and discord, ought to convince, according to the simplest economic reckoning. Then, how it impeaches the wisdom of God to suppose that He would set one body of men over against another to bicker and dispute, or to overreach or undermine in any sort of rivalry, or to condemn and degrade, or to fight and kill! Yet these things have inevitably come to pass where the spirit of Christianity has failed. So that amid all the reasons that the human mind can suggest, we need to remember Christ's reason, "that the world may know that Thou didst send me." The unity of believers is the vindication of our Lord's claim of a divine commission, and disunity brands the hostile camps of His professed followers, by so far as they are hostile, as being just so far separated from the standard set by Him when He prayed that "they may all be one."

It is not necessary to understand that all men should subscribe to a common creed, detailed and explicit as to all points of Christian theory and Christian living; but it is unescapable that all are to find a unity in Christ as Saviour, for there is no other name given; this includes obedience to a righteous God and the acceptance of His will as revealed by the Holy Spirit. These are base principles; men will develop and emphasize various types of superstructure, but without discord, if only it is seen that the differences are the expression of incidentals while the essentials stand in harmonious agreement for us all.

Christian Endeavor has done in twenty years what would have seemed at its beginning impossible. It has a work yet to do along this line of Christian fellowship and Church loyalty that calls for much wisdom and grace, but has for its incentive "that the world may know that Thou didst send Me, and lovedst them, even as Thou lovedst Me."

FRIENDS' AFRICA INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

The good hand of our God is seen in the various branches of this work.

Willis R. Hotchkiss has been attending American yearly meetings in the interests of the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission with good results.

The reports from the mission are full of interest and encouragement.

A government official from Mombasa has surveyed the land and found 865 acres.

On April 26th, 1903, Arthur B. Chilson writes: "Since Willis left it has been my privilege to preach the Gospel in Swahili, in the daily services as well as on the Sabbath; and though my interpreter understands less of Swahili than I do, and makes grievous mistakes, still the Spirit is faithful, and I believe the people are beginning to understand a little of the message. Just to-day one of our men told me that the Kavirondo knew that we loved them and that they loved us. Thus the first foundation stone is laid, the first hook has been taken with which we expect to catch these souls for the Master."

On the last day of March, Arthur B. Chilson met with an accident which disabled him for almost a month. In dislodging a tree it fell and caught his left limb, bruising it badly between the knee and ankle; but in speaking of it he says: "The great Physician had mercy on me and rapidly healed me."

He further says: "As the news of the accident spread, the nearby chiefs came in with their people to see 'the white man with his sick leg,' and this gave me blessed opportunities to tell the Gospel story, and the Lord by His Spirit blessed in it. Every Sabbath that I had to be carried out to the services, great crowds came in. At one time there must have been over three hundred. So we praise the Lord for the accident, and would gladly suffer the same and much more if the Lord could use it to bring the Gospel to more of these I am learning to love so much."

The missionaries are reaching the natives in a variety of ways. In addition to holding regular Gospel services on the station, they are going to the villages preaching to the people as best they can through an interpreter. The number of natives who come for medical treatment is increasing.

Edgar T. Hole teaches a class in Swahili of about eighteen boys who are anxious to learn to read and write. Among these is the ten-year-old chief, Onduso, and his court of six or eight persons. Arrangements were made for him to come to the mission by Bro. Hobley, the sub-commissioner, who wishes him to have a simple education and be a superior chief when he grows older. Two bullocks were given the missionaries for their trouble in addition to his support.

The industrial work occupies a large share of time and strength. The garden is producing well, and the first crop of wheat yielded several bushels, which was threshed by the natives beating it on the ground with sticks.

The building of the iron house has been delayed on account of the accident of Arthur B. Chilson, and because parts of the iron were found to be missing and others had to be purchased. On May 28th, however, it was sufficiently completed for A. B. Chilson to occupy one room. The day which followed his moving was made memorable in Kavirondo by two earthquake shocks, which shook the earth until the iron house rattled. Each shock was accompanied by a low rumbling sound, but no perceptible damage was done to the buildings.

In a private letter, Edgar T. Hole says: "On Friday evening, the day of the shocks, it seemed as if all Kavirondo, as far as we could hear, was turned into wailing and din of beating of shields, etc.—anything to make a fearful noise to appease whatever power had shaken the earth, so it would not happen again. It stirs our hearts to missionary zeal to be here and see the throngs of wild, untutored, unclothed heathen groping in such awful darkness and knowing not God and His love. My, but I am thankful for the privilege of being here to represent Him who has all power in heaven and on earth, and who desires all men to know of His love to them."

In referring to the services of the following Sabbath, he writes to a friend: "Our Gospel service is over, and I wish thee could have seen the tremendous audience. However, our present church has no limitations but the horizon, so we had room for all."

E. T. Hole and A. B. Chilson have been eagerly looking forward to the time when they would be joined by others. The last letters tell of E. T. Hole going to Mombasa to meet the expected missionaries. There, on June 24th, he had the inexpressible pleasure of meeting his wife and child and sister Virginia, with her husband, Elisha Blackburn. The party had experienced some rough sea, but at that date all were well, in good spirits and thankful for traveling mercies. After a few days at the coast they expected to take the one weekly train to Risumu, and hoped to reach the mission on July 4th; but the time was a little uncertain as trains on the Uganda Railway do not run with the certainty and speed of American flyers. The road is very rough and trains are liable to stop for trivial circumstances, such as a pet monkey jumping overboard and being chased by its owner until caught.

Emory J. Rees and wife are now in America, having returned from South Africa for a needed rest before engaging in work with the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission. They anticipate visiting some of the fall yearly meetings, but hope soon again to be in Africa.

E. B. M.

The true horror of the judgment-day will be the making manifest of hearts. What I have done will fade before the pre-eminent shame of what I have been. Then deeds will take their true places as mere fruits and types of characters.—Phillips Brooks.

God should be the object of all our desires, the end of all our actions, the principle of all our affections, and the governing power of our whole souls.—Mason.

Correspondence.

Ministers of other yearly meetings with minutes for service in Indiana Yearly Meeting are requested to promptly inform the undersigned that suitable homes may be provided in Marion, where Indiana Yearly Meeting is to be held this year, commencing Ninth month 30th.

As the committee resides in Richmond, unusual care on the part of ministers will be necessary. In writing to the undersigned please give present address and (if changed) also your address on the 25th of Ninth month, that, if necessary, we may address you before leaving for Marion; and, when practicable, state the day and hour, and by what railroad you expect to get to Marion.

Carl Knight	2.00
George W. White	2.00
Mary E. W. White	2.00
On hand	1,112.02

Total $1,150.02

In the statement of Seventh month 23d the total is $7.00 in excess of the items. The following entries should appear: Hannah Bacon, $2.00; Jane Moore, $2.00, and the item crediting L. H. Stevens, $2.00, should read S. H. Stevens, $5.00.

Allen Jay has returned to his home in Richmond, Ind., after attending North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

Irving King, of Brooklyn, N. Y., preached at East Main Street Meeting, Richmond, Ind., First-day morning, the 16th instant.

Charles E. Hiatt, who is located in the meeting in Muncie, Ind., expects to continue his work in that place during the coming year.

Frank Marmon, of Richmond, Ind., was acceptably with Friends at Knightstown, Ind., and spoke recently on "Salvation, and What It Means to Be a Christian."

Elbert Russell conducts a Bible Class at Knightstown, Ind., one evening each week. His teaching on the Sermon on the Mount is especially helpful and instructive.

Friends who desire to correspond with J. J. Mills should send mail in care of Isaac Sharp, 12 Bishopsgate Without, London, England, instead of 2 Bishopsgate, as it appeared last week.

The inauguration ceremonies of Albert J. Brown as president of Wilmington College will be held in the auditorium on the afternoon of Ninth month 9th, at 2 o'clock. There will be addresses by President Brown, President Thompson, of the Ohio State University, and others. The public is most cordially invited to attend.

Friends at Cherokee, Okla. Ter., held their special midsummer meeting the 13th to 16th instant. A number of able addresses were given. Among the speakers were Professor J. Edwin Jay, of Friends' University; Fred T. Coppock, of East Des Moines, Ia.; L. Clarkson Hinshaw, of Wichita, Kan., and Nathan Brown, of Pond Creek, Okla. Ter.

Lydia M. Chase, of Kansas Yearly Meeting, who makes her home with her son-in-law, T. A. Wright, of Kansas City, was 80 years old the 16th of this month, but has been privileged to visit, with a minute, Grand River and Spring River Quarterly Meetings, and has had some service within their limits, much to her own peace and the help of the meetings.

On the 15th instant the Friends in San Francisco opened a night rescue mission on the corner of Fourth and Howard Streets. They also carry on an interesting neighborhood work in homes and a hall, where there are special meetings for women and children. The workers are known as Sunshine Workers, and their residence is No. 928 Harrison Street, San Francisco.

President C. E. Tebbetts, of Whittier College, California, is building on the new college villa tract and will reside in Whittier in the future. School opens Ninth month 15th. Another teacher is to be added. The course is now complete, and the first class will be graduated this year. There is a growing number of students coming to Whittier to escape the rigors of Eastern climate.

Hannah M. Hubbard, who has been located in the meeting at Rose Hill, Kan., has resigned on account of business conflicting with the work. She has taken out a minute liberating her for gospel service within Stella Quarterly Meeting. An ice cream social was given her before she left.

Boulder Monthly Meeting, at Boulder, Col., has lately taken new courage and life, but they are few in number, and Friends who are looking for homes in the West would do well to investigate that locality. Its climate and scenery are delightful, its schools excellent. Persons desiring information can write to Estella Wood, 635 Walnut Street, Boulder, Col.

Lynn Grove Quarterly Meeting was held in Lynnville, Ia., the 7th, 8th and 9th instant. Miriam Johnson, John F. Hanson and David M. Edwards, all ministers from a distance, were present. The gospel was preached and the meeting was strengthened for the duties before her. The business was transacted with unity. A. J. Hanson expects to remain in the meeting at Lynnville the ensuing year.

Mable Douglas, F. K. Jones and C. E. Lewis, members-elect of the faculty of Pacific College for the year 1903-'04, have all been taking work the past few weeks in the University of California. Mable Douglas and F. K. Jones, with his wife and child, who accompanied him to California, have returned to Newberg. C. E. Lewis has returned to his home in Colorado, where he will remain until near the opening of the college year.

Short Creek Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held at Smithfield, O., the 15th instant. It was a time of blessing. Lewis I. Hadley preached with much power. There was a number of ministers present. Effie Murry, who spent twelve years in China as a missionary, addressed the meeting on Seventh-day evening on the needs of the mission field. Reports showed twenty-two accessions during the year. The young people are mostly faithful. Some feel a definite call to the work.

West Branch Quarterly Meeting, at Ludlow, O., the 14th to 16th instant, was a profitable occasion. Reports were received from the subordinate meetings showing very encouraging conditions. The items concerning "spiritual condition," "character of ministry" and "family devotions" were especially gratifying. On First-day the Friends and others brought well-filled baskets and remained all day. President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, preached to large audiences both morning and evening. His ministry was helpful and inspiring. In the afternoon Henry Pickett, of Lynn, Ind., spoke, after which many expressed the devotion of their hearts in testimony.

Whittier, Cal., Quarterly Meeting held at Alamitos, 14th to 16th instant, was a time of great blessing. The theme on Sixth-day was "Sonship—Service." On Seventh-day Lindley Wells stirred his hearers with burning words on "Consecration." On Seventh-day evening a Young People's Christian Endeavor service was held, with a good program. On Sabbath morning Thomas Armstrong gave one of his discourses on "The Safe Abiding Place." Many Friends were in attendance from other places. Besides those mentioned were Caroline Ladd, of Philadelphia; Rhoda M. Hare, Levi Mills, Ervin Taber, W. E. Mills and C. E. Tebbetts. The closing service, led by Amanda Way, was full of power.

H. E. McGrew, his wife and daughter, left Portland, Ore., the 10th instant for an extended stay in the East. H. E. McGrew has been granted a leave of absence for one year from Pacific College, and he expects to take special work in Haverford College. C. E. Lewis, in former years a professor in the College, has accepted the call to act as president of the College during his absence. H. E. McGrew and family will spend two or three days in the National Park en route. Clark Miles, president of the Board of Managers of Pacific College, and his wife opened their home for a farewell reception to President McGrew and wife on the evening of the 6th instant, at which a very pleasant evening was spent by many friends of the honored guests.

Newberg Quarterly Meeting was held in Portland, Ore., from the 7th to 9th instant. Five Friends from Salem Quarterly Meeting were in attendance. Professor Tuff gave a temperance lecture on the evening of the 7th. J. C. Hodson gave an address on Sabbath School work Seventh-day evening, and President C. E. McGrew gave three excellent sermons during the quarterly meeting. The meeting house was crowded Sabbath morning and evening. H. E. McGrew's minute for service in some of the American yearly meetings, granted by New-berg Monthly Meeting, was endorsed by the quarterly meeting. A feeling of perfect unity with him was manifest, and the good wishes of the meeting will go with him and his noble wife wherever the Lord may lead them.

Spring River Quarterly Meeting was held at Friendship, Kan., the 8th and 9th instant. Lydia M. Chase, a minister from Kansas City, and Lewis V. McFarland, were present. The reports from most of the monthly meetings were encouraging. A certificate was granted to Parker Moon for gospel service in Indiana, Western and within the limits of Wilmington Yearly Meetings; also to Philander Blackledge and wife for gospel work within the limits of Indiana Yearly Meeting. Much sympathy and unity was expressed with the Friends in their proposed labors. The missionary and temperance meeting held Sixth-day evening, the Christian Endeavor Conference on Seventh-day evening and the Bible School Conference on First-day morning, were well attended. First-day afternoon C. A. Mitchel, superintendent of the Purity Industrial Home for Boys at Marionville, Mo., held a meeting for men, and in the evening lectured on the duties of parents, to a mixed audience, subject, "Social Purity."

William P. Firth, principal of Pickering College, Pickering, Canada, and wife have just returned from a six weeks' tour through Jamaica. They were at the Mission Home at Seaside the night of the recent cyclone, which wrought such havoc on the island. They describe their experience thus: "About 3 o'clock a.m. we were startled by a crash, and, looking out of the windows, we found that the veranda of the mission had been carried away by the wind. We were advised by our host and hostess to hurry to the basement, where we found some twenty or thirty blacks huddled for safety. The building in which we stopped stood up—that is, the frame of it—but almost all buildings in our neighborhood were leveled to the ground. Huge trees snapped like pipe stems, and the air was filled with every manner of debris, very much as in Western tornados of which I have read." The natives in the storm-swept section are destitute, and many will starve unless provisions are promptly furnished from outside sources.

The 271st meeting of Bloomingdale Quarterly Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting, was held the 15th and 16th instant. On Seventh-day morning the funeral of Raymond Hobson took place. Immediately following this was the business session. The reports gave the number of members as 1,095—number of males, 507; number of females, 588; number of families, 225. Thomas C. Brown, of Carmel, superintendent of the evangelistic work of the yearly meeting, was present and gave counsel and advice. Much unity prevailed in the transaction of the business. On First-day morning the Bible School Conference assembled, and a precious time followed. The reports showed that 618 Friends attend the ten different schools in the quarterly meeting. At the regular meeting on First-day George W. Hobson and Thomas C. Brown were favored in preaching the word.

MARRIED.

DIED.

BACON.—At the home of his son, Dr. John Bacon, Torresdale, Philadelphia, Seventh month 13th, 1903, Josiah Bacon, of Greenwich, N. J., in his 70th year. He was enabled by divine grace to exclaim, with the Psalmist, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with His likeness."

BOLL.—At Chambersburg, O., Seventh month 25th, Sophia Boll, wife of John Boll, nearly 65 years of age. She had been a faithful Christian for many years.

HOBSON.—At Indianapolis, Ind., Eighth month 13th, 1903, Raymond Hobson, in his 19th year. The deceased was a member of Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting.

Events and Comments.

Minister Conger, at Pekin, has secured a written promise from Prince Ching to sign a treaty with the United States. This ends a stubborn resistance by the Chinese which for some time promised to be successful.

Oklahoma people are already making preparations to force their claims to statehood upon the attention of the next Congress, and this time they confidently expect to succeed. Their homogeneous population of 600,000, which is much greater than that of most of the territories heretofore admitted as States, alone entitles them to statehood. The plan now finding most favor among them is to have the whole Indian Territory, including Oklahoma, admitted as a single State.

Vesuvius is again causing intense alarm in the surrounding region, the eruptions of the volcano being very heavy last week. This alarming activity, which followed the shocks of earthquake, is augmenting. The whole district around the volcano is shaken by frequent earth shocks and a perfect panic prevails, the population crowding the churches to pray or gathering in open spaces for safety. Experts, however, affirm that so far there is no reason to fear a serious disaster.

After years of experimentation, it is announced that Thomas A. Edison has perfected his commercial phonograph and made it practicable for taking court testimony and other dictation. The record used is nine inches long, and capable of taking several "letters." It can be shaved 175 times, making it as cheap as letter paper. It is said that with one pair of machines—one for recording, the other for reproducing—one typewriter can, by keeping steadily at his machine, do the work of eight under the present system.

The gift of $1,000,000, with a conditional promise of an additional $1,000,000, by Joseph Pulitzer for the founding in connection with Columbia University of the first adequately equipped and serious school of journalism, is an interesting event. The expressed purpose of the founder to make it possible for young men desiring to enter journalism to obtain systematic training, as law students are fitted for the bar in a law school, is excellent, but there will be more than one opinion about the feasibility of doing this most surely and efficiently in a formal school.

It has seemed probable that Secretary Root would retire from the Cabinet, ever since he was made an Alaskan boundary commissioner. To serve on that body he must absent himself from the country for a period of some duration; service in the Cabinet, indeed, is inconsistent with a mission of such a character. As the time approaches for Secretary Root's departure for England the talk of his retirement naturally increases. His actual resignation, however, assuming that he intends to withdraw from the Cabinet, might be postponed to suit the President's convenience.

The British Premier's complaint that the professional revolutionists are responsible for the turmoil in Macedonia, and that they are obstacles to any peaceful settlement on the basis of Turkish rule, revealed a note of exasperation which probably is felt by all the great European powers in common. None of them wishes to undergo the experience of readjusting the balance of power in the Balkan Peninsula; all want peace in that turbulent region. Yet it is an open question whether the deliberate policy adopted by the mischief makers, of making Macedonia an intolerable nuisance to Europe, will not succeed in the end.

It remains to be seen whether Nebraska can maintain in the courts the validity of its new law requiring all foreign corporations doing business in the State to incorporate again under the laws of that State and pay a fee gauged to the amount of its capital stock. Thus the Standard Oil Company would be required, if the law holds good, to pay $30,000 into the Nebraska State treasury or cease from "doing business" there, by which is meant apparently that it would have to close up its sales agencies. It is calculated that in this way Nebraska can make the New Jersey trusts as profitable to itself as they are to the New Jersey treasury. If Nebraska can constitutionally do this, all the other States can take similar action, and if so, they can impose conditions which would destroy interstate commerce to a very large extent and wall each State in for the exclusive operation of its own corporations. The outside corporations will at once take the Nebraska law into the courts, where its fate will be noted with general interest.

SUBURBANITES

Breakfast on Coffee, a Roll and a Rush for the Train.

The commuter who bolts down a few mouthfuls of food and hurries to catch the train usually catches dyspepsia as well.

The "coffee and roll" road to ill health is not necessary, for there is an easy, pleasant way to get back to health and shake off all the coffee diseases by shifting to Postum Food Coffee. "For a number of years I was a business woman rising early and swallowing a roll and a cup of coffee just in time to catch a train. A feeling of nausea or palpitation and a continual dullness in the eyes and head invariably followed my coffee breakfasts, until one day a good angel in the guise of a woman friend bade me try Postum Food Coffee in place of coffee.

"Always trying to be progressive in my daily life I accepted the advice, and the result was I found Postum a delicious clear coffee-colored beverage suited to the stomach, and satisfying to the appetite. After using Postum faithfully for a month I was surprised at the result in my health. All symptoms of dyspepsia or nervousness had disappeared and because of this marked benefit I reasoned that if such a simple and inexpensive remedy could prove such benefit in my case, why was it not my duty to let other sufferers know about Postum. So I began to try to help my friends, and I have helped many to shake off sickness by recommending Postum in place of coffee.

"There was one who was a victim of nervous dyspepsia, and who craved coffee to such an extent that he invariably drank it in spite of medical advice not to do so, and I could not persuade him to change, so I got his wife to give him Postum in the morning for a few days without saying anything to him about it. The result was really wonderful. He did not detect the change, but noticed that he got over his indigestion. Then we told him the truth about it, and now he takes his Postum regularly, and is so far relieved of his nervousness that his physician predicts a speedy cure. He likes the Postum just as well as he used to love the coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Bible Study and Practical Methods of Work

Character and Objects

The Friends Bible Institute and Training School is not designed to be, or to become, a theological seminary. Its work is marked with the conviction that the gifts and calling of God are not dependent upon scholarship, however helpful this may sometimes be, but rather upon a close personal acquaintance with Himself. Hence the first aim is to have every student form and cultivate this acquaintance. It seeks also to impart a working knowledge of the Scriptures to those who are called of God to the ministry of the Gospel, or to other Christian work—to any, in short, who are to become “fishers of men.”

Other subjects of practical value to the Christian worker, such as Church History, Moral Science, Hygiene, Vocal and Written Expression, are carefully taught.

The school presents the following

Advantages

1. The warm devotional spirit that pervades the work, and the constant, earnest, prayerful attention to the spiritual life and the development of true Christian character. 2. The attention given to forming correct ideas of the Scriptures. The unity of the Bible, the presence of the Holy Ghost in every part, the relation of each book to other books and to the Bible as a whole; its relation to the subject of human salvation, as shown by its historical, typical and prophetic, as well as by its specific doctrinal teachings, are points that become deeply impressed; and the wisdom, power and love of the infinite Author become themes of daily contemplation and praise. 3. Actual service in Missions, Sunday Schools, Bible Classes, Junior Meetings, Mothers' Meetings, and in visiting, is an important factor in training for future usefulness. The student works while he studies and studies while he works. 4. The discipline of the School, which is that of a well-regulated Christian home, greatly aids the development of Christian character. Uniform kindness and courtesy, and intelligent self-restraint, are insisted upon as marks of that love which seeketh not its own, but the good of others. 5. Besides the family worship each morning, a period is set apart each day for private prayer and communion. As far as possible, each student is provided with a room alone, so as to have this hour free from interruption. 6. The Monday afternoon prayer meeting, with its heart-searching instructions, its triumphant testimonies, its confessions and earnest seeking, is an inestimable blessing to many a life. 7. The development of clear conceptions of Scripture doctrine is not the least of the many advantages here enjoyed.

Qualifications for Entering

The indispensable qualifications for admission are, an established Christian character “of good report,” a full consecration, love for the lost, good common sense, readiness to do hard work, and a willingness to be taught and criticized.

No educational qualification is required, the School being intended for all who seek improvement as Christian workers. Yet the advantages of a careful high school or college training, if mind and heart are kept pure and humble and true to the word, are fully recognized and encouraged.

Expenses, Etc.

There are three terms in the school year, which covers a period of thirty-three weeks, including the winter and spring vacations. The tuition is ten dollars per term. Tuition and board for school year, if paid at beginning of each term and vacation period, $125.00. If paid for whole year in advance, $110.00.

CULTURE MEANS POWER TO SYMPATHIZE.

Culture can no longer imply a knowledge of everything—not even a little knowledge of everything. It must be content with general knowledge of some things, and a real mastery of some small portion of the human store. Here is a profound modification of the idea of cultivation which the nineteenth century has brought about. What portion or portions of the infinite human store are most proper to the cultivated man? The answer must be, those which enable him with his individual personal qualities, to deal best and sympathize best with nature and with other human beings.

INSTRUCTION IN QUAKERISM.

If all men could read a book or a letter and reach the same conclusion from what they read, there would be unity of thought and action upon it. But men cannot do this. Different minds have different view-points; things strike them differently and with different degrees of force, and therefore unity of conclusion is not reached. Experience has shown that this is quite as true of the Bible as of any other book. Hence it is that there are such varied views of Christianity and so many denominations of Christians. The only preventative of this is that adopted by the Roman Church—the denial of the right of individual opinion.

Individuals taking similar views of Christian truth unite themselves together in an organization "for joint participation in worship for fellowship and mutual help, and for united effort in the promotion of truth and righteousness." Manifestly there must be an intelligent understanding of the doctrines, testimonies and practices by the members of each organization in order that they may comprehend the reasons for its existence and the common ground upon which they stand. It is a serious question whether such a necessary knowledge is possessed by the bulk of Friends in America to-day and whether we have the proper, or any efficient, means for their obtaining this.

In former times there was less general reading than there is now, and more of Friends' books were read. In former times Friends were more sociable than they are now; there was more visiting and more conversation about the affairs of the Society. In those days traveling ministers went everywhere where a meeting was established or where families of Friends could be found. They were important instructors. As a rule they belonged to the student type, and left a strong impression upon the youth and gave them much instruction. Now all this is changed. And with the change has come an indifference to denominational theology. Indeed, there has been an ignorant protest against all theology, and we have heard "We want less theology and more religion," as though there can be religion without a foundation and a frame, any more than a body without a skeleton. And, too, we, as a body, have been inclined to think that theology was some objectionable thing that others had but we were mercifully free from. But the Society of Friends has just as pronounced a system of theology as has any other body, and its unique simplicity does not at all prevent its being such.

At the present time there is a serious want that should be met. Those who join the church by request too often remain in almost complete ignorance of our distinguishing doctrines and views, while even the children of Friends are usually very poorly instructed. This is not confined to any locality or to any class; it is well-nigh universal. Where shall we find a remedy? The first need is a realizing sense of the situation on the part of the thoughtful and responsible portion of the membership.

There is positive power in knowledge, and the knowledge of which we are speaking is the handmaid of spiritual power. How beautifully they unite in efficient work! Quakerism is so simple, so beautiful, so true, that every member should take delight in thoroughly understanding it. While the rest of the Christian world is paying continued tribute to its worth, we should be all the stronger in upholding it.

We know of no panacea. But much may be accomplished by conferences for instruction and by study classes. Many conferences have been held in recent times, and they have generally given good satisfaction. Some are of wider and some of narrower scope. They may embrace a monthly or a quarterly meeting or they may cover larger areas. Care should be exercised in securing instructors. If an awakening of interest can be secured much will be accomplished, for then private investigation will follow. J. W.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST CONSTRAINETH ME.

BACK of every new step in life which we take, and back of every deed which we perform, there is a motive—something which moves us to it. Of course, there are all kinds and degrees of motives, low ones and high ones, but there is no definite action without one.

The force which moves a man to take a new step in life, or to do a certain deed, is totally unlike the forces that move other objects in the world. These things move because they are pushed by some power which they cannot resist. If we use the word "attraction" for natural forces, we do not mean that the iron follows the magnet because it loves it, or when we say that the earth "attracts" the drops of rain we do not mean that they fall toward it because they have chosen to give themselves to it. We are here in a realm where obedience, if it can be called obedience at all, is blind. Things move because they are irresistibly pushed or pulled.

The moment we come to man we are in a new realm. Men act because they are drawn, or influenced, or attracted by something that appeals to their inner nature—what we generally call consciousness. If we want to get any person, however low in the scale, to do something, we put an inducement before him. We try to attract him the way we want him to go.

This principle holds true also in spiritual things. In fact, it is the very heart and soul of religion. God never drives, or forces, anybody to be good. Saints are never made by blind obedience; they are made by the power of divine attraction. Christ's deepest word about the meaning of the atonement is that if He gives Himself for the world, He will draw men to Himself, and this is what His beloved disciple meant when he said, "We love Him because He first loved us." The divine plan, if we understand the New Testament, is to save men to make them good, to make them holy, by drawing them to Him, and His drawing force is His limitless love as shown in His "unspeakable gift" through Jesus Christ, who loved us and gave Himself for us.

But the apostle Paul applies this principle to every part of life. It not only explains why we come to God for forgiveness, but this Gospel of God's love in Christ becomes an ever-increasing power unto salvation. It is this power of attraction that makes a man leave that which is behind, and press on after the new life. It is this that produces the new man, and so destroys the old. It is the constraining love of Christ which directs all the powers and possibilities of the man. All his work takes a new meaning, for he is now working because the love of Christ constrains him. This motive force is the greatest which can ever come into a human life. The man feels his whole being swayed by the divine attraction. Opposition and hindrances may still remain—they are always present—but he has learned that nothing can separate him from the love of Christ. That love moves him steadily on, though obstacles seen and unseen crowd about him, and even though he is killed all the day long. There is no other principle of life like that.

THE OBLIGATIONS AND PRIVILEGES OF CITIZENSHIP.

BY FRANCIS R. COPE, JR.

Now, I do not say that the members of the Society of Friends are alone to blame for this state of affairs. But I do say that we ought no longer to sit quietly by making nothing more than weak protests. That is not enough. For we may cry out against the evils which surround us, we may sit around our cosy fire-sides in our own lovely homes, and condemn the politicians who hold us in their grasp—yes, we may do all these things till doomsday, and still the corruption will continue, still dishonest Councilmen and mayors will squander our money, and still a demoralized police force will continue to permit the vilest dens of crime to flourish in our very midst. No, my friends, this is a time for action! For let us remember that although our own homes may not be threatened with all these dangers, nevertheless those who are less fortunate may also have homes that are equally sacred, may have sons and daughters with as great a love and appreciation for virtue and purity, and yet at the same time be compelled just because of our negligence, to sell themselves forever to a life of sin.

If I mistake not there is one cause which the Society of Friends, from the days of Fox to the present time, has always championed—the cause of a higher, purer morality in every walk of life. Its methods may have been peaceful, its weapons not the sword or the musket, but those who have been really true to its principles have never hesitated to boldly use their influence against the grosser immoral tendencies of every age.

It is not, perhaps, easy to prove this in so many words. Yet, taking into account the change in circumstances—in customs, in the problems to be faced and the exact way of meeting those problems—it seems to me there can be little doubt in the mind of any one who is at all familiar with the lives of our early Friends as to the vigorous way in which they would have dealt with the moral evils of our own times. Surely if George Fox, in his ardent struggle for religious toleration and legal reform, courted the rebukes of magistrates and was undaunted by imprisonment in filthy jails, he would also have been found in the front ranks of those who are to-day actively working for political freedom and civic betterment! Surely, too, the hundreds of other Quakers who went to prison during the reign of the Stuarts because they believed in that freedom of the truth which later found its recognition in the Toleration Act of 1689, would have been the very last people to permit a gang of selfish politicians to dictate the form of government under which they must live! And certainly no one can read the story of Stephen Grellet's visit to the Edinburg dungeons, or later of Elizabeth Fry's heroic services in the cause of an enlightened philanthropy, and still assert that these people would not have been leaders in the present battle for moral reform! Finally, do you suppose the founder and Governor of this commonwealth would have sat idly by while his noble experiment in government and the fruits of all his labor were turned into a hollow mockery? For remember, it was William Penn who, as if divining the evils which might some time overtake the city, could thus speak of our beloved Philadelphia:

"And thou, Philadelphia, the virgin settlement of this province, named before thou wert born, what love, what care, what service and what travail has there been to bring thee forth and preserve thee from such as abuse and defile thee!

"O that thou mayest be kept from the evil that would overwhelm thee: that faithful to the God of thy mercies, in the life of righteousness thou mayest be preserved to the end.

"My soul prays to God for thee, that thou mayest stand in the day of trial, that thy children may be blessed of the Lord, and thy people saved by His power."

These noble words ought to come as a solemn warning and a beautiful exhortation to each one of us to-day. And yet, as I have tried to show you by a few plain facts and actual examples, the members of this meeting, you and I, the inhabitants of this suburb of Germantown, every dweller within the confines of this great city of Philadelphia—alas, still vainly imagined by some to be the "City of Brotherly Love"—face conditions of civic immorality and crime, of moral lethargy or hopelessness, which are poisoning the very life of the whole community.

Why? Can it be because we are still vainly imagining that the duties of citizenship and clean politics have no connection with the other duties of life; that a man or woman can fulfill his or her part in life and pay no attention to these things? Surely no one of us here to-night can be so blind as not to see that there is a crying need for moral reformation in the politics and government of this city. Can it be, on the other hand, that we recognize the evil but wash our hands of all responsibility under the plea that politics is dirty business, that civic righteousness is impossible, and that there is no use in the Society of Friends soiling its own pure reputation by mixing in a hopeless struggle? Is it possible that some of us still thrust the evident duty of reformation upon other hands, saying to ourselves that our lives must only be the cloistered lives of almsgiving, of charity, of preaching, and that we need not be bothered with the casting of votes or the mingling with dirty saloon keepers and selfish ward politicians? Or, finally, can it be that any of us are too busy making money to afford the necessary time for civic duties and thus prevent the present ravages of vice and corruption in Philadelphia?

But whatever the cause of this neglect may be one thing is certain: that the Society of Friends cannot exist for a single day in this community without justly sharing its full responsibility for the political corruption that is all around us, and that we, as members of the Society, are not only justified but also bound by the most sacred of obligations to take an active part in the struggle for civic betterment. For surely, if it is the Society of Friends which has struggled above all others so valiantly against the spirit of commercialism, which has refused to sanction either the spirit or the practice of a paid ministry, which has always prided itself on the wholesome training of its young people, then it is the Society of Friends which ought to take the lead in the effort to throw out of office the very men who are there only for the money and good morals which they can steal from the people. This much, and nothing less than this, we owe, if for no other reason, at least as an example to our fellow citizens.

And it can be done, too. There is moral material enough in this very gathering to work wonders, only it lacks leadership, courage, the determination to stop talking and sighing and begin acting. It is not my province to point out to you this evening specific remedies for our present evils. In closing I would rather call your attention to the MOTIVES underlying all our more important actions and the necessity for placing the obligations of good citizenship upon the very highest and noblest plane. For I am convinced that once Philadelphia Quakers are roused to the gravity of the present situation—once they place behind their votes the necessary inspiration—they will not be long in finding the paths of useful service.

So let us remember that in very truth

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling;
To be living is sublime."

Too many of us seem to imagine that these obligations are passive or even negative in character; that it is enough if we simply do those things which are demanded of us or refrain from doing those things forbidden by statute. Against this continual emphasis of rights rather than duties, of negative instead of positive obligations, I would protest. Whatever may have been the attitude of Friends in the past on these matters, surely the present is no time for standing still in contemplation. The call to active, intelligent and unselfish service is too plain. And the minute that we appreciate that fact our whole conception of citizenship is broadened and ennobled. For we see at once that the new life calls for the most intelligent service which the best educated among us can render, and that just because of its very hardship and discouragements and its contact with low ideals it demands for its fulfillment the noblest type of human nature.

And he who waits to have his task marked out Shall die and leave his errand unfulfilled.

—James Russell Lowell.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EXPERIENCE AND TESTIMONY.*

All present were no doubt convinced of the enduring worth of religion. But it is not so with all the world. Instead, there is a marked tendency of the times toward non-religion. There are some causes for this tendency, and among them is the fact that the scientific and critical investigation of the times has undermined confidence in all traditional faiths and men are turning away from all religions. Another cause is the fascinating and absorbing interests of this world, with its splendid achievements and its opportunities, which seem sufficient to satisfy the ambitions of mankind.

But this can never be regarded as a normal tendency of man, though so widespread; and one of the striking proofs of this is the fact that leaders of thought and life among all religions are deploring this tendency. The Minister of Education in the Empire of Japan, himself a Buddhist, said to Dr. Hall, in a long, private conversation, "I welcome you heartily and bid you Godspeed in your work. Our people in great numbers are being turned from religion, and I welcome any voice that can and will help to stay this tide toward non-religion in all lands."

Dr. Hall regarded this tendency the opportunity for Christianity to win men back to God. By what means can it be effected?

Not by attacking other religions, nor by attacking non-religion; not by philosophical arguments, and not by efforts to hide failures of Christian work or deficiencies of Christian character, and not even by appeal to any infallibility of Christian men or of any form of truth. But by testimony founded on experience, or the testimony of experience, must the work be done.

What do we mean by experience? We do not mean, by experience, the incidents of our inner lives, by which we come to know truth. These incidents of our inner lives have a deep value to us. However, it is not this subjective experience, but the objective truth, which we learn through these incidents to which we must give testimony; the truth that through these incidents is realized to our reason, to our consciousness, to our affections and our will are to be testified to. The truths thus made real to us we must tell to others publicly or privately, according as we are called.

But how is it that this testimony of experience will win other men to God? Here we are reminded of the value of the living man, not the work he may have done, however great its value, but the value of the man himself while living. It is the individuality that gives power to the testimony and wins some one else to Christ. What is the individuality? What is it that makes me myself? That makes you yourself? It is this, that God has expressed Himself in some special way in each one of us, and differing in each from all expression of himself in others. And it is just this expression of God in each of us that gives power to our testimony over others. It is the same that Jesus so simply expressed in the language, "It is not you that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that dwelleth in you." It is the God made real in us laying hold of the possibility of God in another, or God in us expressing Himself to God in others. This fact it is that makes living men of tremendous value. Let us love and cherish our living friends. Dr. Hall does not find it easier, but harder, to give up those of such individuality that leave us for the unseen, but in one sense grieves more as years go by, but misses more as he values more this living individuality, this living friend, this living expression of God which the world and we all need. For these reasons he would press here the individual possibility and opportunity to witness, as did John the Apostle, to that "which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EMOTION AND RELIGION.

BY T. HARVEY HAINES.

The part which the emotional life plays in the religion of a man is, no doubt, very largely a matter of that man's temperament. And it would be foolhardy to attempt to lay down rules regulating emotional display in religious services. Nevertheless, there are two extremes—a preponderance of emotion, and a lack of emotion, either of which preclude the possibility of the most vital religion. The one supplants it with a make-believe religion, and the other deprives it of air to breathe and so kills; while emotion in its proper relation to religion gives it that broad and fully organic character, that constant, steady soul growth, that truly consistent development, which has only to be seen to be appreciated as vastly superior to either of the extremes.

Instances of the religion of excitement, as it might be called, and of the quietest sort, are not far to seek. In fact, it seems easier to find such than instances of the balanced growth. If this is the case it is imperative with all who hold dear the cause of religion, to set forth clearly in their own minds the proper relations of the feeling life to man's spiritual development. It is in the hope of aiding such a purpose that this paper is written. We shall best get our orientation in the subject by considering first what seem to be the wrong relations of emotion and religion.

1. The extreme quietism of what we may call the middle period of Quakerism, and which still maintains in some places, was the natural outcome of George Fox's view of a priesthood of believers, when the original missionary zeal had been lost. The function of the mediating priest being done away with, and the individual being primarily concerned with his own soul's safety after death he naturally settles down to a mystic attitude. Religion, then, consists of a proper attitude of soul toward God, and the social element is minimized or even excluded. In fact, religion is too sacred to be talked of as matters of common experience, and the tendency is to keep it altogether secret, to make it wholly a matter of the closet. Under these circumstances it tends to atrophy. For we are dependent for our growth—growth of the person or self—in a very large measure upon the stimuli which come to us from other human beings. It is where life touches life, that new life originates. "As iron sharpeneth iron," so does life meeting life in sympathetic co-operation contribute to that other life, and also get life itself from contact with the other. Of this close interdependence of men we are all fully persuaded in an economic sense. Its truth in regard to religious growth is not so universally conceded. Nevertheless, it is as true in this sphere as in any other. Man cannot live unto himself alone in religion. An expressionless life in religion is no life at all. One cannot be without doing. The modern St. Simeon Stylites is no more admired than his prototype. In fact, he is less admired, and that because the social barrier which he builds about his inner life is more effectual than was the pillar of St. Simeon, which only raised him out of the crowd in a physical sense. But it is not for praise of men, I am told, that these saints shut out the vulgar from the inner sanctuary. And I know full well, it is for inner peace, for the sweet contentment that comes from a sense of doing His will that they strive thus to be alone.

This is all very well in its place. But the mistake consists in making this the whole life. We have not so learned the Christian religion—Christ's message to men. It is a religion for men who are members one of another, a society or community. We must, of course, have our places and times of being alone with God. There is a secret place or part in the life of each, into which no man or friend may ever enter, however dear, or however much we strive to allow it. This is God's acre, and it is a most precious part of our personality which we must cultivate for ourselves, for God and for society. Here it is that we go for the energy that is to carry us through the struggles. In one sense the severest struggle of all is in the secret place of the heart. Here it is that the determinations are made as to which of many ideals shall prevail—what kind of man I shall be. Here it is that I fight it out to the finish with the enemies of my own household. Here it is that each of us must tread the wine press alone. Each must work out his own salvation. No man can do for the salvation of his brother when it comes to this part of the work. This is the realm where we have been left to our own determination. Here we are free. Here in the face of these tremendous issues man finds himself appalled. Here, if anywhere, he certainly needs God. Here is the necessity of the life hid with God. Here he calls upon his Father who seeth in secret. This is the part of any good man, of which his generation is not worthy.

But I emphasize the importance of this secret inner life with God, only to bring out its insufficiency in itself. It is insufficient both from the individual and from the social point of view. That which is determined upon in the closet is not thereby incorporated into his life. It yet remains to realize this ideal which has attained first place in his affections. To say that an ideal is regnant in a man's life means that it is controlling his action. The ideal must be worked out right in the confusion and turmoil of this work-a-day world. We are of society—not parasites, but members one of another. Our growth depends on the development of those around us, and theirs depends upon ours. The bonds that knit us together are those of sympathy. Through the sympathetic feelings man acts with man as if each were the other; i.e., each takes, in a measure, the standpoint of the other. Sympathetic feelings are the nerves of human society, by which each member is enabled to respond to a stimulus affecting a distant member as though it affected himself directly.

As one grows in responsiveness to distant stimuli; i.e., stimuli affecting distant members, he also develops himself. This factor of the Dialectic of Personal Growth, as it has been called, by which one grows himself as he becomes more largely responsive to sympathy, is an admirable illustration of the paradox of the Gospels, "He that loseth his life for my sake or the gospel's, shall find it." By giving for another, i.e., sacrificing, as it seems, one's own interests, those interests are returned a hundredfold. In fact, this is the only way a self grows. By an apparent suppression of egoistic motives, the ego is nurtured into the only real life, the life of the higher individual. We ourselves rise on our own dead selves to selves we had dreamed of in our periods of inaction, but by a way we could not dream of. It was through action that we saved ourselves, and that of a self-renunciatory sort. The universal law of growth is that it comes by giving. "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die," etc. So, also, spiritual growth is no exception. Growth in grace occurs when a man comes out of his closet, forgets himself, remembering only his ideal, and lives for others. And the more he lives this life of sympathetic helpfulness, the larger and better person he becomes. To stay in the closet, therefore, when my mind is made up, when I have conquered myself and am ready for the day's work, is not only a life of selfishness, it is a life that is suicidal both for self and others. It keeps in a napkin the talent meant for use. I have a head of energy accumulated which calls for expenditure. If I am true to my manhood, I will up and do. "Be it but the infinitesimal part of a product," whatever there is in me of God-given power to produce, "in God's name, I will produce it." Let mine be a life of consecrated service.

DAVID BECOMES KING.

2 Samuel 2: 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! Psa. 133: 1.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 7.—David becomes King. 2 Sam. 2: 1-11.
Third-day, Ninth mo. 8.—David becomes King. 2 Sam. 5: 1-10.
Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 9.—The first anointing. 1 Sam. 16: 1-13.
Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 10.—A king's homage. Psa. 21: 1-7.
Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 11.—The Son of David. Mark 11: 1-11.
Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 12.—David's greatness. 1 Chron. 11: 1-9.
First-day, Ninth mo. 13.—David flees to God. Psa. 61.

The time of the present lesson follows closely on the last. The intervening chapter (2 Sam. 1) should be read. It contains another account of the death of Saul, which cannot be harmonized with that given in the last lesson. The easiest explanation is that the Amalekite lied. The beautiful lament by David over Saul and Jonathan should be carefully read. It is said to be taken from the Book of Joshua, which was doubtless a collection of national songs. In the Revised Version it is given in the form of parallelisms, which add to the effect. It is rather remarkable that there is no reference in it to Jehovah.

As was said in a previous note, the division into First and Second Samuel is an arbitrary one, as the narrative is continuous. 2 Samuel is practically the history of David's reign, but, as the writer has arranged his book rather according to the subject matter than in accordance with the occurrence of events, the chronology is difficult, and commentators differ in a number of instances. According to the old chronology David began to reign in Hebron B.C. 1055; according to later calculations it was 1017. David was 30 years old when he became king (2 Sam. 5: 4). Seldom has there been a man better fitted for his position by his previous life and training. "As shepherd he had acquired the spirit of calm thought and reflection; as courtier he had been trained in prudent self-control and chivalrous generosity; as outlaw he had learned quick sympathy with the oppressed, knowledge of men, and the power of government; and, above all, each successive phase of experience had quickened and developed that conscious dependence upon God which was the fundamental secret of his strength throughout his life."

1. "After this." The death of Saul and his sons and the things connected with it. "Enquired of the Lord." Probably through the high priest, Abiathar. David wished to have divine guidance. "Go up" to assume the royal position. Hebron was situated very near the center of Judah, was very defensible, and David was well known (1 Sam. 30: 31). This Jezreel was in Judah.

2. "His two wives." See 1 Sam. 25: 42, 43.

3. "His men." Probably 600. See 1 Sam. 23: 43. "With his household." This showed that they intended to settle. Probably they were returning to their homes.

4. "Men of Judah." This was an assembly of David's own tribe. Compare 1 Sam. 30: 26. "Anointed David." This was a public ceremony, and was the formal beginning of his reign. He was afterwards anointed when he became king over all Israel (2 Sam. 5: 3). "And they told David." These words do not seem to have any connection with what goes before. "Jabesh-Gilead." A town east of the Jordan. See 1 Sam. 11: 1-11, and last lesson, 1 Sam. 31: 11-13.

5, 6. This "conciliatory message is virtually an appeal to them to recognize him as Saul's legitimate successor."

7. "Now therefore let your hands be strong, and be ye valiant; for Saul your lord is dead, and also the house of Judah have anointed me king over them." Amer. R. V. This shows that David hopes that the men of Jabesh-gilead will join him.

8. "Abner." Saul's nephew and general; he was the most influential man in Saul's kingdom. "Ishbosheth." This word means "man of shame," and was a nickname; his name according to 1 Chron. (8: 33; 9: 39), was "Esh- (or Ish) baal," "man of Baal." For a similar substitution compare Mephibosheth for Meribaal (2 Sam. 11: 21). It is quite likely that "Baal" here means "god," and not necessarily the special god "Baal." Ishbosheth was the fourth son of Saul, and seems to have been a weak, inefficient man. Abner seems to have been the real ruler himself, Ishbosheth being a mere figurehead. "Mahanaim." This was a walled city east of the Jordan, on the Jabbok, not far from the place where Jacob saw "the angels of God" after leaving Laban. Gen. 32: 2. Later, David himself took refuge here from Absalom. 2 Sam. 17: 24. The word means "two hosts."

9. "Gilead." This word includes, apparently, the whole district east of the Jordan which was held by the Israelites. "Ashurites." Members of the tribe of Asher, in the northwestern part of Galilee. "Jezreel." This was in the southern part of Galilee. "Ephraim." South of Galilee. "All Israel." This implies that David only controlled Judah. The districts named as being ruled by Saul's son nearly comprised the later kingdom of Israel. All this was the work of Abner.

10. "Was forty years old," etc. The chronology of this verse is difficult. Ishbosheth could not have been 40 years old at the time of Saul's death. The best explanation is that the reckoning is made from the time Ishbosheth began to reign over "all Israel."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Seek for divine guidance.
2. Be courteous.

Only when men have dared to think of themselves sublimely, as possible reflections of the life of God upon earth—only then does sin become essentially and forever horrible.—Phillips Brooks.

TOPIC FOR NINTH MONTH THIRTEENTH.

FEASTING THAT MAKES LEAN SOULS.

Plain living is not certain to lead to high thinking, but there is practical certainty that luxury and self-indulgence will destroy the nobler capacities and aspirations. We do not know just what would have taken place if the Israelites had not given utterance to their fears of starvation. Perhaps the same gift of manna would have been given; but in whatever way, God would certainly have supplied their needs, and their complaint only shows their lack of faith and their readiness to put the flesh pots of Egypt in favorable contrast with deliverance from bondage and the enjoyment of the opportunities of free men.

Our snare may not be the same, but the indulgence of earth-born appetites and desires is to many the cause of the weakening and the final overthrow of the spiritual powers. Some of these we may easily condemn as gross, while others make their appeal in so refined and insinuating a fashion that they are hardly recognized as belonging to the same class. Whatever absorbing pursuit or indulgence deadens our better natures, comes within the class of forbidden feastings. Wealth, power, art, scholarship—these, and much besides, right enough in right places, may be so sought as to shut the doors to the fullness and excellence of the divinely-appointed life.

The grossness of intemperance and the fatal blight that it brings to the threefold nature of man mark it as an evil to be especially reprobated. There is often much to be said in behalf of the victim of the drink habit, but nothing in extenuation of the evil itself. A man may be so born, so nurtured, so environed, that escape from the habit is all but impossible under our system of legalized death traps. The greed of revenue guides the conduct of the voter. The State authorizes the pit to be digged. The manufacturer and the dealer accept the opportunity and fill their coffers from the ill-spent earnings of the victims of an evil appetite, paying to the State the price of her infamy; while the drinker, whether in so-called moderation or in admitted excess, drinking to his own ruin, is the sandy and crumbling foundation upon which the whole system rests. "The traffic must be made to bear its own burdens," men say; but when the drunkard falls in miserable destruction to his own place, who that build upon his weakness or his wickedness will escape that destruction?

The city whose revenues are blood money or the price of woman's shame, we cry out against; but how shall we discriminate between the particularized instance and the system of which it is the well-known and inevitable fruitage? The nation boasts of its revenue, and the taxpayer rests on a false support of reduced taxation; but the fruit is not prosperity, but leanness. "In the revenues of the wicked is trouble," and in God's reckoning the judgment comes upon those who devise and accept as well as upon those who execute.

SEASIDE MISSION.

Eighth month 12th, 1903.

My Dear Parents:

Possibly you may have heard of the terrible calamity that has visited our island. We have not escaped, but we have our lives.

I suppose it was a cyclone that swept through all this country. We have heard of a great loss of life, and there must be more than we know of.

It is impossible to describe the devastation and ruin. You have read in the papers of tornadoes and cyclones, but you cannot imagine what a fearful experience it is to go through one.

Our Seaside chapel is gone to splinters. Our boys' school building is flat. The roof and one gable has not been found yet. Amity Hall chapel and school house are standing, but the latter was moved. The Happy Grove house stands, but has suffered injury. Seaside house, our own home, stands, but its veranda roof is gone. The kitchen and chimney and outbuildings are gone. The windows in Seaside are badly broken and are now barricaded. The roof is sound.

The storm raged all night, but the mischief was done inside of two hours. We are housing the homeless. We had one hundred people sleeping under our roof last night. The worst is yet to come. There is a likelihood of famine. All of the fruit-bearing trees are gone. The gardens and farms are ruined of their crops. All communication by telegraph or conveyance or mail is cut off. This letter is being sent by a messenger who walks twenty-five miles to Port Antonio, with a hope that the United Fruit Company can send this to you by a steamer.

Mr. and Mrs. Firth, of Pickering College, Canada, came to spend Monday night, little knowing what they were going to go through. I had to send them on horses to Bowden, and the man who went with them says they had an awful time getting through. Another man had to go along with a cutlass to cut their way through fallen trees and debris, and finally they had to leave horses and foot it.

Worcester Place house stands, with many windows broken, but the outbuildings have gone. The Baptist mission, above us, has lost everything, but their lives are saved. We are housing them now at Happy Grove, and expect to put them at Hainning.

Chapels, churches and dwellings are down everywhere. We have lost three chapels, and have not heard from our outer, more distant stations.

It is nothing short of a miracle that the Seaside cottage stands. I feel that God took special care of the house and Happy Grove. I cannot tell you how thankful I am. I think everybody considers it God's interposition. As we look out the great houses that were upon the hills cannot be seen. Hills are like hills in America in winter, foliage all gone.

You might never have heard from us by my hand. Pray that famine may be averted.

With love,

ARTHUR [H. SWIFT.]

Hector's River, Jamaica.

RELIEF FOR JAMAICA.

A distressing calamity has fallen upon the island of Jamaica. The night of Eighth month 10th, a severe hurricane passed over the island, leaving ruin and destruction broadcast.

Amid this wholesale ruin throughout the island, it is a cause of deep gratitude that the loss of life is comparatively small, and that the lives of our workers and members, as far as we have heard, are preserved. But the property loss is very great, and much distress and suffering will follow to our members and to the mission work unless it is relieved at once. Among the losses to mission property are the following:

Happy Grove Girls' School is considerably damaged and drenched with water.

The Boys' School Building is blown down, though some of the material is not destroyed.

Seaside Chapel, except the foundation and the stone work on the addition which was being erected, is destroyed.

Seaside Home is much damaged, windows broken and rooms and furnishings flooded with water.

The East Indian Chapel at Golden Grove, is entirely destroyed.

The village of Holland Bay, including the Mission Chapel, is swept away.

Glen Haven and St. Elizabeth Stations have not yet been heard from.

The banana crop has been wholly destroyed in the east part of the island. Nearly all the dwellings of the natives, including those of our own members, are destroyed.

The property loss in the island is estimated at $10,000,000.

Superintendent A. H. Swift writes: "As far as the eye can reach, the foliage is gone. The hills are no longer green, but have the color of bare tree trunks and limbs; where we were accustomed to see buildings now there are blanks. . . . Thousands upon thousands of cocoanut trees are destroyed everywhere. The landscape of Jamaica is entirely changed. Last Sabbath it was blossoming as a rose and rejoicing in great agricultural prosperity, and now it is a bare wilderness, with thousands homeless.

. . . The worst is yet to come, I fear. The people's fields and gardens, that sustain their lives, are entirely destroyed, and the only things that they can get will not grow before three months. Sweet potatoes, corn and beans can grow and bear in that time. Between now and then famine awaits us."

Bananas planted now will yield no income for twelve months. This, the leading industry of the island, being paralyzed, much suffering must necessarily follow. The natives and our own members need help in order to avert starvation. The best help we can give them is to furnish them employment at wages sufficient for a bare living. Extensive repairs must be made in order to save our remaining buildings—and some of those destroyed must soon be replaced in order that our work be not permanently crippled. We need also to plant at once several acres in bananas to replace those destroyed on the mission properties. Much native labor will also be needed in clearing away the effects of the storm.

There are about 600 Friends upon the island, and besides these there are about 100 tenants upon the recently-acquired Haining estate. So at least 1,000 persons are under the direct influence of our missions, and look to us for advice and assistance in this time of need.

We appreciate the generous support that has been given the Jamaica work this year, and it is only the extreme urgency of the present need that renders it necessary to ask for this further and generous offering. Iowa Friends are responding liberally to this need, but the immediate need goes beyond the ability of Iowa Yearly Meeting to provide for.

In the midst of the general plenty of this land, and in view of Jamaica's distressing need, we ask that Friends generally make liberal contributions to this relief fund.

Remittances should be made promptly to the treasurer, H. D. Lane, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

C. L. MICHENER.

Holguin, Cuba, July 13th, 1903.

Dear Friend: Juan F. Galvez has just returned to Gibara this morning after a two weeks' campaign with us. God has wondrously blessed him in the preaching of the Word. The week before he came we had two cottage preaching services and advertised his coming well. He preached first on Sunday night, the last in June, to a full house, then again on Tuesday night at the mission to another full house. Thursday and Friday nights we had cottage meetings, with an attendance of 40 to 50 in different parts of town. Brother Galvez always preached good sermons. He preaches with as much earnestness to a dozen as to a hundred, almost. Sunday night, the 5th of July, he again preached in the church, which was filled with eager listeners. This week we had three more cottage meetings, two by invitation of the owners of the houses. At one was an attendance of nearly 100 persons. Last night he preached his last sermon in the church. We had 112 chairs, and they were full, and in front of the large double doors, opened, of course, was a crowd of 60 to 75 persons. There is always a crowd on the sidewalk, but one or two policemen preserve good order so they can hear the sermon and cause no trouble. Now, what is the result of this work? The town is somewhat stirred and awakened, and hundreds have heard the gospel. Many have been made to pause and consider the question of salvation. Some give good evidence of conversion and 12 have joined the candidates' class, so that now we have 18 members. Last night, when I gave the opportunity to sign the cards, I knew of three. They signed and then I said, "Are there others who wish to sign?" A policeman, who had attended most all our meetings, at once arose and said, "I wish to." Another man and two women made seven last night. Thus has God blessed us beyond what we could expect.

The other day my wife and I were calling at the home of a poor woman, whose husband is in the asylum, crazed by the "spirits," driving him to seek money. She was suffering with a raging toothache, which had continued five days and nights, but she said, "Pastor, when can you give me a meeting in my house like you did in Pedro's?" We will give her one in a few days. That night she came to a cottage meeting near by. She joined the class last night.

A young man who has been attending my Sabbath School class, in the home of Rafael, our first convert, has been converted. He was very fond of dancing, but left an invitation to a ball last Wednesday night and came to prayer meeting and gave his first testimony with six others in the face of a crowd of forty or fifty persons. He prayed in his room, but his mother told all the neighbors about it and they laughed at him, so he said that he would have to go to the river to be alone to pray; but last night he asked for a card for his mother. She was at the Sabbath School yesterday afternoon. Eight of the members are from our Sabbath School in the home of Rafael and Soledad his wife. God's Spirit is working in the hearts of many. Brother Galvez was tireless in his efforts. He was visiting and talking all the time, and God was with him. He seems to be fearless of man, and full of the love of God. He always draws a crowd, and the people also enjoy his visits, talking with him and asking questions freely. When at our home he would frequently sit just outside the door, and it was no uncommon thing to find him in earnest conversation with a man about Jesus and his salvation. We have learned to love and esteem him as a brother. May God continue to use him as a messenger to his own people. He is a good Bible student.

I felt a desire to tell thee of these blessings without waiting till the end of the month.

Yours in His name,

C. C. HAWORTH.

Be thou prepared for the fight, if thou wilt win the victory.—Kempis.

Correspondence.

TO THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Since leaving Stavanger, in the South, where the annual meeting of Friends in Norway is held, we have slowly made our way from place to place toward the northward, until here, under the Arctic circle, where the midnight sun is seen for more than two weeks in midsummer, and where the gigantic granite peaks pierce the clear, blue sky, and the old Atlantic, which appears, as far as eye can reach, so filled with countless little islands, on many of which can be seen a goat or a sheep or two, which are conveyed there by a farmer's boat, and there left to pick what little grass that as if by chance has grown in the crevices of those bare piles of stone. For indeed everywhere that the eye can scan it is the same cold, gray stone, except here and there in the sheltered valleys can be seen a small tract of land, containing from one to five acres, which is covered with grass. Upon nearing these islands it is scarcely possible to believe that in these little nooks, amidst these peaks, there were a thriving people. They call it prosperity here, but their wealth lies in the sea. When, in the middle of January, the fish come, the billows of the great ocean are completely covered with fishing boats, which in their Viking style, present a picturesque scene. But at this time of the year this fishing farmer has gone to making hay. The old norsk fishing smack is cosily riding at anchor, just in front of the home door, and in full view, around the house, is the fisherman, with his wife and children; he, with the old short sythe, mowing the grass, and she, with a wooden rake, scattering the bunches of the new-mown hay or raking it together and hanging it on a portable wire fence to dry, while the children are helping or hindering in their own way, as children do. This same fisherman farmer, after working hard all the week, rests when the day for church comes. On Sunday morning he is seen slowly (for they are never in a hurry) making his way, with his family, to the district church, which may be several miles by land, or perhaps by water. But there he goes: his wife or one of the children must have the blessing of the priest of the parish; as for himself, well, he can rather shift for himself. For, after all, was he not baptized and confirmed? and now, if he does swear and fall into a passion, it is soon over, and he did not mean anything, anyway. He seems utterly at ease until his form of religion is abused, when he is as valiant as a Turk in its defense. The priest has become almost the only door to heaven to these people, yet they do not really worship him. But they look to him for everything in the way of spiritual blessing. And why not? Each man is assessed so much each year to make the 5,000 kroner (or about $1,350), the salary of the priest. If the man refuses to pay, this is put in the general taxes, and he is compelled to pay. Then why not get all out of it there is for him? He paid dearly for it. For many have gone from these bleak shores to much more congenial homes in America, the land of the free, leaving the burden of the taxes upon the few yet remaining. Yet in the midst of these few there are a people, scattered, 'tis true, but who are strong for the Lord, who, although they must pay the church tax, will not conform to the priest nor his authority. In many respects they have suffered much, as Friends in England and America formerly did, even to the spoiling of their goods and imprisonment. These mission Friends, as they are called, are a very spiritual-minded people, and have given us a very warm welcome, as they have other Friends who have visited among them. They are not yet clear of outward forms, but many are ready to be shown the real spiritual way. We shall only spend a fortnight here, when we shall return to the Vikten Islands, where we spent six weeks among a people much like these in surroundings, who were once Mission Friends, but who have entirely left the ways of the State Church, and call themselves Fri Venner, or Free Friends. They are the most like Friends of any we have seen, for the regular Friends in Stavanger have no ministers or elders, while the Vikten Friends do, and have likewise suffered much for their faith. They have a system or custom, but no discipline, and we are looking forward to getting them to adopt some form of discipline, or at least let us have some written statements of their faith. Many of them desire to organize and become a part of some body of Friends, and we are anxious they should, for they are a good people and true. Upon landing among them at Rörvik, a small village of some forty houses and a Lutheran Church, we were met by an English Friend, J. J. Armistead, who, with his wife and family, at the call of God, left their home in Scotland and have moved out here among these people, living among them and preaching to them the real life in the Spirit. They have labored faithfully for more than a year, and he can speak the language fairly well now. Truly they have sacrificed much for the good of these people, and we know there is never a sacrifice without its blessing. As we visited from house to house in the service of the Lord, it was so sweetly strange to find so many ready to receive the truth. At first they were timid, and did not seem so open to us; but we soon found they had so often been imposed upon by teachers of various doctrines. But here and there we found a friend, and we have had some very pleasant visits of encouragement to these. The people on the Vikten Islands are moving an old meeting house to a more suitable location, near the Armisteads' home. When it is accomplished they hope to get a Sunday School started for the children. These children, not being in the State Church, are deprived of their little education, and the Armisteads desire to help them in this line. But the people are very poor indeed. While they must pay the Church tax, yet the children are not educated, and there is a great need of a teacher, who could be obtained for a small amount; also the Sunday School lesson pictures and chart, printed in the Norwegian language. Never did I see people and children relish tracts and Bible pictures as these do. The fish were not more than half as many this year, and unless relief comes many will suffer during the coming winter.

Our sympathy is with these Friends, and we earnestly on their behalf solicit the prayers of the children of the King for them in their need.

Your friends,

CHAS. AND MAY REPLOGLE.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Mellie Douglas has returned to her home in Long Beach after a pleasant visit with relatives in Oregon.

A normal class has been organized in the Long Beach Bible School, with Alvah Haworth, formerly of Lowell, Kan., as teacher.

Henry K. Peckham, Smyrna, N. Y., is the newly-elected clerk of Butternuts Quarterly Meeting. He is also chairman of the Evangelistic Committee.

J. William Peckham preaches most acceptably at Upperville, N. Y., going to and from his home in Utica to meet other appointments on First-days.

Lindley A. Wells and family, of Vermilion Grove, Ill., are now located in the meeting at Long Beach, Cal. Thirteen new members were added at the last monthly meeting.

Frank H. Clark will soon remove from Brookfield, N. Y., where he has been acting as local minister to North Branch, Kan., where he will have charge of the academy.

J. Lee Sutherland, of Morris, N. Y., will do service as local minister in that meeting, and also in the meeting at West Laurens, N. Y., while engaged in teaching at West Oneonta.

Martilla Cox preached in New Garden Meeting House, Guilford College, on First-day, the 23d ult. Her mother accompanied her. They returned to their home, in Indiana, a few days later.

Edith Dillon, who has been engaged in missionary work for about seven years at Tokio, Japan, has returned to her home at Northbranch, Kan., for rest and for a visit with her parents and friends.

Lewis Draper has accepted a position in a grammar school at Ithaca, N. Y., and will be unable to continue his work in the meeting at Morris, N. Y. The meeting has recently received a legacy of $1,000, to be used for repairs and gospel work.

The Hesper Academy opened Ninth month 1st. Edith Smith, A.B., is retained as principal, and Mary Folger, A.B., has been employed as assistant. The conditions are very favorable and the outlook promising for a successful school year. The school is located with healthful surroundings in a rural district, and is permeated with high moral and religious sentiments. The postoffice address is Eudora, Kan.

Ogden Monthly Meeting was held at Ogden, Ohio, the 22d ult. Le Roy Clemmens was favored in preaching. A minute was granted John L. Kittrell and wife to attend Iowa and Western Yearly Meetings.

John Canady, Levi Keys and Pleasant Mills, members of Vermilion Monthly Meeting, Illinois, have been visiting in Long Beach, Cal. Caroline Ladd, of Richmond, Ind., is also spending the summer there.

William F. Lewis, a minister, whose home is now in Colorado, attended Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting at Northbranch, Kan., Eighth month 8th. His ministrations of the gospel was greatly blessed to the meeting. Edith Dillon also added much interest to the missionary meeting by her account of work in Japan.

Butternuts Quarterly Meeting was held at Morris, N. Y., the 14th to 16th ult. J. William Peckham, from Utica, and J. L. Spicer, general superintendent of evangelistic work, were present. The latter's lecture on "The Quaker of the Olden Time and His Message" drew a large crowd to the old building, erected in 1810.

Ohio Yearly Meeting opened the 27th ult. at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, under favorable auspices. A special prayer and praise service was held at 8.30 a.m., the yearly meeting proper beginning at 10.30. Credentials from seven visiting Friends ministers and missionaries were read; also the letter from London and Dublin Yearly Meeting. A full report will appear next week.

The Alumni Association of Bloomingdale Academy, Indiana, held a very successful reunion on the evening of Eighth month 14th. A banquet was served and many former pupils of the school were present. On the evening of the 15th occurred the regular public meeting of the alumni. A debate on the question, "Resolved, That the United States should hold the Philippine Islands as colonial possessions," drew a large audience.

Bloomingdale Academy, Indiana, opens Ninth month 29th. The outlook for a prosperous year is unusually promising. New apparatus has been added to the laboratory during the year, and new operating tables for individual work greatly facilitate experimental work in science. The south recitation room has been fitted up for laboratory work, the former laboratory being too small. Professor A. F. Mitchell remains as principal of this academy.

Salem Quarterly Meeting, held at Lynn, Mass., the 20th ult., was an occasion of much interest. Several of the Yearly Meeting committees met before and between the regular sessions, which brought together a large number of Friends from other quarterly meetings. There were in attendance from other yearly meetings the following ministers: Richard H. and Anna B. Thomas, of Baltimore; Seneca H. Stephens, of New York; James M. and Exie Estees, of Ohio, and John H. Dillingham, of Philadelphia. A. Edward Kelsey also had some service and referred to his prospect of entering upon the work to which he has recently been appointed, that of general superintendent of the Friends' Mission at Ramallah, Palestine. He, with his wife and Rosa E. Lee, of Tennessee, who were also present, expect to sail from Boston on the 10th inst. The latter is to act as matron and teacher in the Boys' Training Home, which, with the Girls' Training Home, is under the care of the Foreign Mission Board of New England Yearly Meeting. The meeting was informed that the Evangelistic Committee of the yearly meeting had arranged with Alfred I. Ware, of Portland, Me., to enter the field as general superintendent, commencing his labors the 1st inst. Much satisfaction was expressed with the action of the committee.

POCONO PINES ASSEMBLY.

Summer resorts are as varied and numerous as our social classes. For those who prefer to spend their vacation in quest of pleasure alone there are resorts where they may enjoy a continual merry-go-round of pastime. For those who seek health and rest there are special places and equipment, and for those who want healthful surroundings, innocent amusement, new acquaintances and mental improvement there are the Chautauqua resorts.

The writer is spending his vacation at the newest of the Chautauqua resorts, this place called Naomi Pines, and situated upon the shores of the largest lake in the Pocono Mountains. The "atmosphere," or spirit, of the place will serve me as a subject for a vacation letter.

Here, we all know one another. My family had not been here fifteen minutes, when some children took possession of my boy, my wife was introduced to many women, and I was taken in tow by my friends, Rufus W. Miller and Prof. Kemp, and introduced to all the men in sight.

At night, if the weather is too cool, or too dark, for strolls out of doors, we sit in the Exchange, or large sitting-room of the Inn. On the mantel of the rough stone fireplace, which is ten feet wide and filled with a roaring fire of logs, there is a wooden panel bearing the inscription in old English text:

"I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good thing I can do, or any kindness I can show to any fellow-being, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

This inscription, the sentiment of a

FOUND OUT.

What a Mother Found Out About Food.

A mother found out what a change of food can do for a whole family, from the nursing baby to the adults, in this way: "Twice during the summer months my baby was taken violently ill, and was very slow getting over the attacks. His former diet of cow's milk alone ceased to agree with him, so I combined it with an expensive infant's food, but he soon became very much constipated.

"Then I shifted to Grape-Nuts Food, and found that this was just what baby needed, adding it to his milk after softening in hot water. Baby has thrived upon this food, and is now healthy and strong, and chubby as any mother could ask, which you know is saying a great deal.

"It did not take me long to find out that a saucer of Grape-Nuts and cream is just what is needed by the tired, nervous mother, and I have also proved to my own satisfaction that when the children are old enough to chew Grape-Nuts it is far better for them than oatmeal or any other mushy foods, for it develops their teeth and helps their digestion, and their minds seem much brighter and more active, too.

"Truly here is a wonderful food, and one for the entire family." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

CONSIDERING the cost of labor, of applying it, and its great covering capacity, Pure White Lead is not only the cheapest Paint in the first cost, but because of its extreme durability is by far the cheapest in the end.

member of the Society of Friends, reflects the general disposition, I believe, of all the people here. And this reminds me, in turn, of the fact that the manager of the Inn and some of the guests are Friends. Other guests are members of the Reformed Church; still others are Presbyterians; a few are Baptists, and there is a sprinkling of Episcopalians.

We have no dancing or card playing, but we are a happy family circle, nevertheless. We have music, and at stated times parlor entertainments and illustrated lectures. Most of us being students in the Pocono Pines Assembly and Summer Schools, which have been holding daily sessions in the grove of old pine trees adjoining the Inn, we are never without subjects for conversation. The daily excursions of the class in nature study furnish many novelties for inspection and chatter during the evenings.

The lake, three miles long and three-quarters of a mile wide, with its wooded shores and islands, affords opportunities for boating, bathing, fishing and picnicing.

Although we are on a plateau, two thousand feet above the sea level and twenty miles wide, there are mountain peaks and knobs within view and walking distance. While I am writing this, the setting sun is spreading gorgeous rays over and around a peak six miles to the westward, and in full view of the Inn porch. And the lake, as if it, too, were moved to admiration, has caught all the colors and flung them over its placid bosom.

Coming back to the social side, our dining-room is more than a place where the inner man and the inner woman may be filled. Here, too, an unseen presence seems to reign over and through all intercourse. The sole decoration on the walls is a wooden panel bearing the well-known lines from Burns:

"Some ha'e meat and canna eat;
 Some can eat and ha'e na meat;
 But, I ha'e meat, and I can eat;
 And so the Lord be thankit!"

All who eat in the Inn are not lodged there. The sleeping accommodations at the Inn are crowded, and, in consequence, some of our diners find lodging in wall tents, erected in the form of a hollow square in a field, which is bordered by the forest and situated but a few rods from the Inn.

Some other persons, in sympathy with us, but who prefer to board and lodge themselves, are encamped in the depths of the pine forest on the lake shore, and this forest, by the way, is the last of the great pine tracts in Pennsylvania.

Many of the trees are over one hundred years old, and they tower far above one's head with the simplicity and strength and majesty of pillars in some ancient cathedral. But no cathedral, with all the reverent art of man, was ever so awe-inspiring as this pine forest.

Our voices die away, and we gaze in silent wonder and worship through the dim aisles flanked by trees. We feel that we are looking upon a congregation of colossal worshipers, who softly murmur their prayers whenever a summer breeze sweeps through their leafy tops. Our feet make no audible sound, for they tread upon a thick carpet of pine needles, which the trees have renewed year after year.

Scattered irregularly over this carpet, but visible to us, are boulders and slabs of rock, which suggest burial places of other members of this gigantic congregation.

We are near to nature's heart; the past is forgotten, and we feel that, somewhere and somehow, eternity lies just beyond this leafy veil.

INFANTS THRIVE

on cow's milk that is not subject to any change of composition. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is always the same in all climates and at all seasons. As a general household milk it is superior and is always available.

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER.

He Cured Himself of Serious Stomach Trouble, by Getting Down to First Principles.

A man of large affairs in one of our prominent Eastern cities by too close attention to business, too little exercise and too many club dinners, finally began to pay nature's tax, levied in the form of chronic stomach trouble; the failure of his digestion brought about a nervous irritability, making it impossible to apply himself to his daily business, and finally deranging the kidneys and heart.

In his own words he says: "I consulted one physician after another, and each one seemed to understand my case, but all the same they each failed to bring about the return of my former digestion, appetite and vigor. For two years I went from pillar to post, from one sanitarium to another, I gave up smoking, I quit coffee, and even renounced my daily glass or two of beer, but without any marked improvement.

"Friends had often advised me to try a well-known proprietary medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and I had often perused the newspaper advertisements of the remedy, but never took any stock in advertised medicines, nor could believe a fifty-cent patent medicine would touch my case.

"To make a long story short I finally bought a couple of packages at the nearest drug store, and took two or three tablets after each meal, and occasionally a tablet between meals, when I felt any feeling of nausea or discomfort.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week to note a marked improvement in my appetite and general health, and before the two packages were gone I was certain that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets was going to cure completely, and they did not disappoint me. I can eat and sleep and enjoy my coffee and cigar, and no one would suppose I had ever known the horrors of dyspepsia.

"Out of friendly curiosity I wrote to the proprietors of the remedy, asking for information as to what the tablets contained, and they replied that the principal ingredients were aseptic pepsin (government test), malt diastase and other natural digestives, which digest food regardless of the condition of the stomach."

The root of the matter is this, the digestive elements contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, give the overworked stomach a chance to recuperate and the nerves and whole system receive the nourishment which can only come from food; stimulants and nerve tonics never give real strength, they give a fictitious strength, invariably followed by reaction. Every drop of blood, every nerve and tissue is manufactured from our daily food, and if you can insure its prompt action and complete digestion by the regular use of so good and wholesome a remedy as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, you will have no need of nerve tonics and sanitariums.

Although Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been in the market only a few years, yet probably every druggist in the United States, Canada and Great Britain now sells them, and considers them the most popular and successful of any preparation for stomach trouble.

Events and Comments.

Charles Henry Smith, the Southern dialect humorist, who called himself "Bill Arp," died at Atlanta, Ga., at the age of 77.

President Roosevelt has authorized the announcement that Secretary Root will go out of office some time in First month, and Judge Taft will assume the duties of the office shortly afterward.

Widespread interest has been aroused by the case of 11-year old Lillie Spitsnadel, who was recently operated on with radium and X-rays in combination for paralysis of the optic nerve, and who, since the operation, is said to be able to distinguish light from darkness. The operation was performed by Dr. Amos Jenkins, assisted by William J. Hammer.

Prohibitionists of the United States have unveiled at Newton, a magnificent monument to the memory of Hale Johnson, who was assassinated on election day last year. He was chairman of the Prohibition State Committee and national committeeman at the time, and was the vice-presidential candidate on the prohibition ticket in 1896.

The situation in the vilayet of Monastir, Macedonia, is gradually becoming more distressing. One report last week said: "Twelve more villages within the last few days have been handed over to fire and sword, and women and children and the aged have been massacred indiscriminately. The Turks are believed to even meditate the assassination of the consuls in order to cause European intervention." How long will it be before efficient measures are taken to effect a reform?

Professor Langley's card of explanation to the press concerning his experiments in mechanical flight on the Potomac River contains the interesting statement that these experiments "have for their object the development of a machine for war purposes." Since the possibilities for destruction in war would be greatly increased by the successful use of flying machines by the combatants, there is reason to believe that the solution of the problem of aerial navigation would mean the doom of terrestrial armies and navies and consequently the abolition of war itself.

The Department of Agriculture is actively encouraging the production of silk in this country. The United States imports $75,000,000 of silk annually, and it behooves us to do all we can to establish the industry on a firm and enduring basis here. Only three countries produce as much silk as they consume. The leading countries in silk production are China, Japan and Italy. The Chinese production is enormous, 24,816,000 pounds. The United States consumes 10,760,000 pounds and China 14,157,000 pounds.

It is stated that the syndicate of New Orleans speculators which recently cornered the supply of raw cotton in this country and holds it now at an abnormal price, compelling the shut-down of factories here and abroad, cleared $10,000,000 by the operation. The loss they have caused operatives and manufacturers, however, much exceeds this amount, and there is renewed discussion of the need of national legislation similar to Germany's with respect to regulation of speculation in commodities such as cotton, wool, wheat and coal. Secretary Wilson, in a striking interview, shows that the producers of cotton have gained comparatively little by increase in the selling price of cotton; that if the syndicate has the requisite funds it can control the new crop as well as the old one; and that infinite mischief is being done to one of our leading industries by the clique's rapacity.

That there is intense interest in the pros and cons of lynching has been shown by the deep feeling aroused at Chautauqua, N. Y., where the managers of the assembly have provided a running debate on the problem lasting a week. It is gratifying to note that the best Southern journals repudiate the extreme position, and that North and South there is a growing sense of the need of holding fast to the rock-bottom principles of Anglo-Saxon civilization and of Christianity if the country is to be saved from anarchy and degeneration. Justice Brewer, of the Federal Supreme Court, in a notable article in "Leslie's Weekly," argues forcibly for certain reforms in judicial procedure in criminal cases which will make for celerity of action and do away with the technicalities of

A NEW ROUTE.

The Road to Wellville.

It is by change of diet that one can get fairly on the road to health after years of sickness, for most ill health comes from improper feeding.

What a boon it is to shake off coffee sickness and nervous headaches as some can if determined upon.

One woman accomplished it in this way: "A few years ago I suffered terribly from sick and nervous headaches, being frequently confined to my bed two or three days at a time, the attacks coming on from one to four times in every month. I tried medicines of all kinds, but could get no real relief until my parents finally persuaded me to quit the use of coffee altogether and try Postum Food Coffee. It had come to a point where I was so utterly miserable that I was willing to make any reasonable trial.

A person couldn't believe what followed, but the results speak for themselves; that was two and a half years ago, and I have never tasted coffee since. I use Postum not only for its delicious flavor, but more for the good it has done me. All of my troubles disappeared as if by magic, and I have for the past two years been doing all the work for my family of six. I seldom have even a slight headache, and I would not give up my Postum and go back to coffee now unless I deliberately intended to commit suicide.

"All of my neighbors, it seems to me, now use Postum in place of coffee, and some of them have been doing so for several years, with splendid results from the health point of view." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

appeal which do so much now to make the popular sentiment that courts are not to be trusted and that hence the execution of law must revert to the people themselves. Justice Woodward, of the New York Supreme Court, however, in his argument at Chautauqua, was not disposed to favor lessening of the safeguards granted to accused criminals or to do aught to meet this popular demand. President Roosevelt's letter to Governor Durbin, of Indiana, has been universally commended, here and abroad, and, like many of Lincoln's official communications to lesser officials, really has served as an appeal to the people of the nation, and as a tonic in time of weakness.

THE BEAUTIFUL SAPPHIRE COUNTRY

Is a Delightful Place in which to Spend Your Vacation.

Along the southern slopes and tablelands of the Blue Ridge Mountains in Western North Carolina, at an average altitude of three thousand feet, with broad ridges pointing off from the main chains towards the lowlands of South Carolina and Georgia, is a country full of delightful surprises to the tourist, sportsman and health seeker, which has been appropriately named "The Sapphire Country." No other State or region contains so many grand waterfalls, such wide sweeping mountain views and such beautiful lakes.

The most interesting of the many attractive features to be found are the beautiful Toxaway, Fairfield and Sapphire Lakes. Nowhere else in the South at this altitude are such bodies of water. All who visit these lakes are impressed with the wonderful beauty and great varied character of scenery. There are towering cliffs rising abruptly for a thousand feet from their shores, and cascades of rare beauty, falling directly into the lakes from the lofty tableland surrounding. Some of the mountains in this vicinity range in height from five to six thousand feet. Indeed, it is the general verdict of widely-traveled people that in this respect the remarkable combination of lake and mountain scenery of this section is unrivaled by any in the world. Certainly no other part of America has anything to equal it.

Some of the finest hotels in the South are in this beautiful mountain country, the latest being the handsome new "Toxaway Inn," which is open for the summer season, and will remain open the entire year.

Low-rate summer excursion tickets are on sale up to and including September 30th, 1903, from all principal points, with final limit to return October 31st, 1903.

Three Books You Should Have

We have three books written by the late DR. DOUGAN CLARK, Professor of Biblical Literature in Earlham College. Dr. Clark was recognized as one of the leading teachers on Holiness, and his books are full of spiritual food.

1. HOLY GHOST DISPENSATION.

This book sets forth with great clearness the joy and beauty of living in fellowship with the Holy Spirit. It should be read by all who are thirsty after the higher life. It contains 170 pages, finely printed, good paper, in strong cloth binding, price 50 cents. It treats of the following subjects: 1.—The Dispensation of the Holy Spirit; 2.—The Holy Spirit our Sanctifier; 3.—The Holy Spirit an object of Worship, Praise and Prayer; 4.—Intercessory Functions of the Holy Spirit; 5.—The Anointing and Sealing of the Spirit; 6.—The Holy Spirit's Guidance; 7.—The Striving of the Spirit; 8.—Sanctification not by Growth nor Death; 9.—Sanctification not Impeccability; 10.—Sanctification and Temptation; 11.—Be ye therefore Perfect; 12.—Preserved; 13.—A Plea for Orthodoxy; 14.—The Reckoning of Faith.

2. INSTRUCTIONS TO CHRISTIAN CONVERTS.

This book has passed through eight editions. It is one of the most valuable books to put into the hands of young Christians. The chapters are: 1.—Be Definite; 2.—Be Diligent; 3.—Be Faithful; 4.—Be Patient; 5.—Be Holy; 6.—Be Filled; 7.—Be Established. 133 pages; price 50 cents.

3. INNER AND OUTER LIFE OF HOLINESS.

This book was written just before Dr. Clark's death. In many respects it is his most spiritual work. The book has 100 pages well printed and bound; price, cloth 35 cents; leatherette 20 cents. The book treats first of INNER LIFE as a life of Peace, Faith, Full Assurance. Extinction of Selfishness, Communion with God, and Spiritual Growth. And of the OUTER LIFE: The Walk, Regulation, Habit, Meekness and Rule of Action.

SPECIAL OFFER.—The three books, in cloth binding, will be sent postpaid for $1.00.

*Tho' the rain may fall, and the wind be blowing,
And cold and chill is the wintry blast,
Tho' the cloudy sky is still cloudier growing,
And the dead leaves tell the summer is past;
My face I hold to the stormy heaven,
My heart is as calm as the summer sea;
Glad to receive what my God has given,
Whate'er it be.*

*When I feel the cold, I can say, "He sends it";
And his wind blows blessings, I surely know;
For I've never a want, but he attends it,
And my heart beats warm, tho' the winds may blow.
The soft, sweet summer was warm and glowing;
Bright were the blossoms on every bough;
I trusted Him when the roses were blowing,
I trust Him now.*

No. 37.

PERSONAL NOTE.

So many letters have been received by the editor from loving and sympathetic friends that he finds it impossible to send each writer a personal word of thanks and appreciation, as he would like to do. These words of comfort and sympathy from friends, both in England and America, from persons known and unknown in the flesh, have deeply touched his heart and strengthened him for his tasks. The cords of love which are woven about our human hearts, as we suffer with others, help us to feel the infinite power of love, and make God's love more real. In these days of deep loss the warm touches of friendship have been full of refreshment and blessing, for which a true thankfulness is felt.

THE PRACTICE OF THE LOVE OF GOD.

THERE is one thing which even the simplest Christian of us may learn from the scientist. He will never be satisfied with any theory or hypothesis until he has tried it. He goes straight to work to see if it can stand the strain and test of facts. Every page in the history of science is strewn with rejected theories and dead hypotheses. The laws and principles which are taught to-day are held because they have survived the hardest test of actual facts which so far are known. Everything in the world gains in value as it proves able to stand tests. This is especially true of the great things by which we live. There is a whole world of difference between second-hand accounts of somebody else's experience and first-hand experience itself. We begin, of course, with truths which others have tested and which we accept on authority, but we never quite possess our truth until we have worked it out in practice and put it to the strain of living by it. Little by little we pass over from mere views and opinions which have been given to us to the deeper, solider faith which is the fruit and product of the actual practice of our principles and doctrines. Christianity first begins to be something mighty when a person is found who goes beyond views and theories and really practices in his life the great truths which lie at its heart.

Every Christian creed which has held its place in the world has announced in one way or another the Fatherhood and Love of God as a central fact. For ages men have said, "I believe in God the Father," but too often they have gone on living as though this belief made no difference to them. It never seemed to occur to them that they had to practice it—i. e., that they ought to live as though they knew God as a Father. We all find it easy to say over John's great words, "God is Love," but we are very slow in practicing this truth until it has all the reality of the things which we touch and see. Think what it means! Let us start out to translate all our creed, all our doctrines into actual practice. We will live to-day, this week, this month, this year as though we knew that our life solidly rested on the love of God. It is to be as sure a fact for us as space or gravitation. Wherever we move we are enveloped in it. Well, the effect would be, first of all, to wipe out completely our anxiety and our worry. We worry because we lack confidence in the future, but the man who lives in the love of God knows that He who clothes the lily and guides the bird is shaping his life toward good ends even when he cannot see the way, and so he trusts and is happy. He stops being burdened with himself because this very practice of the love of God makes him care more for others than for himself, and he forgets his own troubles in his joy to help ease somebody else's trouble. Furthermore, if we actually realized what the love of God means and lived as though we knew its meaning, we should stop sinning. We sin because we want something for our own selves. We are blind to what our sin will make God suffer. We forget that the mightiest thing in the universe is the love of God, and we blur the cost of His sacrifice for us in our desire to get some petty thing for ourselves. The moment we feel the tug of His love upon us and go to living with a sense of the fact that every sin in the world crucifies Him afresh and spoils His purpose for us and in us sin becomes a hideous thing, and His infinite love constrains us to live not unto ourselves, but unto Him.

Then, too, he who truly practices the love of God can face the mysteries which look so dark from the outside. "I am not afraid," said the little fellow at sea in the storm, "because my father is the captain." That is the secret of all triumph in this world of trial and loss—"I know my Father is pilot on this sea of life, even though the mists are thick." There can be no shipwreck for the soul that practices that faith. To live in the love of God is to win eternally everything which is lost in time and space. He who loves us to the death cannot bring into our lives anything which defeats or breaks our human loves. That is impossible. His whole purpose is to perfect and heighten our love, never to crush or weaken it. As we live in the confidence of His love and practice it we shall rise above the faith which is only belief and opinion to the faith which is the very substance of the things we hope for, the test of things not seen.

SUGGESTIONS ON INSTRUCTION IN QUAKERISM.

THE subject which was considered last week in an editorial article signed by "J. W." is a most live and important one. We do not want to make narrow sectarians out of our members, for such persons are of little use to themselves or to anybody else, but we do want our membership instructed in the truth to which the Heavenly Father has called us as a people to bear witness. It is a duty of every citizen to teach his sons, and his daughters, too, that there are great and precious principles at the basis of our national life, and that no person can live nobly who does not in some degree make his life count toward the maintenance and advancement of these principles of self-government. Intelligent loyalty and wise devotion make any country great and powerful. It is hardly less important that young men and women should grow up with an intelligent devotion to the principles of their religious denomination. The invisible church is one great spiritual whole—the unity of the living and the dead who are in Christ—but the visible, militant Church has many branches organized to maintain and emphasize special aspects of revealed truth which its members have laid hold of and found precious in their own lives. We may always be sure that there is something lofty and divine in truths which have fed the souls and inspired the lives of men and women through long centuries, and when such living torches are carelessly allowed to drop it means that somebody has been cowardly and disloyal. We certainly have received flaming torches of truth from the hands of valiant fathers. Are they being handed on? Will the next generation say that we compelled them to be noble guardians of the ever-growing truth?

What we need most just now are some words which shall help work out our present duties in some practical way. How shall our members be instructed in the principles of truth which are committed to us? Well, first of all, every one of our educational institutions ought to make it possible for its students to learn what we are doing in the world and what we are here for. These institutions have a larger duty toward our membership than they have yet fulfilled, and the solution of this problem lies nearest to their doors. THE AMERICAN FRIEND has a much larger service in this direction than it has yet performed, and plans are already being matured for some more direct teaching and instruction. The young Friends in a number of our meetings have formed "round tables," or study groups, for the study of Friends' history. These "round tables" may be made very serviceable, and it is hoped that we shall soon have suitable books for their use. Almost every meeting might have such a study group during the winter, and it would be well to have one or more public meetings to which the whole membership would be invited. Already steps are being taken to found a traveling lectureship to provide for courses of lectures on Quakerism to be given wherever there is a demand for them.

A good work is being done in many yearly meetings through institutes and summer schools. This method of instruction might be very much extended and brought within the reach of most of the members by the holding of two-day conferences for instruction at one of the four quarterly meetings during the year, or even at the time of monthly meetings. These conferences draw Friends together, and with little expenditure for traveling expenses speakers could be secured. It would be well if both monthly and quarterly meetings would appoint good strong committees to consider and forward methods for the instruction of their membership. Little by little we shall learn how to do this much-needed work.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

EMOTION AND RELIGION.

BY T. HARVEY HAINES.

2. I have spoken of quietism as characterizing Quakerism in the period of declining and declined missionary zeal. In this period the enthusiastic love of souls which characterized the martyrs is no longer found. Men have grown cold. Their so-called enthusiasm is shut up within their own souls. They keep the Spirit quietly within them. Some of these lives have been truly beautiful to behold. But the unnaturalness of them makes the ideal an unsatisfactory one. It does not work for most men. This unnaturalness of it, by which the spiritual life of the society waned, was the cause of the revivalistic spirit, and the revival in the Society of Friends. Nature asserted herself. Men were recalled to a whole living. The emotions (the movers of the will) had been cast out. Spiritual death reigned in many quarters. The real apostolic spirit discerned an important cause to lie in the lack of the emotional element. It was restored. Like most corrections of extremes, it itself went to an extreme. It led in many cases to a substitution of feelings for religion. A life of feeling (excitement), and that of a low physical sort, is often mistaken for religion. It is the bane of many religious communities to-day, both among Friends and others.

True religion is a joyful affair. But it is not mere exhilaration. It is a very serious affair, and lightness is far from appropriate to it. With some, "getting religion" seems to be a species of intoxication very much akin to that produced by a glass of wine in one particularly susceptible. The general buoyancy of the body, indicated by the gesticulations and general tendency to acrobatic feats of some so-called revivalists, would indicate that they had little more than animal excitement. The same is indicated by their words. When they are not shouting or jumping, they have little to say save "I am so happy, I just can't keep still," and other twaddle of the same sort. The poverty of their language is explained by the superficial character of their experience. The expression of their happiness is all in physical terms, and it seems, indeed, that this is the only religion they have, a physical exhilaration. Such an utter travesty of religion is painful in the extreme to any one who really knows the peace of God in his heart, and who feels he is a worker together with God in the building of a better humanity. It is utterly bad because it pretends to be that which it is not in the least.

There is no doubt that the getting of God within the soul, or finding oneself at one with the Father of Spirits, is an intoxicating experience. It is really enthusiastic, God being in us. It should be attended by the physical signs of joy, for it is the greatest experience a man can have; it means most in his life. But it is also an awe-inspiring experience because so momentous. It means the complete renovation of a life—the exchange of ideals. And when we see one acting as he would at a foot ball game, and all because he has "got religion," we very much doubt if he has anything of the sort. If he really had it there would be some sign of humility, and of a joy that was too deep for expression in the antics that characterize some of our revivals.

One whose religion is expressed by such an overflow of animal feelings has not really learned Christ. He may have begun well, but he is not sufficiently advanced to teach others. His behavior is an impeachment of the judgment of the mission board or evangelical committee which sends him out. They mean well, and may have the making of good workers in them. Such being the case, the more is the pity they are not properly trained. They need some of the discipline which the other extremists knew so well. They need to do what Paul did when he spent two years in the desert of Arabia, what Luther did in the Wartzburg, what Tauler did when his ministry was discredited and he retired for many months into his cell, and what George Fox did when he wandered alone in the north country sleeping in caves and hollow trees, and spending his days in reading his Bible and seeking one "to minister to his condition." In this condition these need to be ministered unto. They need a deeper baptism than they have yet attained. If they do not find a deeper current of spiritual life, they tend not only to fall away themselves, but many of those whom they seem to lead into the fold are sure to backslide. This life of physical exuberance is bound to pall on one, and no matter how much they assure each other that it is really religion, if they do not come to something very much more real in the way of spiritual experience they are sure to fall away. Such a life is but an aping of true religion. The attempt to live a satisfying life on this plane is as sure to lead to disappointment as when an uncultured man or woman, with unlimited wealth, seeks ever new satisfactions in mere sense pleasures. Sense pleasures are unsatisfying even though one think they constitute religion. We have a rational nature, and this cannot be satisfied with pleasant sensations. We must have a rational scheme of life, and must be fulfilling this in order to be satisfied. In religion we must be building God into our lives and into human society. There is no more serious canker at the root of religion in this present time than this superficiality which lures men into a stopping short of the real work of religion in their hearts. Its aim seems to be to hurry people along at such a pace that they shall be saved before they know it, and in so doing causes them to come short of anything real. They get switched into a side path which proves a blind alley. The cravings to know eternal life get a satisfaction which proves to be no satisfaction. The pity of it is that when this deception is discovered the craving has somewhat abated, and the true start is made under greater difficulties than it would have been before. In this way the stirring up of the emotions is an evil. For they of themselves cannot support this life, but are only a vaporous substitute for life.

3. There is no doubt the emotions have a place in the religious life, as shown above. The will is moved to act by feeling; and organized feeling is emotion. An emotion, by its natural course, terminates in a will act. And it is for the will act, to which it leads, that an emotion is valued. The error of the species of revivalism which we have just been criticising is that it values the emotion and the feeling for what it is in itself. It values that which is merely means as an end in itself.

It is through our will acts, prompted by our emotions, that our lives and characters develop. Each one of us become that which we love, and set our hearts upon. As free agents we choose our ideals, and then proceed to be like them. This is what makes friendship and love, both human and divine, such potent factors in life. Love is attraction begotten of a felt lack in ourselves. We want to be like our love in some respect. She bodies forth in concrete fashion in her character some features of the ideal for which we strive. The life of continued love after marriage is a continual discovery on the part of each of new characteristics in the other. We never know a human being completely. But such characters are continually developing. And the new life of each is an ever fresh source of inspiration and help to the other. So it is with friendship; and so, in a much higher degree, it is with our life hid with Christ, the divine work of religion in the heart. We are moved by what we see of our friend, our love, and also of God. We will be like them. This means we act. We do as we think these our ideals do, and so become like them.

With this view of religion as a progressive organization of life, we see clearly where the revivalistic ideal which ends in mere feeling is bound to prove abortive. This life mistakes a feeling of happiness for goodness. There is no ideal, save more of this happiness. To this end action is directed. The individual goes to the places and goes through the performance which brought it before. And the leader in such a performance resorts to the tricks of the hypnotist, relying on the imitative instincts of his audience. By making a show of joyfulness he gets them to performing as he does, and this induces the same emotional states in them, and directly there is a pandemonium, ostensibly for the saving of souls, but in reality subversive of the cause of true religion.

Real goodness of character comes by far other means, as we have seen, and it may come without much noise. Most of nature's work is done slowly, and not by cataclysms. But this goodness, which is organization, comes largely through sympathy and imitation. It is therefore essential, from this standpoint, that the leader of the people should be a competent scholar in Christ's school, that he should have learned real lessons at the feet of the Master. We do not demand completeness of character. That is impossible to humans. But he must be an experimental Christian—must have some real fruits of the Spirit in his life. There must be in him something really worthy of imitation.

It is also highly important that his message bring before men some ideal which shall take fast hold of their wills through their affections. To so present an ideal, it must be known experimentally; i.e., through living it, and the audience must be known. Preaching is like teaching in this respect. You must know what the pupil is and has in order to make instruction take hold of him. So in the work of religion, the truth does not appeal to all alike. You must take your man where you find him and lead him out thence into the better country. To preach the gospel convincingly to a lot of seamen on the docks is one thing, and to preach the same gospel convincingly to a company of bridge whist players of the gentler sex is quite another thing. The minister of the gospel must be a close student of human nature to make his message effectual to move human wills, by planting high ideals and making them effective. This is work for full-grown men in Christ's school. It needs knowledge of men and of life.

Fire and enthusiasm are a part of the equipment for the advance of Christ's kingdom. But uncontrolled fire runs rampant and destroys. We want a zeal and enthusiasm. This is part of life. But they must be organized by intelligence and become effective on the will in the service of the ideal. Organization in life—ever more and higher life—is the desideratum. This organization comes through an intelligently guided will. And the will is intelligently and effectively guided when the social emotions are in control. Life consists in all these—intellect, emotions and will. It is no one of these, and least of all is it either mere feeling, or the inert will.

THE LEAVEN.

BY MARY HIGGS.

The Parable of the Mustard Seed contains the history of a normal healthy process of growth. The tiny "grain of faith" taking root in the soul should produce a spreading life, which takes hold of the lower elements that surround it, and transmutes the earthly into the Divine. Born of water and of air, the tree of God flourishes in spite of all adverse conditions, and the common earth is only soil for manifestation of this goodness. Such is the kingdom of God, whether in the individual, in society, or in the world; the changing and development of the lower into the higher under the influence of the Spirit.

But we are in the presence of another set of phenomena also, viz., a form of life which works as a ferment, and in just the opposite direction. The seed seizes on the lower to transmute it to the higher. The yeast plant, itself a low form of life, seizes on the product of a higher life, the good wholesome flour, and disintegrates it and pulls it down to the level of its own life. It feeds on it and multiplies its own low type of life with amazing rapidity. What has taken a whole year of sunshine and rain to produce by the slow process of growth is seized upon by these germs of a low life, and rapidly disintegrated.

But the whole is under the presiding presence of the Spirit of Life. The law of death is within the grasp of the law of life. The world is full of "ferments" which work destruction, yet life survives. The yeast plant in the hand of a woman is used to raise the lower form, flour, into the higher form, bread. The Spirit of Life seizes hold of the lower form and uses it in its own processes. Left to itself in the presence of the ferment the flour would decay and be dissolved into its elements. But the process is only allowed to go on to a certain point, "till the whole is leavened." The whole mass "works," it is stirred through and through, every particle is in contact with the disturbing factor, the whole is "raised."

But what a different raising from that process by which the seed lifts the clod, and eventually lifts its head high above earth into the free wind of heaven! The raising of the lump is a death process, it evolves poisonous gas, it is the way to corruption. Only one thing can save it—the swift process of destruction of the germ by heat when its evolution has reached a certain point. The spirit of life presiding over the process checks it at the right moment. The fiery heat of the oven stops the process of decay, and the product is the bread of life, good, wholesome, sweet, fit to nourish and sustain. This is the history of the kingdom of God.

Again and again in the history of the Church we may trace the hand of the presiding Spirit of Life. The good, wholesome flour, the product of many generations of quiet growing life, becomes inert. The death process seizes it; it becomes "leavened"—pharisaical, hypocritical. It is good seed ground down, no longer growing. Therefore it is fit soil for the germs of degeneracy. A lower type of life seizes on it, and rapid decay breaks up the old goodness—worldliness, conformity to the prevailing types of low life, rapid departure from old ideals.

God's process of making a saint is often to let decay and disintegration reach a certain point, and then by the fire of the Spirit to bring home to the soul a realization of its rottenness. The leaven of malice and wickedness works for its destruction, but suddenly the process is checked, and good wholesome bread is made from a decaying life. Augustine is an example of such a process; and so is John Bunyan. But only the sudden arrest of the process of decay can save it. The redemptive process in it is not one of slow growth, but of sudden destruction of evil.

We see, therefore, that our Master has given us in these two parables the key to the history of the kingdom of heaven. The slow and steady growth of good seed has raised up again and again trees of God, institutions under the shelter of which thousands of lives have grown to maturity, sweet and wholesome.

But the illustrations of the other process are no less patent. The Church of Rome sheltered the life of many a saint, yet the leaven of hypocrisy seized her. The whole mass was seething with corruption when the Reformation fires stopped the process.

Again the trees of God have grown. But is it not evident that the period in which we live is not one of quiet growth, but of fermentation and decay? Rapid changes are disintegrating the old beliefs, seizing on the stationary products of former life, and transmuting them. There is the prevalence of a low type of spiritual life, and ever the higher has a tendency to be assimilated to this. The sturdy, independent, growing faith which could resist the tendencies of its own day, and use the lower in the service of the higher, has given place to a parasitic growth, which brings old forms to decay without replacing them by a strong fresh life of its own. We have "higher" education, "higher" criticism, "higher" life, we have new forms of organization rapidly spreading, till society is "leavened" through and through with "associations," "unions," "leagues" and dozens of contrivances to "raise" it. We have the fermentation of party and of creed, the conflict of old and "new" thought. It is the process of fermentation.

What, then, should the thoughtful and devout soul do in the midst of such an era of the world? There are two sources of comfort.

1. That such an era is the soil in which are planted the trees of God. An era of fermentation acts as the dung about the roots of such a tree. The trees that flourish in our age were planted in an era of fermentation. Even now somewhere the Husbandman has His mustard seeds planted, and when the fermentation of our time has passed, there will rise as its product some stately growths to refresh and protect the sons of men. But this is not all.

2. Such an era has a swiftly-approaching consummation. The Spirit of God says to such a process, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no further." The child of God, one with the Father's will, who, praying in the Spirit, seeks to draw upon the world a fresh outpouring of Divine grace, has to request of God something vastly different from His blessing. Elijah prayed that it might not rain, and the answer to his prayer brought to his nation the sense of Divine judgment. Christ saw in His time the fiery oven awaiting His nation, and shuddered at its fate, but did not avert it. Isaiah was told to pray for the sweeping desolating winds to come from the four quarters of the globe, ere the slain of his nation could live.

As we look at the festering sores of our national life, the rottenness of our religion, the prevailing low type of worldliness, what are we to pray? Must we not pray to the presiding Spirit of God? We are being kneaded and tried. The germs of death are amongst us. Without God—what can a nation do without God? A swift career of corruption lies before us. Let us cry with all our hearts to Him to put our nation through the fires of affliction rather than to destroy her. Lord, send any trial, but preserve us from evil! Lord save us, or we perish! As individual Christians must not our daily prayer be to be preserved from the leaven of hypocrisy? Let us at all costs be true, but let us hold to old ideals in changing times. Plain living goes with high thinking. Simplicity, obedience, truth in the inward parts, the absence of pride and vainglory, a lowly and quiet spirit, still constitute "the salt of the earth;" and salt is impervious to leaven. Let us cling to the belief in the Spirit of God for dear life. Oh, Holy Spirit, preserve me from the evil!—"The British Friend."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A MOVEMENT AGAINST OATHS.

BY THOMAS RAEBURN WHITE.

When a man goes upon the witness stand to testify before a court of justice he is addressed thus by the court crier, "You do solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give in the matter now before the court shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God," to which declaration (unless he express conscientious scruples) the witness is expected to give his assent.

Probably nine-tenths of the witnesses, if they think about it at all, suppose the concluding words mean a sort of invocation of the Deity to help them speak the truth. In fact, they mean something very different. The expression is a survival of a longer form anciently used in England, which was in this wise: "So (that is, if you speak the truth) may God help you at the last great day." This in turn was an abbreviation of a yet older form, which contained an elaborate invocation of God's direst vengeance for false swearing.* To understand the true significance of any custom or form which has existed from antiquity we must seek its meaning from its history. Therefore it is proper to briefly recount what we know of the origin of the oath.

Oaths existed long before the Christian era; in fact, before history itself. They were among the natural customs which antedate any human records. The necessity for truth telling was recognized even among very primitive tribes, for they must be credited with the invention of the oath to insure it. In spite of the meager sources of our knowledge it seems reasonably clear that primitive men required each other to swear oaths in the name of some being, real or fancied, which was deemed by the swearer to be gifted with a supernatural power. They believed that the being summoned by the oath-taker to witness the truth of his words would be angered at the affront put upon him by first calling him to witness and then falsifying, and would take vengeance for this insult. We have a few curious survivals of such oaths. Wild beasts were at one time worshiped as being the worst powerful beings upon the earth. In some parts of Siberia, members of wild tribes still swear by the wild boar, and in India the Santals are sworn on tiger skins. They firmly believe that if they swear falsely sooner or later a tiger will seek them out and devour them. So in South America, the natural tribes swear by a mountain or by the sun, and believe that a false oath will cause the mountain to fall upon them or the sun to burn them.

The oaths used by the ancient nations of all countries are of many kinds, and all adapted to the belief of the oath-taker. The Old Testament abounds with examples of oaths taken by the Hebrews in the name of Jehovah, and of other oaths deemed false and impious, taken by "heathen." The first of such instances occurs in the Book of Genesis 21: 22-24. Abimelech came to Abraham and said, "God is with thee in all that thou doest. Now, therefore, swear unto me here by God that thou wilt not deal falsely with me nor with my son nor with my son's son; but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee, thou shalt do unto me and to the land wherein thou hast sojourned. And Abraham said, I will swear."

* The citation of authority will, for brevity, be omitted in this paper. Any one who may desire to examine the subject more fully is referred to a much more extended article on the same topic, which appeared in the "American Law Register" for July, 1903.

This passage shows that the Jews and also the inhabitants of the land of Gerar, where Abraham then was, understood the meaning and the supposed binding force of oaths. Abimelech himself did not believe in the God of Abraham, but he required him to swear by his own God, knowing he would be bound by that oath. Many centuries later the renowned Baron Puffendorf wrote that all people were to be sworn according to the ceremonies of their own religion, and this has become a principle of our law.

The efficacy of these oaths consisted in this: The swearer believed in the God whom he called upon to witness the truth of his words. He believed that this God would at his bidding hearken to his words, and if they were false he would be offended, and would punish him for the violation of the oath. The essential thought at the bottom of it is that the swearer believes some supernatural power will punish, not for the sin committed by telling a lie, but for the violation of the ceremony.

In ancient times when men had a very different idea of God from that which the Christian world now has, it was supposed He would interfere by a miracle, when called upon, to further human ends. During the Greek and Roman periods faith in oracles and augurs was universal, and the conduct of human beings was largely governed by their supposed decrees. It is not surprising, therefore, that there was an almost universal belief, particularly among the more ignorant classes of people, that the god or gods in whom they believed would answer the summons of an oath by witnessing the words spoken, and would avenge a violation of the ceremony. The law courts took advantage of this belief or superstition, and used it to extort the truth. It was not then supposed that anyone would be so bold as to risk a frightful fate by violating an oath. At first, in the Jewish and Roman courts oaths were not administered to witnesses, but only to parties to the action. From about the time of Constantine, however, witnesses in Roman courts were required to swear.

The common law which grew up in England at a somewhat later date appreciated the apparent usefulness of the oath as a means of securing the truth from witnesses and others who were to be examined in court, and it was therefore made a part of the common law procedure. Both witnesses and parties were required to swear in the name of God to the truth of certain matters, invoking His vengeance upon themselves if they told a falsehood.

Various means of trial were in use in early times, which depended upon the same fundamental idea, viz., that God would interfere in human affairs by a miracle at the bidding of a suppliant. It was believed that if an accused person were made to walk over red-hot plowshares or to thrust his hand in boiling water God would by a miracle deliver him unhurt. It was also thought that if such an one were thrown into a river, the water, having been adjured with proper oaths, would refuse to receive him if he were guilty, so that he would float, but if he were innocent, would allow him to sink.

This latter idea could not long survive the dawn of more enlightened ideas, and it was soon abandoned. The oath, however, although founded upon an idea equally superstitious has survived and remains a part of our legal procedure until this day.

TIGHTEN THE BUCKLES.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

It is related that a cavalry officer, with a small number of followers, was pursued by an enemy who were in large force. He discovered that his saddle-girth was becoming loose; his comrades were urging him on to greater speed; but he dismounted, tightened the loose buckle, and then rode on, amid the shouts of his companions. The broken buckle would have cost him his safety—perhaps his life. His wise delay ensured his safety, and sent him out of the reach of his pursuing enemies.

This incident suggests several spiritual lessons. A very obvious one is that the Christian who is in such haste to rush off to his business in the morning that he does not spare any time for his Bible or for prayer, is quite likely to "ride for a fall" before sundown. One of the most eminent Christian merchants of New York told me that he never met his family at the breakfast table until he had had a refreshing interview with his God over his Bible and on his knees. His family worship afterwards was not only a tightening the buckle for himself, but was a gracious means of safety to his household. One of the greatest dangers in these days is that too many children are growing up—even in nominally Christian families—with sadly lax sentiments in many vital directions. They have loose views about God's day and God's Book, and very loose practices as to attendance upon God's worship. They start out in life with a broken buckle, and when the stress of temptation comes, they are easily thrown to the ground. Fathers and mothers owe to their children as well as to themselves the duty of tightening the saddle-girth.

Not only do many families suffer from laxity in parental government, and godly parental training, but I fear that some congregations suffer from laxity in the teachings of their ministers. No church is very likely to rise higher than its own pulpit. If the shepherd of the flock holds loose doctrines; if he is so "liberal" that he gives away, or throws away, vital truths; if he lets down too many bars that the Bible wisely puts up, then it is no wonder that the flock wanders off into the ways of worldliness. There is no danger in these days of excessive strictness, or of "Puritanical" principles or practices. The danger is just from the opposite direction. Would it not be a wise thing if some pastors, who see that their churches are being overtaken and demoralized by worldly temptations, should call a halt and tighten their buckles?

The incident at the head of this brief article has a very close application to the maintenance of a vigorous, happy and useful Christian life. The very word "religion" is derived from a Latin word that signifies "to bind fast." True religion means the being bound fast to the Lord Jesus Christ in constant dependence on Him and obedience to Him. It is the very opposite of loose thinking and loose living. How to keep up a healthy spiritual life is the daily problem with every Christian. The parable of the buckle gives a hint. True piety is never self-sustaining. We only can "do all things through Jesus Christ that strengtheneth us." Without Him nothing; with Him everything. Therefore it is that our Bible exhorts us with prodigious emphasis to "pray without ceasing." When we relax in this vitally important duty, the enemies will soon overtake us, and overmatch us, and leave us in the dust. Brethren and sisters, tighten the prayer-buckle.

Borough of Brooklyn, New York.

Every one of us casts a shadow. There hangs about us a sort of penumbra—a strange, indefinable something—which we call personal influence, which has its effect on every other life on which it falls. It goes with us wherever we go. It is not something we can have when we will, as we lay aside a garment. It is something that always pours out from our life like light from a lamp, like heat from flame, like perfume from a flower.—J. R. Miller.

There always are those who wrap their talent for service in the napkin of not-worth-while. They feel that they could not do much because their ability is so small, and therefore they do not try to do anything. They suppose that they are practising the much praised virtue of humility, while really they are evading duty and responsibility and thus incurring blame and guilt. The truth is, no one, however small his ability, need live uselessly. God bestows no talents which he means to be wrapped up in napkins of any kind. Of course we cannot give what we have not. But we should give always what we have. We are never to say, "There is no use in my giving, for I have so little. It can do no one any good." We have nothing to do with the matter of larger or smaller. We are responsible only for what we have. If it is but one little talent, one little talent is all we shall have to answer for. But we must answer for that, and if we fail to use it, we shall not only lose it in the end, but also shall incur the penalty of uselessness.—J. R. Miller.

THIRD QUARTER.

LESSON XII.

NINTH MONTH 20, 1903.

ABSTINENCE FROM EVIL.

1 Peter 4: 4-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess. Eph. 5: 18.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 14.—Abstinence from evil. 1 Pet. 4: 4-11.

Third-day, Ninth mo. 15.—Wise counsel. Prov. 23: 15-23.

Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 16.—Blessedness of watching. Luke 12: 31-40.

Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 17.—Punishment of unfaithfulness. Luke 12: 41-48.

Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 18.—Be ready. Matt. 24: 42-51.

Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 19.—Watch and be sober. 1 Thess. 5: 1-11.

First-day, Ninth mo. 20.—Watch and pray. Mark 13: 28-37.

The First Epistle of Peter from which the present lesson is taken may have been written at Rome, though some think it was at Babylon; it is impossible to speak with certainty. Mark was with the writer (5: 13). When it was written is also uncertain; some would place it in the year 61 A.D., others as late as 64. The Epistle is addressed "to the strangers scattered throughout" Asia Minor. The R. V. translates this more accurately, "Sojourners of the dispersion." This means that the letter was primarily written to Jewish Christians, though there is no reason to think the Gentile converts were not included. The occasion of the composition of the Epistle was evidently some kind of persecution (1: 6, 7), though this would appear to be rather social, personal opposition and reproach than a state persecution. The Epistle is full of hope. Though some have questioned the genuineness of the Epistle, the treatment, the tone, the language, all resemble the Apostle's utterances as recorded in Acts, and the absence of close reasoning or unity is characteristic of such a man as Peter undoubtedly was. The whole Epistle is hortatory in its characteristics, and not argumentative.

1. "Forasmuch then." These words refer back to 3: 18, where the suffering of Christ is spoken of. Since He has opened the way of salvation for men as He has set an example of right-doing at any cost, we should "arm" ourselves "with the same mind."

2. "That ye no longer should live the rest of your time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God." (Amer. R. V.) "Lusts." The sinful desires of our human nature to which so many yield. "To the will of God." That rule of holy living which the Christian should follow.

3. "For the time past may suffice to have wrought the desire of the Gentiles, and to have walked in lasciviousness, lusts, wine-bibblings, revellings, carousings, and abominable idolatries." (Amer. R. V.) A list of the sins and excesses so common in the heathen world at that time. Those to whom he was writing should renounce all these absolutely. "Wine-bibblings." The word implies the great longing for intoxicating drinks. "Abominable idolatries" refer to the grossly licentious rites so common in heathen worship at that time, particularly at Antioch.

4. "They." Their former heathen friends. Both verses 3 and 4 clearly refer to heathen converts.

5. "Who shall give account." No one can do wrong, can sin with impunity. While this is not by any means one of the lofty motives, it is a legitimate one to urge. "Be sure your sin will find you out" is still true. (Compare Jas. 5: 9; Acts 10: 42).

6. This is perhaps the most difficult verse in the Epistle, and many interpretations, some very fanciful, have been offered. One of the most likely explanations is that the apostle means "the Gospel was substantially preached to the Old Testament Church; not so fully as to the New Testament Church, but with sufficient fullness to make themselves amenable to the Judge of the quick and the dead." He who lives up to the utmost light that he can obtain has saving faith. (Compare Rom. 2: 13-16.)

7. "The end of all things is at hand." The early church, including the apostles, believed that the end of the world would come in their day. The fact was not revealed to them. (Compare Rom. 13: 12; Jas. 5: 8; 1 Tim. 4: 1, etc.) "Be ye, therefore, of sound mind and be sober unto prayer." (Amer. R. V.) Have clear sober judgment. "Watch." Not the usual word for watch, standing on guard, but one which means being careful and circumspect, or exactly the opposite condition of mind to that which a man is in when under the influence of liquor.

8. "Above all things being fervent in your love among yourselves, for love covereth a multitude of sins." (Amer. R. V.) (Compare Prov. 10: 12; 1 Cor. 13: 7.)

9. Hospitality, even more than now, was needful in ancient times, as there were few inns in any country. "Grudging." Better, "murmuring." (Rom. 12: 13; Heb. 13: 2.)

10. "According as each hath received a gift, ministering it among yourselves, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." (Amer. R. V.) Whatever may be the gift, whether spiritual or temporal, it is to be held and used as belonging to the Lord. (Compare 1 Cor. 12: 7.)

11. "If any man speaketh, speaking as it were oracles of God; if any man ministereth, ministering as of the strength which God supplieth; that in all things God may be glorified through Jesus Christ, whose is the glory and the dominion for ever and ever. Amen." (Amer. R. V.) Whatever is done must be through the strength which God supplieth. Everything so done will glorify God.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Total abstinence is the only absolutely safe course.

2. "The strength which God supplieth" is the only strength which can conquer the forces of evil.

3. Be good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

The wounding of another's conscience is only second to wounding our own.

TOPIC FOR NINTH MONTH TWENTIETH.

WHY AND HOW WE SHOULD BEAR WITNESS FOR CHRIST.

Acts 5: 27-32.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 14.—Through the Spirit. Heb. 2: 1-4.

Third-day, Ninth mo. 15.—Of Christ's lordship. Acts 2: 32-36.

Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 16.—Of His power to save. Acts 3: 8-10.

Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 17.—Of His kindness. Ps. 68: 3-8.

Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 18.—Of a hope of heaven. Tit. 3: 7-11.

Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 19.—Rewards of confession. Luke 12: 8, 9.

The duty of a witness is to make the truth known in so far as it has come within the range of his personal experience. "That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you;" so that the first qualification is knowledge, and no amount of assumption or of logical deduction will take its place.

A witness does not plead, nor argue, nor quote statutes, but it is on his testimony that the verdict largely depends. The eloquent sermon needs the support of evidence such as godly lives alone can furnish, or it will serve for but little more than entertainment. "By their fruits ye shall know them." No matter how elaborate the description, an illustration is by far the more convincing.

No one need feel discouraged or that he is of little use because he cannot reason convincingly or win by persuasive speech. There is surely no higher place than to co-operate with the Holy Spirit, who, Christ says, "shall bear witness of Me; and ye also bear witness;" and there is no higher purpose than John gives for testifying (1 John 1: 3), that men may come into fellowship with those who are in fellowship with the Father and with His Son, Jesus Christ.

"Facts are stubborn things," and a witness sure of his facts is a difficulty that the enemy cannot overcome. He is not disturbed by cavilings or by theoretical impossibilities or contradictions of human judgment. The man who was blind may not have been able to answer all the objections raised by the Pharisees; evidently he did not care to; the facts sufficed him. "One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see."

Ways of witnessing are countless. Open confession is enjoined, and we naturally and rightfully think of spoken testimony. When God opens our lips our mouths speak His praise. How often does speech spring from some other source than His inspiration! But the deed witnesses as well, and unless word and act agree, the word is vain; it may express a wish or an ideal, but the verity which makes it testimony is wanting.

The countenance speaks continually, but the "joy of the Lord" is not made known by a gloomy and forbidding expression. I have met a one-armed Methodist of whom it was said that he has assured the return of many visitors to the church of which he is a member by the hearty grasp of his remaining hand, testifying of his loving interest and a welcome to Christian fellowship.

Epistles known and read of all men will bear divers inscriptions, but they must be legible and of no uncertain tenor; else our Lord will miss of His glory and of His rightful ingathering.

IN THE DAY SEASON.

Seventh month 6th, 1903.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

The passing of the ice gives promise that we shall soon be visited again by steamers carrying our supplies and mail—only those who have been unable to hear from the dear home folks for many months can appreciate all that this means to us. Our last "outside" letter bears San Francisco imprint of First month 27th, for while we are supposed to receive mail during the winter season not many letters reach this far north. Early in Fifth month we took a reindeer "circuit ride" of about 160 miles over the ice, holding services where none have heretofore been held. Then came a period of rest from the spiritual part of work, as most of our natives were away sealing, but the time has been taken up in building and rebuilding, painting, etc. Our audience room was doubled in size and nicely covered with wall paper, and many are the "arragahs" (beautiful) of the natives as they come in for the first time. One Kowak River native exclaimed in very good English, "Mighty fine cabin." The ice broke in front of the mission on the 17th of last month, and for some two weeks immense ice packs were passing by; occasionally the pressure of ice behind would force great ice ricks out on the land, plowing up the tundra and piling up to a height of about 30 to 40 feet. By the light of the midnight sun (we have had no sunset for about thirty days) Otha and Martha took some splendid ice scenes.

Our first visiting natives reached here on the last day of Sixth month. They were Kowak River people, and brought good reports of our members up the river. The average attendance was above 50 for each prayer service. A United States Commissioner who attended one of the native meetings, heard our native missionary tell his audience that Paul and Peter were partners of Jesus. Would that our Lord and Master had more faithful partners in these days!

At our last service we had a blessed meeting. The Holy Spirit was the guide, and souls were blessed, among others "Riley Jim" Wood, the Esquimaux captain of the river steamer, "John Riley," who is the eldest son of the late Kowak chief, and is by far the strongest character among his people; honored and respected by white as well as native. He said, in part, long ago, "Me bad, drink whiskey, eat tobacco, do all bad things, me like not the missionary; then me see that missionary talk good, that the Jesus men do not bad things, and me no hate the mission, but me no want to be Jesus man, now me want to be Christian, me want name in mission book; me talk plenty for Jesus, me no use whiskey or tobacco," and he did to such advantage that twenty-six gave their hearts to God; the entire family of the chief, including his brother and his family, gave their hearts to God. Our converts go bravely about trying to break up the superstitions of their people. The old Shamans (native medicine men) tell them that if they kill a wolverine and eat any cooked food for five days or use an axe in cutting wood during that period of time themselves and family will die. One young man killed a wolverine, cut some wood, built a fire, and, cooking food, ate some right away in the presence of his people just to show that the "medicine man" lied. He told us about it. Said, "Me friends plenty scared, but me no afraid." Then smilingly said, "Me no die." Many such instances come to us.

At present we have 229 names of Esquimaux Christians in our church book. These are all in good standing, and the only questionable thing done by any to our knowledge is the tobacco using of about ten of the number. These are all very old people, and from time to time one of these comes to us, and smilingly say, "Tobacco not," which means that they have ceased its use. In no instance have we heard of their resuming the use of it when once discarded. While formerly men, women and children used tobacco we do not at present know of a single case of its being used by any one under the age of 25. During our year's stay we have not seen a case of drunkenness nor even smelled liquor on the breath of an Esquimaux. We have heard of a solitary case in which an old woman took a single glass of wine which was offered to her by a white woman.

Faithfully His and thine,

DANA THOMAS.

NOTICE.

Arrangements have been made with the Central Passenger Association for reduced rates for those wishing to attend Indiana Yearly Meeting, commencing Ninth Month 30th. Tickets will be on sale Ninth month 28th, 29th and 30th at the rate of one fare for the round trip, tickets good returning until Tenth month 10th. These tickets will be on sale at all points on different roads within the limits of Indiana Yearly Meeting. All necessary information can be procured from the local agent at the different points. The yearly meeting will be held this year at Marion.

B. JOHNSON,

R. R. Secretary, Indiana Yearly Meeting.

To Attenders of Indiana Yearly Meeting:

Indiana Yearly Meeting is to be held at Marion, Ind., this year, beginning Ninth month 30th. A large boarding tent will be erected on the grounds, at which everybody who desires it can get good meals at very reasonable rates. Also a check room, in which all baggage and lunch boxes can be taken care of, and tables on which lunch can be eaten by all who desire to bring lunch. The Committee on Entertainment request that all who expect to attend the yearly meeting and wish entertainment will drop a postal card to William E. Darter, corner Sixteenth and Boots Streets, stating their wishes, whether board and lodging, or only beds, are wanted. Very truly, ELWOOD SCOTT.

The Editor AMERICAN FRIEND.

Dear Friend:—Permit me, through the medium of your paper, to call attention to the needs of the Friends' Mission in Jamaica, which has recently suffered so greatly from the hurricane which swept over that island in the latter part of last month. This mission is the only one, except Bishop Gordon's (Roman Catholic), which is working along the lines of industrial education, and no other method is so suited to the needs of the people. I spent several weeks in the island this summer, and heard the work of the Friends' Mission very highly commended by several disinterested persons. I was therefore glad to accept Arthur Swift's invitation to visit the mission, and so happened to be there on the night of the hurricane. The havoc wrought by the storm in the course of a few hours was terrible. Veranda, kitchen and all outbuildings were swept away; windows were blown in and the whole house flooded. Of the chapel only the basement walls remain, and the new boys' school building was completely demolished. Coconut trees were torn up by the roots or left standing merely bare poles; bananas, yams, etc., were beaten down, and most of the houses of the natives destroyed. Many of the people took refuge with us in the basement of the mission house, and I was much impressed with their cheerful bearing in the face of the loss of their little all.

Knowing that so great a loss must seriously interfere with the work of the mission, particularly as I understand that a large tract of land has recently been purchased with the idea of extending the work along industrial lines, I have felt that if the need were known, Friends might be glad to help in restoring the buildings destroyed and thus enable the mission to continue the good work it has been doing.

The superintendent, Arthur Swift, will need all possible encouragement and support, as the demands upon his time and strength during the coming weeks will be very great. The trouble has come at a time when he is worn out and had expected to return home for a much-needed holiday. Any contributions sent either direct to Arthur Swift, Manchioneak, Jamaica, or to the treasurer of the Mission Board, H. D. Lane, Oskaloosa, Ia., will be most gratefully received.

Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM P. FIRTH,

Alvin George, of Cherokee, Okla., is laboring in meetings in Haviland Quarterly Meeting, Kansas.

Alvin Coppock, of Cherokee, Okla., and Josiah Dillon, of Keith, are holding meetings in Siloam Springs, Ark.

Prof. Laura E. Kirby has returned to Wichita, Kan., after a summer spent in Southern California, at Pasadena and other points.

Allen C. Thomas, of Haverford, Pa., attended New Bedford Monthly Meeting, Mass., on the 27th ult., and spoke acceptably.

Alta Howard has returned to Wichita, Kan., from Lake Geneva, where she was a delegate from Friends' University to the National Convention of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Mountain Home Meeting, Ala., was favored again on the 22d and 23d ult. with the helpful presence and ministry of W. A. Freeman, of Sheffield, Ala.

George A. Barton and family are at home again at Bryn Mawr, Pa., after more than a year's absence at Jerusalem, Palestine, and points in Europe.

John Charles and Burt Wells, class of 1903, Friends' University, leave soon for Haverford College, Philadelphia, where they will pursue advanced work.

Pickering College re-opened for the fall term on Third-day, the 2nd instant. A large number of new pupils were present, and there is every prospect of a most successful year.

Lydia Hoath, after two years' faithful service in Blue River Meeting, near Salem, Ind., retires from active service on account of a much-needed rest. Her postoffice address will be Thorntown, Ind.

E. Howard Brown and family are now located at New Sharon, Ia. They have purchased Sunny Side Poultry and Chicken Farm. He expects to engage in evangelistic and reform work as way may open.

Irene Hunnicutt and John M. Watson attended Southern Quarterly Meeting on the 22d and 23d ult. at Marlboro, N. C. Eli Reece, from High Point, was also present on Seventh-day. Thomas Newlin, of Guilford College, preached in the grove on First-day.

Friends' University will reopen Ninth month 7th. The prospects are good for a large attendance. Isaac and Martha Woodard, of Haviland, Kan., have been secured as superintendent and matron of the young women's hall; Orme Emery and wife for the young men's hall.

S. V. Jewel and wife are now located at League City, Tex. They visited Friends at Friendswood for a few days and attended monthly meeting there the middle of last month. Their labors are much appreciated, and the local meeting will doubtless be much helped by their presence and efforts.

Those wishing to attend Western Yearly Meeting who desire information with reference to board and lodging, can obtain the same by addressing Evan Hadley, Plainfield, Ind. Parties can reach Plainfield from Indianapolis on the Interurban cars, leaving corner of Illinois and Washington Streets at any hour of the day. There is no smallpox at present in Plainfield.

The prospect is bright for an increased attendance at Stella Academy, Oklahoma, the coming year. John Howard is retained as principal, with Gertrude McClung, A.B. (Friends University), and John Casto, A.B. (Penn College), as assistants. The history of the academy has been a record of substantial progress, and a need for larger buildings is beginning to be felt.

Friends should note that during the absence of Edwin McGrew from Newberg, Ore., the coming year, all communications pertaining to Oregon Yearly Meeting which would be addressed to the clerk should be sent to Marguerite P. Elliott, Newberg, Ore., and what would be addressed to the president of Pacific College should be addressed to Charles E. Lewis, acting president.

On the evening of the 25th ultimo a very pleasant party of friends and neighbors met at the home of C. M. Hakes to celebrate the wedding anniversary of F. H. Clark and wife, of Brookfield, N. Y., and bid them farewell, as they were about to depart for their new home in Kansas. The visitors brought with them a set of sterling dessert spoons and one tablespoon, which were presented by Joel Teachout.

Morton C. Pearson began his work at First Friends' Meeting, Indianapolis, Ind., last First-day, the 6th instant. He spent the summer taking work in the Divinity School at Chicago University. While there he also helped in the meeting at West Springs, Ill., a place a little distance from Chicago. He is well pleased with what he has been privileged to enjoy, and feels that the summer has been very pleasantly and profitably spent.

On Seventh month 7th, at Rose Hill, Kan., the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren of John P. and Sarah Davis, numbering forty, came with filled baskets and ice cream to celebrate the fiftieth wedding anniversary of the aged couple. A folding couch was given as a present. In the evening a large number gave them a serenade, singing gospel hymns. The company was invited into the sitting room, and, after a few remarks by Hannah M. Hubbard, the aged couple again repeated the beautiful words that made them one fifty years ago.

Ohio Yearly Meeting, which closed the 2d instant, was marked for its evangelistic spirit and special consecration for missionary work. A full report, which was expected for this issue, failed to reach us in time for insertion.

Buffalo Quarterly Meeting was held the 21st to 23d ult. at Middleton, Kan. Although the attendance was small, the members present were faithful in the midst of difficulties. This point is inconveniently located, being some distance from the railroad. It can be reached from Toronto, Coyville and Buffalo only over five or more miles of rough roads, which cost more in time and labor than ten miles over the level country and turnpikes. So it took both "faith and works" to attend this quarterly meeting. Thomas Simeox, a minister with a minute from Skiatook, Indian Territory, was present during the meeting. His labors and gospel messages were upbuilding. The usual temperance and missionary meetings were held Sixth-day and Seventh-day evenings respectively. Both were well attended, and the interest was good. Next quarterly meeting will be held at Kyle, in Coffee County, Eleventh month 27th, 28th and 29th, 1903.

The Smithfield Quarterly Meeting, New England, was held at Bolton, Mass., Eighth month 13th. The attendance was large, the old meeting house being quite full on the ground floor and some in the galleries. Charles H. Jones and his wife H. Elizabeth Jones, of Amesbury, were present, and both had excellent service, the former speaking at length most forcibly and holding closely the attention of those who heard him. Seneca H. Stevens, of New York State, was present with a minute, and spoke acceptably. John C. Thomas, of Baltimore, and Allen C. and Rebecca M. Thomas, of Haverford, Pa., were also present. There was a large attendance of interested young people. The day was a beautiful one, and the opportunities for social intercourse in the beautiful groves surrounding the meeting house, and the dinner in the commodious house erected near by for First-day School purposes, etc., formed no small part of the value of the day.

We have received an interesting communication from a Friend in Union Quarterly Meeting, Nebraska. This quarterly meeting is part of Iowa Yearly Meeting. It is made up of three monthly meetings and their mission stations, which are distributed over a tract 300 miles in length, and from 10 to 25 miles in width. The account is a brief statement of the growth of meetings here and there where a few scattered but faithful Friends saw the need of local religious effort and earnestly went to work. They held meetings and organized Sabbath Schools in their homes and at school houses, as the way opened, and their efforts have been attended with good results. However, there is still a felt need for earnest, efficient Christian workers. The following Friends would be glad to correspond with and welcome any who may feel called to the field: I. Q. Emry, Norden, Neb.; Joseph Blackledge, Hay Springs, Neb.; Isaac Macy, Lynch, Neb., and Rachel Launn, Bazile Mills, Neb. The last quarterly meeting was held at Kemma, in Knox County. Helen Farr Ford, a returned missionary, and W. Jasper Hadley, yearly meeting superintendent of evangelistic work, were present and gave helpful service.

Events and Comments.

It is generally assumed that a large church organization is more efficient than a small one, and upon this assumption many arguments for church union have been based. But, according to investigations made by "The Church Economist," it would appear that in certain respects the small church has an advantage over the large. Accepting the number of accessories to church membership as a gauge of the efficiency of a church, it is found that small churches spend less money and achieve greater results.

The criminal term of the Supreme Judicial Court at Bangor, Me., for Eighth month, disposed of 140 liquor cases. There were 194 liquor indictments, and of these over fifty respondents fled from the city, fearing jail sentences. Six liquor dealers were sent to jail for six months each, while jail sentences varying from six to eighteen months were imposed upon about 100 others. Nearly all of Bangor's 200 bar rooms are closed, most of the hotels are dry, and the druggists will not sell a drop of liquor, even upon a prescription.

C. F. Gannon, superintendent of colportage of the American Bible Society for North China, writes: "It is hard to write from China without speaking of some new calamity. A great famine faces the millions of the north at this time. All through the winter and thus far in the summer there has been no moisture, no snow, no rain, no dew. The spring crops have failed and famine is already upon many districts. Wives, sons and daughters are being sold to those who can afford to buy—in some districts being sold by the pound, the price being less than that of rice.

The Zionist Congress recently in session in Basle, Switzerland, has been notable because of the definite offer from the British Government to furnish a site for the racial Zion in East Africa, on the Uganda Railroad, between Mau and Nairobi. It is a section admirably watered, fertile, cool, high and inhabitable by Europeans. Control by the British Commissioner is to be nominal; local government will be entirely free and allow for all racial customs. Obviously this scheme differs radically from that of an autonomous state in Palestine, but it is far more practicable, and might serve as an outlet for the oppressed Jews of Russia and Southeastern Europe.

It will be 350 years on Tenth month 27th since Michael Servetus was burned at the stake in Geneva as a heretic with the approval of John Calvin. It is proposed by a historical society of Calvinists at Geneva to celebrate the anniversary by erecting on the spot a monument bearing some such inscription as this: "Protestants and friends of Calvin have erected this expiatory monument to repudiate all coercion in matters of faith and to proclaim their invincible attachment to the gospel and to liberty." This monument will thus register the progress in the Christian spirit of Protestantism since the Reformation. In the same month American Christians, while acknowledging that Calvin's theology as Jonathan Edwards preached it 150 years ago is impossible in the light of our present knowledge of God and man, will give honor to Edwards as the greatest of American thinkers.

The committee of the American Bar Association on uniform legislation report that twenty-two States have adopted a uniform law on negotiable instruments, while only three have passed divorce laws which provide that persons cannot secure a divorce in any State for a cause which would not entitle them to a divorce in the State in which they reside. Uniformity is generally regarded as impracticable, if not impossible; but in twelve European countries the practice is identical by international agreement. Nothing can be more important to society than that there should be certainty as to what constitutes a marriage and what dissolves it. Europe is now, in this, far in advance of the United States. A judgment of divorce may be valid and effective in one of our States which would be treated as absolutely void in another. There is no uniformity as to conditions under which a court may assume jurisdiction of such a proceeding.

There is a deadlock between the governments of the United States and the Republic of Colombia over the terms of the treaty providing for the construction of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama. The treaty was arranged by Secretary Hay and Dr. Herran, respective representatives of the contracting powers, and, after being consented to by the United States Senate, was rejected by the Colombian Congress, which body, however, at the same time, clothed a committee of its members with plenary powers to conclude an amended treaty. The government of the United States showed no disposition to consider a compromise, and was prompt in letting the committee understand that the terms specified in the treaty were the best that could be secured from this country. There is nearly two weeks left for Colombia to take final action in the matter, and it is believed that the committee will recommend ratification. This will practically carry the day for the pending treaty.

The doors through which the exports of the United States flow to the outside world are opening more widely year by year, and this seems to be especially true of the ports located on the Gulf of Mexico, the northern lake border and the Pacific coast. Formerly the Atlantic coast ports held a very large proportion of the export as well as import trade, but in recent years the export trade is being distributed to the ports at the north and the south, as well as the west, though in importations the Atlantic ports still retain about 80 per cent. of the total import trade. Combining the figures for the Atlantic ports, the total exports of 1903, compared with those of 1901, show a falling off of ninety-eight million dollars; the Gulf ports show practically the same figures, while Mexican border ports show an increase of nearly five millions, Pacific ports an increase of ten millions, and northern border and lake ports an increase of eighteen millions. Thus the Atlantic ports are the only groups showing a reduction in 1903, compared with 1901.

TRIP THAT PAID.

Ten Miles to Get a Package of Postum.

Some sufferers won't turn over a hand to help themselves, but there are others to whom health is worth something. A German woman, living in the country, made a 10-mile trip to get a package of Postum. She was well repaid, for it brought health and happiness in return.

A translation of the good frau's letter says: "From a child I had been used to drinking coffee daily, but the longer I continued drinking it the worse I felt. I suffered with heart trouble, headaches and dizziness. Then I had such an uneasy feeling around my heart that I often thought death to be near.

"I gave up drinking coffee and tried hot water, but that did not taste good, and I did not get well. Then I read some letters from people who had been helped by Postum Food Coffee, and I determined to try it.

"I had to go ten miles to get a package, but I went. I prepared it carefully according to directions, and we have used it now in our family for nearly two years, drinking it twice a day. It agrees well with all of us. My heart and bowel troubles slowly but surely disappeared; it is seldom that I ever have a headache; my nerves are steady and strong again, and I am otherwise strong and well. My husband has been lately cured of his sick headaches since we threw coffee out of our home and have used Postum. Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Look in each package for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and much had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contains the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly-concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

TEDDY'S SECRET.

One day Teddy came home from school with his face wreathed in smiles.

"Oh, mamma, just think!" he exclaimed, proudly, "I am going to take part in the exhibition. Miss Hunter asked me to, and I am going to be a—"

Teddy stopped short and put his chubby hands over his mouth tightly.

"It's a secret," he exclaimed, "and I promised not to tell. But you'll see me, mamma," he said, assuringly, "only I'll be all covered—"

Up went his hands once more, and Teddy sighed a long sigh.

"I don't like secrets very well," he said, "specially when I can't tell you, mamma."

Mamma gave him a loving kiss.

"I hope that you will always feel that way, dearie," she said.

"Course I shall," declared Teddy; and then he laughed and laughed. "You'll never know me, mamma," he said, "never! 'cause the turkey-red covering goes way down to my toes. But I can see you, though, 'cause I've got two tiny holes for my eyes to look through, and—"

Poor Teddy. He stopped short again.

"Do you know it, mamma?" he asked soberly. "Did I really and truly tell my secret?"

"I only know that you are to have a turkey-red covering," answered mamma, smiling.

"And can't you guess what I'd be if I had a turkey-red covering over me, and a funny little paper string sticking out of the top?" he asked breathlessly. "I always fire them off on the Fourth of July, and when I put a slow match on them they snap, snap, snap."

And then how mamma did laugh.

"If I should guess it, Teddy, where would your secret be then?" she said.

Teddy looked sober. "I s'pose there wouldn't be any," he answered, regretfully.—"Youth's Companion."

BEHIND THE GATE.

THE writer was walking one day this summer along a traveled highway, and in the distance he saw a little four-year-old child standing by a great iron gate which closed up the entrance to the child's home. The little thing wanted to get in and couldn't. She pounded in vain with her little fist against the hopelessly impassable iron barrier. She rattled the great latch, but that did no good. Again she pounded and pushed, but the iron gate stood unmoved and hardly felt a shiver or a jar. Suddenly she realized that the task was hopeless, that she had no powers at all to get beyond the impenetrable gate. It would not let her through. She burst into an agony of weeping and cried as though her little heart would break. The wail of sorrow did its work. Hastily the gate was pulled open, the little child was caught up by the mother's loving arms and the tears were kissed away. "Didn't you know I would come and let you in as soon as I could? Now it's all right. Don't cry a bit more."

Does any one want a better parable of life than that? How many of us stand before barriers as unyielding as the great iron gate and beat with all our might as the little child who wanted to get through? We cannot see around or under or over. No voice answers back when we call. Our push and stroke of hand are as vain and feeble to move the gate which stretches between us and those we seek as the little four-year-old's tiny fist against the hard iron. But the love behind our gate is every bit as real as that which the little child found when her cry reached through.

Does any one suppose that mothers care when their little ones have pain, that they run to lift the hard latch and bring in their beaten and baffled children, and yet that God doesn't care when His children stand with bruised and wounded hands before the great doors which they cannot open? Nay, not so. Every word of revelation which has come from God says "No." Like as a father pitieth his children so the Lord doeth toward His own. A mother may forget her nursing babe, but I do not forget. Not a sparrow falleth without the Father's notice; how much more are ye than many sparrows? Let not your heart be troubled. I am behind the gate preparing a place for you; if it were not so I would have told you.

But does some perplexed soul cry out, "Why should there be any gate; why may we not see through and discover the stretched-out arms and realize that all is to come out as we wish?" Because all our highest blessings and our supremely precious gains come through faith and not through sight. The whole training and discipline of life demand some mysteries and some strain and stretch of heart. If every gate swung open at our touch, and no hard crying and deep yearning were ever necessary, we should be infinitely poorer creatures and not fit for God's heaven when it opened to us. Those who wear the white and carry the palms have come up through hard testing, and have trod the wine press of suffering with Him whose blood made them white.

FRIENDS' SUMMER SETTLEMENT IN ENGLAND.

SOMEWHAT more than a year ago George Cadbury decided to give a beautiful estate, named Woodbrooke, where he had formerly lived, to be used as the permanent center of a movement which is now well under way among English Friends—a movement in behalf of the religious education of the membership. He realized, as did many of the thoughtful Friends of Great Britain, that the Society was doomed to failure along ancient traditional lines. Its days were numbered unless its members could equip themselves with the weapons of the time and become adequate champions of conquering spiritual truths. Those who had for years been endeavoring to open the way for such religious instruction, at once joined with George Cadbury to help make his gift effective. After months of study upon ways and methods, it was finally decided that the undertaking, which everybody felt to be momentous, should begin with the holding of a six weeks' settlement for religious study during the present summer. With great care a program of work was arranged to cover the six weeks. The Woodbrooke Settlement opened its sessions, with every room full, on the 23d of Seventh month. The devotional meetings, which occurred every day, were occasions of life and power, and impressed all who were there with the reality of the divine presence. The courses of lectures and Bible study have covered a very wide field. The light which modern philosophy and psychology have thrown upon the deepest questions of life and religion—upon the nature of God and the nature of man—was brought before the settlers in a number of courses and by a variety of lecturers who were able to speak from first-hand information. The deepest interest from first to last centered upon this study of life itself. There were courses on Old and New Testament, on early Christian theology and on the prevailing religious conceptions of our time; there were courses on Church history and Quaker principles, on social economics and on missionary effort. The Friends who have been directing this work have spared no pains to get lecturers who knew whereof they spoke and whose words came with authority. Two things are always essential in all work of this sort. First, that those who are to teach on such lines should be persons of deep and positive spiritual experience and insight, and, secondly, that they should be able to deal with profound subjects clearly and with power, so as to convey to their listeners what they have discovered. These conditions have been largely met at Woodbrooke, and the experiment has proved a striking success. The two hundred and fifty Friends who have had the benefits of this Settlement have made real progress, and the whole society will profit by it. But the work has only just begun. Next month will see the inauguration of the permanent settlement for religious instruction in the same beautiful spot. J. Rendel Harris, who has just declined the offer of the Queen of Holland to become professor of New Testament theology in Leyden University—the chair once filled by the great Erasmus—is to be chief instructor, and Joshua Rowntree is to be first warden of the permanent settlement. It will offer remarkable opportunities for English Friends, and the outcome will be added power in testimony and service.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING is in session as we go to print, and one can see in imagination the rows of white tents, filled with earnest Friends, who have come up to their annual feast. Yearly meeting is a great event in the West, and actually “shakes the world for ten miles around.” We hope to have a good report next issue. Next week Western Yearly Meeting begins at Plainfield, and another center will be moved.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A MOVEMENT AGAINST OATHS.

BY THOMAS RAEBURN WHITE.

POSITION AND WORK OF FRIENDS.

Friends were among the first religious sects to take a determined stand against the use of oaths. They objected to them for three reasons:

(1) They believed even solemn judicial oaths to have been forbidden by Christ in His sermon on the mount.

(2) They believed a continual non-reverent use of the name of God to be little less than a species of profanity.

(3) They deemed the requirement of an oath to be a reflection upon their character, as they would tell the truth upon all occasions, oath or no oath.

None of these objections originated with Friends. The first and second were deemed valid by the early Christians of the Apostolic Age, for which, among others, we have the authority of Tertullian and Grotius. The third was recognized even in the Roman times. Shakespeare conceives Brutus as saying, when it was proposed that the conspirators should swear to a bond between them:

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Bru. No, not an oath; if not the face of men,
The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse—
If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
And every man hence to his idle bed;
So let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. But if these,
As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
To kindle cowards and to steel with valour
The melting spirits of women, then, countrymen,
What need we any spur but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? what other bond
Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter? and what other oath
Than honesty to honesty engaged,
That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
Swear Priests and cowards and men cautelous,
Old feeble carrions and such suffering souls
That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear
Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressible mettle of our spirits,
To think that to our cause or our performance
Did need an oath; when every drop of blood
That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
Is guilty of a several bastardy,
If he do break the smallest particle
Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

The conviction of Friends that Christ forbade all swearing is based upon Matthew 5: 33-37, “Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt now forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths. But I say unto you, Swear not at all: neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair black or white. But let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

It is said by Dr. Paley, by Milton and others, whose ideas have been incorporated into the articles of the English church, that oaths before "magistrates" are not forbidden by the passages quoted. It is contended that these words refer only to profanity as commonly understood. This position, however, is clearly untenable. In the text quoted from the sermon on the mount, Christ was speaking of oaths taken upon solemn occasions—not merely of vain and wanton speech. He refers to the laws of "old time," which permitted swearing and prohibited only false swearing. It cannot be supposed that those laws of "old time" permitted vain and wanton profanity? If not, he must have been dwelling upon solemn obligations undertaken under oath. Then follow his words, "But I say unto you, Swear not at all," followed up by a positive injunction, "But let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

It is said the intervening words specifying various oaths which may not be taken impliedly permit an oath in the name of God. This argument is not convincing, however. In the face of a positive prohibition further particular prohibitions could not have such an effect. Moreover, it is declared in Matthew 23: 22, that to swear by heaven is to swear by the Deity; hence swearing by the Deity is likewise forbidden. There is more force in the argument that later on in the Scriptures, various apostles, and, indeed, Christ himself took an oath. It does not, however, convince Friends, and did not the early Christians who opposed swearing.

Even if this scriptural command were lacking, a conformance to a religious ceremony uniformly administered in a manner anything but reverent, and involving an imprecation of divine vengeance is, and should be, shocking to the sensibilities of a very large portion of the community. In their early history Friends suffered many persecutions for maintaining their testimony against oaths. It was expressly provided by Act of Parliament in the reign of Charles II., that "Quakers" refusing to take oaths should be fined five pounds. After the revolution of 1688, however, and the accession of William and Mary, a more liberal spirit manifested itself, and during that reign several acts were passed which permitted Friends to substitute affirmations for oaths in various cases. The first allowed a declaration of fidelity to be substituted for the oath of allegiance in this wise: "I, A. B., do sincerely promise and solemnly declare before God and the world," etc. The right to affirm was later extended to Friends on all occasions when an oath might be required, except the oath taken upon entering Parliament. At a later date, Moravians, Separatists, and those who had been members of those sects, and who still retained their principle about oaths, were allowed the same privileges. Finally an act passed during Victoria's reign now allows all persons who express conscientious scruples against swearing to affirm.

When the first settlers came to America from England they, of course, brought with them the English law as to oaths, unless that law were changed by some express enactment. The only colony which would be at all likely to attempt an innovation at a time when oaths were required in England on all occasions was the Quaker province of Pennsylvania. Accordingly in the laws agreed upon in England in 1682 by William Penn, and those who had associated with him for the purpose of founding the new colony, we find one which provides that testimony should be given in the courts upon simple affirmation without oath, as follows:

"All witnesses, coming or called to testify their knowledge in or to any matter or thing in any court, or before any lawful authority within the said province, shall there give or deliver in their evidence or testimony, by solemnly promising to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, to the matter or thing in question. And in case any person, so called to evidence, shall be convicted of willful falsehood, such person shall suffer and undergo such damage or penalty, as the person or persons against whom he or she bore false witness, did or should undergo; and shall also make satisfaction to the party wronged, and be publicly exposed as a false witness never to be credited in any court, or before any magistrate, in the said province."

This law was far in advance of any English law of that day, and indeed of most laws of this day, and was consequently soon interfered with by the English Government, and was repealed by its action in 1693.

The English act of 1696, however, which extended to Friends the privilege of testifying on affirmation was made applicable to the American colonies, so that members of our Society, except during a short period in Pennsylvania, were never subjected to persecution in America for refusing to swear.

At the time of the Declaration of Independence the law in England allowed only "Quakers" to affirm. Owing to the advanced ideas on the subject of religious liberty in America, we might expect more latitude in their constitutions. Some of them justified this expectation, but others did not. Lack of space prevents an extensive historical review, but in brief the thirteen original colonies generally provided for the affirmation of "Quakers"; some included Quakers and Mennonites, and a few all persons having religious scruples against swearing. Some had no express provisions, but in their absence the law would stand as it was before the Declaration of Independence—i.e., Quakers only could affirm.

The sentiments of liberality in America have since that time grown steadily, the new States being especially liberal on such matters. Any person having religious scruples against swearing may (as in England) affirm in every State or Territory of America, except North Carolina, in which only Quakers, Dunkers and Mennonites are allowed such privileges. In nine of these States the affirmation may be taken by any person irrespective of scruples against the oath, the law usually being stated in this wise, "Any person who desires it may at his option instead of taking an oath, make his solemn affirmation or declaration," etc.

This legislation is of great significance in showing that there is no longer any distinction made between sworn evidence and affirmed evidence. The latter is received upon precisely the same footing, and is accorded equal weight with the former. It is legal in nine States for the witness to take his choice between the oath and the affirmation, irrespective of scruples against swearing, and in all he is very seldom asked to state his reasons for affirming. I have never been asked to state why I desired to affirm, although I have made the request many times in Pennsylvania courts, where theoretically I should have been called upon to state my membership in the Society of Friends and my scruples against taking an oath.

These facts show that the old idea of the meaning of the oath has entirely vanished. It is no longer deemed to call down upon the swearer God's vengeance, but is thought of merely as a form to be gone through with for the purpose of notifying the witness that now his words are to be carefully weighed because he is speaking upon a judicial occasion. The world generally is coming to the position assumed by Friends several hundred years ago, and which William Penn succeeded in putting into practical operation for a brief period. For more than one hundred years many legal minds have realized that the ceremony of the oath has become but an idle form, and might as well be rooted out of our legal procedure, and thrown aside with other like institutions which have from time to time been abandoned.

(To be concluded.)

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Ohio Yearly Meeting convened at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, Eighth month 27th, 1903. The ministers, elders and other workers held a special prayer and praise service at 8.30 a.m., opened by singing "Under the Precious Blood," and two other hymns, in the power of the Spirit. Then followed a season of prayer, in which many took part, after which Jacob Baker said, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus," and the mind of Christ was to do His Father's will, and so should we.

Many testimonies were given to the cleansing power of the blood of Christ, and of His wonderful salvation from sin.

At 10.30 a.m. the yearly meeting proper began. The clerk read an opening minute, expressing the desire that we might be filled with the knowledge of God's will in all things for the work of the Church. After this the names of the delegates were called from our six quarterly meetings, the most of whom answered to their names.

The credentials for persons from other meetings were read, as follows: Achsa C. Kenyon, Lowell Monthly Meeting, Kansas; William J. Sayers, Rhode Island Monthly Meeting; William C. Taber, New York Monthly Meeting; R. Ella Levering, Maryville, Tenn.; Frank and Anna Milner, Fairfield Monthly Meeting, Ohio; Anna K. Knight, New England; Wilbur Estes, Missionary from Nanking, China. These with others who were strangers in our yearly meeting were welcomed. Then the London General Epistle was read, also the Special Epistle to Ohio Yearly Meeting, with the one from Dublin, all of which were edifying to the meeting; and a committee was appointed to prepare epistles to these and all other yearly meetings.

At 2.30 the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight convened, under the sense of the presence of the Lord. The meeting was unusually large, as many were present who were not members of the meeting. The opening songs and prayers were of the Spirit and in harmony with the word of the Lord for a supply of our present need. J. W. Malone read Isaiah 62: "For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace. . . . I will not rest until the righteousness thereof goes forth as brightness, and salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth."

The blessing and benefit of importunate prayer was spoken of as necessary and needful if we, as ministers, feed the people on the bread of heaven. We must get our message from God, and not from our own intellects or minds, according to man's reasonings. Preach Christ, the bread of life. Let Him be the central idea of every sermon.

At 8 p.m. the gospel meeting was well attended, and much interest was manifested in all the service, especially in W. J. Sayers's sermon and his experience as a sinner saved and brought into fellowship with God.

Services on Seventh-day opened with a prayer and praise service at 8 a.m., which was full of life and power, manifested in prayer, song, testimonies and exhortation. At 10.30 the business session opened by song and prayer. The delegates reported Edward Mott for presiding clerk; Asa Pim, recording clerk; Emma B. Malone, reading clerk; Frederick J. Cope, announcing clerk.

Credentials were read for Leverett J. Rugg, of New York Yearly Meeting; George C. Wise, Baltimore Yearly Meeting; Emory J. Reece, Western Yearly Meeting. These with others who were here for the first time were welcomed. Epistles were then read from New York, Baltimore, New England and Western Yearly Meetings. These all evinced a spirit of love and desire as churches to follow Christ and do His will.

The queries were read with a summary answer as prepared from the reports of all our quarterly meetings, giving an encouraging report of the various branches of the Church. They also reported three new meetings set up. The report of the death of Joseph Hadley, Robert Green, Isaac Cox and others the past year was followed by a solemn memorial service as their life work and parting words were rehearsed. Sweet and precious is their memory to us.

At 7 p.m. a street meeting was held with a large attendance, and five souls decided for Christ. Several took part in these services in song, prayer and exhortation.

At 8 p.m. the regular gospel meeting was held, and the word was preached with power, and several came forward to the altar.

Seventh-day, at 8 a.m., a Meeting of Ministry and Oversight was held in Main Street house. Much wholesome counsel and advice were given. Truman Kenworthy said, "Preach the facts of the gospel of Christ, not theories for salvation. Make Christ first and central in every sermon. The gospel meeting held in the yearly meeting house at the same time was one of interest and blessing.

The business session opened as usual at 10 a.m. Charles Stalker's minute was read, and he and Willis Hotchkiss were welcomed to our meeting. Epistles from Baltimore, California and Wilmington Yearly Meetings were read, which contained words of fellowship and cheer concerning our oneness in Christ, the work given us as a Church, and our prosperity in the various fields of missionary and evangelistic work.

The report of the Temperance Committee was encouraging. Three conferences were held and 10,000 tracts distributed by them. The meeting was addressed by E. C. Dinwiddie, National Secretary of Anti-Saloon League, who spoke of the abolition of the canteen from the army, and other legal measures obtained in various ways for the suppression and abolition of the liquor traffic. He also assured us that there was a good hope, by the help of the temperance people, of doing much more efficient work against this curse. Sixty dollars was appropriated for the temperance committee.

At 2 p.m. the business meeting again assembled to hear the report of the Educational Committee, and William P. Pinkham's report on the subject of a college for Ohio Yearly Meeting, its objects and needs, such as securing for our young people an orthodox religious education in connection with their literary studies, that the books used and the teachers employed might be such as would not lead astray in the least from the authority of the entire Scriptures as we now have them. Propositions from several places were made to secure the college, and the committee was continued to secure a location and funds for it.

The statistical report showed 384 additions—by birth, 62; by request, 219; by certificate, 103; reductions by release, removal and death, 281; and several ministers recorded. The statistics were somewhat imperfect, as to our total membership, 5,554 being given.

At 8 p.m. the gospel meeting was held, under the care of the Christian Endeavor Society, in which the convicting power of the Spirit attended the preaching, which was followed by a large number coming to the altar for salvation, meeting continuing late. One person, after leaving the meeting and retiring to bed, became so convicted for salvation that he arose and returned to the meeting for counsel and help.

First-day morning services began at 8.30 with prayer and praise in the yearly meeting house, and a meeting at the same time in Main Street house on "Divine Healing," under the care of Levi Lupton, who had been wonderfully healed seven years ago of heart trouble in one of these meetings. They have been regularly held during yearly meeting time since 1880, when the work was begun by A. H. Hussey, without a public notice or the sanction of the yearly meeting. As many were healed in these meetings they gradually became of interest to a large number of Friends and were publicly announced. They are now placed regularly on the program of the yearly meeting. These meetings are of great interest and spiritual power, lasting three and four hours. The meeting this year began with scriptural teaching upon the subject. During this service of anointing with oil and prayer several told of their healing by simple faith in Jesus and by the Holy Spirit.

At 10 a.m. there was a large gathering at the yearly meeting house, in which Ascha Kenyon, Anna Knight and others spoke, closing with an altar service. Willis Hotchkiss preached in the Methodist Church and John Pennington in the Presbyterian Church at the same time. A large gospel meeting at 3 p.m., also at 8 p.m., when Charles Stalker preached to an attentive audience, followed by altar service, at which a large number were blessed.

At 2 p.m. William J. Sayers held a children's meeting of great interest, so that many of the children confessed Christ and were blessed in a prayer service.

On Second-day, at 8 a.m., William Smith spoke to profit in the prayer and praise meeting.

At 10.30 a.m. the report of the Indian Committee was read with much interest. The work of the gospel among them is very encouraging. Two hundred and fifty dollars was appropriated to continue the work. Epistles were read from Canada and Iowa Yearly Meetings. J. W. Malone's report of the Bible Training School in Cleveland was also encouraging. They had last year 153 in attendance, many of whom were preparing for gospel work in various fields.

The report of the Pastoral and Evangelistic Committee said there had been revival services held in every meeting within the yearly meeting, besides tent and camp meetings in every quarterly meeting. That Freepoint Meeting, which had been discontinued for several years, was opened again with a good membership. There had been 75 revival meetings held in churches and 11 tent meetings, about 700 converted, 400 reclaimed, and a large number claimed to have been sanctified; $1,162 had to be used in this work. A subscription and collection of $448.51 was taken up in the meeting.

James Cooley spoke of the mission and rescue work he and others were engaged in, having a Gospel Rescue Mission in Cleveland, also a home for unfortunate girls, all under the care of Friends, which is attended with very great blessing to many. A collection of over $250 was taken for the work.

At the evening meeting John Pennington preached a very instructive and impressive sermon, after which Charles Stalker spoke briefly and invited to the altar those who had needs that God alone could supply. Many responded to the call, and with broken and contrite hearts called upon God and were blessed.

The morning meeting on Third-day was devoted to testimonies of our missionaries and their work. Wilbur Estes and Effie Murray spoke of our work in China as being very encouraging, and of the many open doors and calls for missionaries. Dr. Abigail E. Goddard, of New England Yearly Meeting, spoke of her call to India and preparation to go under the Board of Ohio Yearly Meeting this autumn.

At 10.30 a.m., after song and prayer, the business session was opened, and a letter of fraternal greeting was read from Seth C. Rees, who could not be present. He reported that in his gospel work the past year he had witnessed the conversion and sanctification of about 2,000 souls, and that scores had been rescued from the depths of vice and crime, and hundreds of the sick had been healed in answer to prayer. John Y. Hoover, of Iowa, also sent a fraternal greeting and encouragement in our work as a yearly meeting. W. Mahlon Perry, from Central City, Neb., our former presiding clerk, wrote a kind fraternal letter of good cheer, which was read and a few named to prepare a response to all these, which was done and signed by our clerk.

The treasurer reported that the assessments from the quarterly meetings were all paid up.

Friends' Foreign Missionary Board of the Yearly Meeting reported that the past year was a marked one. All were touched by the death of Julia Estes, and Charles Stalker gave a beautiful tribute to her memory as to efficiency in every way as a missionary, being endeared to all.

The Bungalow of India has been completed to the great comfort of our missionaries, the cost of the land and all being about $5,000. Delia Fistler reports, "God has answered prayer and given victory in many conflicts. We find many anxious needy souls for the gospel all around us, and God is blessing the work and many have been converted. Doors are open every place for evangelistic work, and many are receiving the truth as never before. We have great need of more evangelists." Wilbur Estes said the work in China is going on slowly but surely. The gospel has the same effect on Chinese as on people in our land. "One old man who was saved in our work soon gathered a company around him and taught them about Jesus and His salvation, and thus many were converted. Many open doors in China need more workers, so I am hastening back." Charles Stalker offered a fervent prayer for our missionary work, then an offering was made in the meeting of $2,271.10 to carry on the work.

At 4 p.m. a meeting for ministers and workers was held for conference and help, in which many gave very valuable counsel and advice.

Fourth-day opened with a prayer and praise meeting by those who had been especially blessed during yearly meeting. At 9 a.m. Elmer Rees, who had been four years in South Africa, gave some account of his gospel work there, and the condition of the people. He testified to God's provision for spirit, soul and body in saving and healing power, where the surroundings were very different from here in Christian lands. Willis Hotchkiss then gave a practical missionary talk, inviting to go and give for the spread of the gospel, that donations after one's death for missionary work would not be counted by God as a reward like it would while living, because at death we could do no more with it.

Returning minutes were given to all our visiting ministers. Epistles were prepared for all yearly meetings. After prayer and dedication of Dr. Abigail E. Goddard for service in India, this ninety-first session of the yearly meeting closed under a precious sense of Christ's presence and favor. H.

The lessons of the past quarter afford a graphic picture of what may be expected of human nature. All the incidents are full of that fidelity to truthfulness in the portrayal of human character which is always found in the Bible. In the gallery of Scripture portraits few are more familiar, or stand out with greater definiteness of outline, than those of Saul, of David and of Jonathan; few lives contain more wholesome lessons, because in their characters we recognize men of like passions with ourselves, men who knew what it was to have strong temptations, and who, at least in the case of David, knew where help could be found, and gained it.

The lessons are progressive. We have first, Israel demanding a king. Samuel, who had done so much for his people—being almost a second Moses—was growing old, his sons were unfit to take his place, and more than this, the people wanted a king so as to be like the nations around them. Though Samuel told them what a king would be like, they persisted. Next, we have the account of the choice of Saul to be the king. He was, according to human standards, an ideal man for the position. He was of splendid physique, a good warrior and a good leader for the men over whom he was set. His heart was right, and he started out well. With the installation of Saul as political head of the Israelites, the time had come for Samuel to retire into private life. His farewell address is full of wisdom, clearly pointing out the only path of safety: "Only fear the Lord, and serve him in truth with all your heart: for consider how great things he hath done for you."

Saul for some years seems to have reigned well, but the temptations which surrounded him were too great for him to resist, and he yielded. In an expedition against the Amalekites he disobeyed the command of the Lord, and the aged Prophet Samuel came out of his retirement to carry to him the severe message that he was rejected from being king. "To obey is better than sacrifice," is the lesson that comes down the ages from this sad incident. With Saul rejected it was needful to choose another man for king. When he was chosen David was not one whom men would have picked out, but Samuel again gave utterance to a great truth when he said, "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

The youthful David shows his fitness to be the leader of Israel in his encounter with the giant Goliath. He exhibits skill, courage, knowledge of surrounding circumstances and of his own abilities, and above all puts his trust in Jehovah to enable him to use all his powers to the best advantage for the help of others and for the glory of God. Saul's enmity against David was to test David's character, and was part of that preparation which was to fit him for being king. David stood the test nobly, and "behaved himself wisely in all his ways; and the Lord was with him." In the friendship of David and Jonathan we have a beautiful picture of how great may be the love of one friend for another; and also the lesson that self-renunciation and service is the basis of the highest friendship. In the course of events Saul falls into the hands of David, who then has the opportunity to rid himself of his enemy; but David recognizes the great truth that vengeance belongeth unto the Lord, and spares his foe. The death of Saul ends the sad tragedy of a life begun well, but, falling under temptation, was yielded to the powers of evil. "The wages of sin is death." Through events not of his own ordering David becomes king, and began his reign by seeking direction of the Lord. The exact temptations to which Saul yielded could not be ours, but the essence of the temptations is the same in every age. The only safe place is total abstinence from all that is known to be wrong. But life is more than negative; to do nothing is in itself wrong. To every one some gift has been intrusted. Therefore, "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

"It is easier for a man to make money than it is for money to make a man."

The wonder of the age among nations is the rapid and far-reaching transformation of the Empire of the Mikado. Only a few years ago it was a group of petty feudal states. When the lords of these separate domains realized that the people would be benefited by a more homogeneous government, they voluntarily withdrew into private life. The Emperor became actual sovereign, and with the proclamation of a Constitution, in 1889, and the subsequent organization of a national legislature, the whole trend of political affairs was changed. The young giant felt his strength in the war with China, and rapidly acquired a sense of dignity and self-respect that commercial progress and the increase of wealth have emphasized.

As in China, there was an evangelization by the Roman Catholic Church centuries ago, but by reactionary influences such as these empires seem peculiarly susceptible to, the work of these early missionaries was blotted out, and it was not until after the middle of the century just closed that the way was opened for the preaching of Christ to the now more than forty millions of Japanese.

The natives are described as of quick perception and keen intelligence—"the Yankees of the Occident." They have recognized the benefits of education, and the government has established a complete system of schools, from kindergarten to university, with compulsory attendance in the lower grades. Eager for practical results, they are impressed with the scientific and technical knowledge brought within their reach, and are easily influenced in the direction of materialism. This tendency is favored by the fact that their awakened intelligence quickly rejects the crude superstitions of the forms of Shintoism and Buddhism with which the people are most familiar, and, knowing no other religion, they come to feel that agnosticism is the mark of an educated person. The influence in this direction of unchristian educators, business men and government officials coming to them from America and Europe has been great.

On the other hand, there is a rapid acceptance of the principles of Christian civilization. Japan may be said to be a pagan state with Christian institutions. The number of persons attached to all churches—Roman, Greek and Protestant—is only one to each 336 of population. Nine hundred Christian churches are set over against 140 times their number of pagan temples and shrines; yet the whole "nation is honey-combed with influences which radiate from the cross." There is among many a wonderful openmindfulness. The Bible is studied in Buddhist schools; lectures on Christianity are invited by the priests in charge, and the newer Buddhism is being greatly modified by the spirit and methods of the Christian faith. The chief representatives of Shintoism, the primitive religion of Japan, have asked of the government a new charter, organizing themselves as a patriotic secular body instead of for religious objects. The Minister of Education recently included the New Testament in a list of books recommended to young people.

Still there is vast and urgent need for active evangelistic work, for virile men and capable women who represent a scholarly and effective piety, who can face every problem and demonstrate by their own lives that the religion of our Lord is for the strong and the intelligent and the successful no less than for the weak and ignorant.

Japan is one of the white fields in which, to all appearance, delay means not only loss of present opportunity, but increasing disadvantage as indifference and even hostility gain a foothold in minds that are being taken up with the novelties of their recent enlightenment.

Our denominational work there has been before us recently, in part because of its adversities, and in part because of what it has been able to accomplish. Our prayers and our means ought to go to increase its effectiveness that we may have a part in the reward that the faithful laborer shall receive when he shall come rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

Missionary Department.

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Herman Newman, 718 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.]

A SUGGESTION TO THOSE PREPARING TO GO TO THE MISSION FIELD.

"God, when He makes the prophet, does not unmake the man." (Locke.) God, when he makes the missionary, does not unmake the man. Rather would he develop him anew with all of his various talents and in the nature which He has given him.

God has planned ample supplies so that we may not grow narrow. The accusation is often made that the missionary is a one-sided person. It need not be so (except in the sense that "This one thing I do".) God would not have it so. He provides against it. He holds out opportunities for the fullest spiritual, intellectual and physical growth. These are often seized and made use of at home. But that is not enough. We ought to keep growing, even while on the field. Neither is it God's plan that only the spiritual should keep on growing. This is the tendency, even till itself be dwarfed and hindered by the lack of development in other lines. It may be pleaded that missionaries are too busy. They ought never to be too busy to live. That they may live the best lives they must be well rounded in all lines. After all, what is more important than to live?

I venture to give a few thoughts which have been growing and intensifying with each year which I have spent on the mission field. Man needs variety in all things, the missionary not excepted. Deprived, as many must be, of much that tends to better and nobler service, every possible opportunity should be sought to get what supplies may be secured.

To make this practical, the party going out should supply himself with a variety of books, papers and magazines. Never neglect writing to personal friends and relatives. Through them may come richness of blessing, inspiration for nobler service, home tenderness, love and encouragement. It is right to get from those who can give. Thank God for friends and that He does enable those on the field to use the means of letter writing, even to the saving of some souls.

The heart cries out, "Use us in every possible way, Father, but spare us from so narrowing our lives that they may not, in every possible way, appeal to other lives and thus bring them to thee."

The God-fed life is able to feed others. The God-fed intellectual life is able to win and teach others. The God-fed intellectual life, with a strong body, is able to continue to feed to lead, to teach, to persevere and to prevail in bringing men to Christ. This is not to magnify intellectual or physical strength, but a plea for their proper recognition, conservation and development on the part of the missionary.

If the missionary is in a land where there are beautiful things to be seen, who has a better right to see and enjoy them. As the "Spirit brings them to remembrance" they may serve to illustrate and make plain the meaning of the kingdom of heaven and of the new life in Christ. Who has a better right to delve into the literature of the natives (if there be any) that he may know their thoughts and thus be the better able to lead them to know God, the one object of his life? Life is a constant getting and giving. It cannot always be one of giving only.

Thus far my thoughts have been with the outgoing missionary, that what he may be able to take may bring into his daily life as great a variety as possible. Give thought to this. Make it a matter of prayer in choosing every article of furniture for what may, in after years, prove to be the only little home world. The pictures for the walls, the little home remembrances—these do not hinder, but, through sacred associations of the past, bring us the nearer to our Christ and make us more like Him. When these things are brought into submission and used for Him they become a sacred part of every life.

My heart often goes out to those who in the hottest countries and in the coldest, must live lives of destitution, so far as many of these home supplies are concerned. May God touch the hearts of those who can send and give, to do their happy part in bringing joy to such lives. In Alaska in the North, or in the heat and famine of stricken India, these little comforts may cheer hearts and help in the work for which they have given their lives.

NOTICE.

Arrangements have been made with the Central Passenger Association for reduced rates for those wishing to attend Indiana Yearly Meeting, commencing Ninth month 30th. Tickets will be on sale Ninth month 28th, 29th and 30th at the rate of one fare for the round trip, tickets good returning until Tenth month 10th. These tickets will be on sale at all points on different roads within the limits of Indiana Yearly Meeting. All necessary information can be procured from the local agent at the different points. The yearly meeting will be held this year at Marion.

B. JOHNSON,
R. R. Secretary, Indiana Yearly Meeting.

To Attenders of Indiana Yearly Meeting:

Indiana Yearly Meeting is to be held at Marion, Ind., this year, beginning Ninth month 30th. A large boarding tent will be erected on the grounds, at which everybody who desires it can get good meals at very reasonable rates. Also a check room, in which all baggage and lunch boxes can be taken care of, and tables on which lunch can be eaten by all who desire to bring lunch. The Committee on Entertainment request that all who expect to attend the yearly meeting and wish entertainment will drop a postal card to William E. Darter, corner Sixteenth and Boots Streets, stating their wishes, whether board and lodging, or only beds, are wanted. Very truly,
ELWOOD SCOTT.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Ohio Yearly Meeting, held from Eighth month 27th to Ninth month 2d, 1903, has proved a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord to very many souls. From the beginning unto the close it was, in a marked degree, owned and blessed of Him.

The twelve chapters of Isaiah seemed to be the keynote of the meetings from session to session, and we humbly acknowledged that "great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

The business of the yearly meeting, much of it of importance and far-reaching in its influence, was transacted in the spirit of our Master, we believe, with great harmony and love.

The report of the Evangelistic Committee caused a note of rejoicing and thanksgiving for the blessing of the Lord upon its faithful labors. To Him be all the praise! Through its diligent work in seeking the unsaved, rescuing the perishing, gathering Christ's little ones into the fold, many have, by the Holy Ghost, been established in the truth as it is in Jesus, the manifest results of which were the presence of a large number of young disciples, who "came in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ to attend our yearly meeting."

The presence and faithful gospel service of ministers from other yearly meetings was edifying and much appreciated. The missionary spirit was felt throughout the meeting, and definite consecrations for the home and foreign work, both of lives and money were freely and joyfully made.

The report of Friends' Foreign Missionary Society was very satisfactory, showing how wonderfully the Lord has blessed the work on the foreign field the past year, even amid the trials and bereavements that have come to our China Mission.

We deeply feel our loss in the death of our dear sister, Julia B. Estes. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the spirit, they rest from their labors and their works do follow them." The needs for the work are so pressing at this time in Nanking Mission that the Board has liberated Wilbur Estes, her bereaved companion, for a speedy return to the work there. We have great sympathy for him, as he leaves his dear little motherless daughter in the home land; but in the strength of the Lord he goes back joyfully. Our public missionary meeting was a time of great blessing, and the faithful presentation of God's plan and provision for the spread of the gospel by our dear brother, John Pennington, brought us face to face with our duties and privileges as never before.

Our Saviour's commission to His disciples is the commission of a King that cannot be disobeyed without peril. He clearly set before us the kingly call, the kingly conquest, the kingly protection, with kingly results and rewards.

The yearly meeting closed under the overshadowing presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Editorial Secretary of F. F. M. B. of Ohio Y. M.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Sylvester Newlin and family will remain at Westfield, Ind., for another year.

Wm. H. Perry is now engaged in evangelistic work. Mail will reach him addressed to Mardock, Okla.

Friends at Westfield, Ind., hold regular services at the Union High School Building and at the Methodist Episcopal Church.

George L. Crossman, who has been spending the summer at South China, Me., addressed the meeting at that place on First-day, the 6th.

Isaac Sharpless had a good article in the "Philadelphia Public Ledger" last week on "Pennsylvania Politics One Hundred Years Ago and To-day."

A large company of Friends and others have gathered on First-day of each week in one of the hotels at Eaglesmere, Pa., during the summer.

On account of the Westfield Meeting-house undergoing repairs, the quarterly meeting was held at Hortonville, and was a time of special blessing.

Drusilla Wilson, who is 88 years old, recently attended Westfield Monthly Meeting, Indiana, and had very acceptable service in the interest of the Temperance Conference in 1906.

Professor Charles E. Tebbetts, of Pasadena, president of Whittier College, Cal., recently let the contract for building a residence on the College Villa Tract, and the work will be begun at once.

Our report of Short Creek Quarterly Meeting, held at Smithfield, Eighth month 15th, gave the number of accessions in the quarter as 22, which was the number of accessions to Smithfield Meeting alone.

L. L. Hobbs, president of Guilford College, has just started on a visit to Iowa Yearly Meeting, and the yearly meetings to follow, in behalf of the needs of Guilford College, and especially the Harriet Green Memorial Fund.

Philip C. Garrett, of Philadelphia, president of the Indian Rights Association, has made public some interesting correspondence which has passed between him and Secretary Hitchcock bearing on the recent Indian scandals.

Prof. Thomas Newlin preached a practical, helpful sermon on First-day, the 6th inst., to a full house at Guilford College, N. C. Afterward a collection was taken for Friends in Jamaica who suffered from the recent hurricane.

An Old Settlers' Meeting was held the 10th inst. in the grove about Friends' Meeting House at Bloomingdale, Ind. Joseph G. Cannon, next Speaker of Congress; George Hobson, and E. S. Holliday, Congressman from the district, were speakers.

Mary A. Wallis, of Southport, England, has been secured to assist Edward Grubb in the editorial work of the "British Friend." Each issue of this able monthly review has very much valuable matter, and it is a great credit to the Society of Friends.

David E. Sampson, general superintendent of the Committee for the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, preached a gospel sermon in a Presbyterian Church in Salisbury, N. C., on the 6th inst., and lectured on the liquor question in the same city in the evening.

Springdale Quarterly Meeting was held at Springdale, Kan., the 4th to 6th instant. The yearly meeting superintendent of evangelistic work, Josiah Butler, was present and gave valuable help in the meeting. All the home ministers were also present and took part. The business was transacted with much unity. Rebecca Ballard preached at the Sabbath morning service.

Fifth-day, the 20th ult., was the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Evan C. and Martha B. Thornton, two veteran ministers of Friends. They were united as husband and wife in Old Newport, now Fountain City, Ind. The occasion was made enjoyable by friends who came to their home in Portland, Ind., to offer congratulations and leave their tokens of friendship. Many from several States who could not come sent instead beautiful presents that they might be present in one way if not in another.

R. Hayes Puckett, who has been located in the meeting at Bangor, Ia., for the past year, is contemplating taking a trip to "Old Virginia" with his wife and little girl, to visit his parents. They expect to start immediately after Iowa Yearly Meeting, and go via Buffalo, New York, Boston and Washington. He has done excellent work in Bangor Meeting, and will remain another year.

The Central Passenger Association has granted one and one-third fare round-trip for Western Yearly Meeting of Friends for all points in Indiana and Illinois, except from points within a distance of fifty miles of Chicago and East St. Louis. Tickets are good going Ninth month 16th, 17th and 18th, and returning up to and including Ninth month 25th. C. E. Newlin, Railroad Secretary.

We have a valued letter from our friend Esther Frame, who has for some weeks been extremely ill in Richmond, Ind. She has decidedly improved, though she remains far from proper health and strength. Her present breakdown followed a remarkable evangelistic campaign through the State of Florida, where crowds came to her meetings and hundreds of persons, both men and women, were definitely blessed.

Deep River Quarterly Meeting, North Carolina, was held at High Point on the 5th inst., with a larger attendance than usual. David E. Sampson, minister from Yadkin Valley Quarter, preached from the 62d chapter of Isaiah. John M. Watson, a minister from Kansas Yearly Meeting, who, since North Carolina Yearly Meeting has visited and labored in 160 homes, gave a brief, searching discourse. The meeting took up evangelistic work with commendable energy, and appointed Dougan Clark Cox, son of the late Isham Cox, chairman of the committee, and took up a collection to aid the work. It also appointed a committee on the suppression of the liquor traffic. Among the members present were two veteran soldiers of the cross, representing different departments of service. They are each more than 85 years of age, and the elder drove ten miles, and the younger five miles to be present.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at New Garden, Ind., the 22d and 23d ult. The Gospel was preached with clearness and power each day by Luke Woodard. Phariba W. Stephens gave a very interesting account of the needs and condition of the mission field in Mexico, having just returned from a year and a half's sojourn there. The reports from the different departments of work showed an increasing activity in all lines, and a willingness to advance in the light of truth. On Sabbath, after a basket dinner on the grounds and a social time together, a temperance program was rendered, in which Prof. C. W. Hodgins, in a forcible address, made prominent the fact that five of the great life-giving sources to this nation was being rapidly sapped by the saloon traffic, and to the citizen and Christian its suppression was imperative. Phariba W. Stephens then gave an impressive talk on proportionate giving.

The ministers and workers of Spiceland, Ind., Quarterly Meeting, held an all-day conference at Shirley, Ind., on the 3d instant. The Friends' Meeting-house at that place was filled to its utmost capacity with those who greatly enjoyed the excellent addresses. Lizzie M. Ralston, local minister at Dunreith, spoke upon "The Possibilities of Childhood," and Professor Frank Pritchard, Raysville, upon the "Spiritual Training of the Young." The theme of "Missions" was then brought before the conference in two addresses: "A Century of Missions," by Carrie T. Woodard, Knightstown, and "Our Work in Mexico," by Phariba W. Stephens, Richmond. Professor Elbert Russell, of Earlham College, spoke upon the "Victories of Peace." The Friends of Shirley spread a bountiful repast at the noon hour in the school building across the street from the meeting-house, and the day was full of social enjoyment as well as spiritual benefit.

Guilford College opened for the year on the 1st inst., with an unusually large number of students. The college reception was given by the Students' Christian Associations the evening of the 5th inst. The exercises took place on the college campus under the moon-lit shade of the beautiful trees, which were decorated with lighted Chinese lanterns, and presented a beautiful scene. A representative of each of the Christian Associations welcomed the old and new students, and President Hobbs followed with a brief speech of welcome and cheer. The young people then heartily entered into the occasion, and thoroughly enjoyed the social advantages of the evening. Five native Cubans from Havana, besides other students enrolled on the 7th, making the largest number of students that have ever entered Guilford during the opening week. The power house for furnishing electric light, heat and water for the college buildings and campus is finished, and the 80 horsepower engine and 100 horse-power boiler are being put in.

Wilmington College opened on the 9th instant with a prospect of a large attendance. The afternoon of the day was devoted to the inauguration of Albert J. Brown, the new president. Frank S. Lamar, professor of Science, was in charge of the exercises, and had given much care to the preparation of the program. At his suggestion the business men of town closed up their places of business from 2 till 4 p.m. Great interest in the exercises was shown by the citizens, and many stores and dwellings were decorated with flags and bunting. The audience was large and attentive, nearly filling the yearly meeting auditorium. Nancy A. C. Leonard gave a greeting on behalf of the board; Professor Lamar, on behalf of the faculty; Superintendent W. C. Sayers, of the public schools, on behalf of the alumni; J. B. Wright, on behalf of the yearly meeting, and Robert E. Pretlow, on behalf of the local meeting. President Robert L. Kelley, of Earlham College, gave an address of kindly fraternal greeting, and then Albert J. Brown gave his inaugural address, in which he paid a gracious compliment to the long, faithful and positive administration of President Unthank, and appealed to all for their sympathy and support in the arduous duties of the new administration.

The time was when a committee of Friends used annually to visit the remnants of the Indian tribes in the Eastern States. Joseph S. Elkinton has been performing this service this summer under a religious concern. "The (Philadelphia) Friend" gives this account of his visits:

"Joseph S. Elkinton, having in the progress of his religious visits to remnants of tribes in the Eastern States visited the six Indian reservations in Western New York in company with our friend Zebedee Haines (whose concern in the work ceased at Poplar Ridge neighborhood) was there joined by William Mekeel as his companion in proceeding to Eastern Massachusetts, stopping at North Dartmouth. Thence proceeding to West Falmouth, they were joined on First-day morning, the 2d instant, by Job S. Gidley, who came from his home in North Dartmouth. After having a solemnized service in the Friends' Meeting, at West Falmouth, they (with the present editor), proceeded in the afternoon to the two districts of the Mashpee Indians, each about twelve miles east of Buzzard's Bay shore. Collecting at South Mashpee a considerable gathering, considering that the notice sent to that neighborhood had failed to be delivered, they found among them a tender people, whose sympathy and interest were comforting to the visitors, and a baptizing season was witnessed. In the evening at North Mashpee (the stated minister being absent on a vacation), this coming was welcomed in a congregation of over sixty attenders, and the life and solemnity of the several ministrations were acknowledged. The decorum, dignity and attention of these people were marked.

"Returning the next day to their places of sojourn, the visitors were contemplating a passage to Gay Head, on Martha's Vineyard Island, for last Third-day, to find what service might arise for them among the small remnants of Indians there.

"Our Friend Joseph S. Elkinton, with his companions, was joined by Job S. Gidley at Vineyard Haven on Third-day, the 4th instant, en route through the island of Martha's Vineyard to visit the Gay Head Indians. The meeting that evening was made small by a storm, which prevented their return during the next day, in the evening of which a considerable number of the natives gathered in a religious meeting which, like the first, was a season of favor. Unable to yield to an invitation to continue with them for two meetings more, they bade those Indians farewell, having had interesting seasons in some of their families, where they found not only much brightness of mind, but also a welcoming of gospel truth.

"Being enabled to return on Fifth-day to West Falmouth, on the next day they accompanied Friends to Sandwich Monthly Meeting, held at South Yarmouth, the more readily so on the news coming that our esteemed friend Elizabeth C. Stetson, of that place, had died on the day preceding the monthly meeting. After the conclusion of its sitting a visit to the stricken family left a sense of duty to remain to attend her funeral, held the day following (Seventh-day). There seemed a liberty to proceed in the latter part of the day towards Boston and Lynn, and to look from there towards the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy Indians of Maine."

BOOK REVIEW.

"William White: A Brother of Men." By Oliver Morland. 8vo., pp. 162. Sold by Headley Bros., London. Price 1s. 6d. net. (36 cents net. May be ordered through The American Friend Publishing Company.)

This book gives a picture of a man who in his life work was unique, and also of the work itself, and of how he acquired and retained such a hold as he had over working men. He was not, indeed, the founder of the great Adult School Movement among English Friends, for it had been started before he came to Birmingham, where his chief work in connection with it lay; but such was his activity and devotion to the cause that he was generally regarded as its father. In Birmingham his individual class numbered 300 men, and met early every First-day morning. Many were those whose lives were reclaimed, and whose homes were brightened through this work. In most of the great towns in England, and in many country places, he traveled to introduce or encourage adult schools, and great were the results accomplished.

In addition to this, he was active in the temperance cause on the older methods, for he relied chiefly upon influencing the individual.

The affairs of the city of Birmingham engrossed much of his attention, and he served on the Town Council and as Mayor. His most important position in practical results was as chairman of the

FORCED TO RESIGN.

Lost a Good Position Through Bad Food.

"I felt immediately better after my first meal on Grape-Nuts, which I began to use after my health had broken down and I was a nervous wreck.

"My stomach was in such a condition that I could eat nothing, and trying to eat was a burden to me.

"My pulse ran up to 115, and my weight fell 21 pounds. I got so I couldn't work, and was forced to resign a good position. I took milk punches between meals and quit meat altogether, but nothing improved my appetite and the condition of my stomach. I finally went on one meal a day, and had to force myself to eat that, and was rapidly starving, until one day a friend suggested Grape-Nuts.

"Although my palate and stomach had rebelled against all other foods, Grape-Nuts agreed immediately, and I really relished this food while the changes in my condition have been wonderful. My weight increased from the start, and I have now regained 12 pounds, while my pulse is normal, and I am a new person all over. Life seems worth living, and I enjoy all my meals.

"To make sure that this change was due to Grape-Nuts I made the experiment of leaving off the food for five days, but I began to go backwards so rapidly that I concluded I had satisfied my curiosity in this respect, and I went back to Grape-Nuts again in a hurry, and began to pick up again. Grape-Nuts certainly touched the spot and did the work." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Independent Committee, which, after careful house-to-house visitation, brought in extensive plans for the betterment of the city, plans which have been largely realized. He was a valued minister among Friends, and an exceedingly genial man. A notable characteristic was large-mindedness, so that he was one of the few very old men in the society who heartily encouraged the movement for the summer school, and was not afraid of its tendency towards modern scholarship.

The book presents in an interesting and readable form the life of a man who without extraordinary natural endowments lived a life of extraordinary activity and usefulness, because he was filled with the love of God and love for men. We heartily commend the book.

THE WILL OF GOD.

The definition of ideal life: "A man after my own heart, who will fulfill all my law."

The object of life: "I come to do thy will, O God."

The first thing one needs after life is food: "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me."

The next thing one needs after food is society: "He that doeth the will of my Father in heaven the same is my brother and sister and mother."

You want education: "Teach me to do thy will, O God."

You want pleasure: "I delight to do thy will, O God."

A whole life can be built upon that one vertical column, and then when all is over, "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever."—Henry Drummond.

Two young women of Sedgwick hired a livery horse with which to take a drive out into the country. Before the start was made the liveryman, in answer to his patron's inquiries as to the temper and disposition of the horse, assured them that he would be as gentle as a lamb if they kept the rein away from his tail, while there might be trouble if they didn't. The young women returned in safety, and when asked if the horse had misbehaved, one of them replied:

"Oh, no! There was one little shower, but we had an umbrella, and held it so that not a drop touched the horse's tail."—Epworth Herald.

"You have such strange names for your towns over heah!" said a titled Englishman. "Weehawken, Hoboken, Poughkeepsie, and ever so many others, don't you know!"

"I suppose they do sound queer to English ears," said the American, thoughtfully. "Do you live in London all the time?"

"Oh, no," said the unsuspecting Briton, "I spend part of my time at Chipping Norton, and then I've a place at Pokes-togg-on-the-Hike." — The Christian Register.

A man was asked, recently, by a gruff clerk at the stamp window, after he had deposited two cents, "Well, what do you want?" He answered, gently, "An automobile, please." Verily, a soft answer turneth away wrath.—Albany Argus.

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER.

He Cured Himself of Serious Stomach Trouble by Getting Down to First Principles.

A man of large affairs in one of our prominent Eastern cities by too close attention to business, too little exercise and too many club dinners, finally began to pay nature's tax, levied in the form of chronic stomach trouble; the failure of his digestion brought about a nervous irritability, making it impossible to apply himself to his daily business, and finally deranging the kidneys and heart.

In his own words he says: "I consulted one physician after another, and each one seemed to understand my case, but all the same they each failed to bring about the return of my former digestion, appetite and vigor. For two years I went from pillar to post, from one sanitarium to another, I gave up smoking, I quit coffee, and even renounced my daily glass or two of beer, but without any marked improvement.

"Friends had often advised me to try a well-known proprietary medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and I had often perused the newspaper advertisements of the remedy, but never took any stock in advertised medicines, nor could believe a fifty-cent patent medicine would touch my case.

"To make a long story short I finally bought a couple of packages at the nearest drug store, and took two or three tablets after each meal, and occasionally a tablet between meals, when I felt any feeling of nausea or discomfort.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week to note a marked improvement in my appetite and general health, and before the two packages were gone I was certain that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets was going to cure completely, and they did not disappoint me. I can eat and sleep and enjoy my coffee and cigar, and no one would suppose I had ever known the horrors of dyspepsia.

"Out of friendly curiosity I wrote to the proprietors of the remedy, asking for information as to what the tablets contained, and they replied that the principal ingredients were aseptic pepsin (government test), malt diastase and other natural digestives, which digest food regardless of the condition of the stomach."

The root of the matter is this, the digestive elements contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, give the overworked stomach a chance to recuperate and the nerves and whole system receive the nourishment which can only come from food; stimulants and nerve tonics never give real strength; they give a fictitious strength, invariably followed by reaction. Every drop of blood, every nerve and tissue is manufactured from our daily food, and if you can insure its prompt action and complete digestion by the regular use of so good and wholesome a remedy as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, you will have no need of nerve tonics and sanitariums.

Although Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been in the market only a few years, yet probably every druggist in the United States, Canada and Great Britain now sells them, and considers them the most popular and successful of any preparation for stomach trouble.

Events and Comments.

The government report on the cotton crop is decidedly damaging for the corner. There has been continued improvement in condition, and, while late and still exposed to climatic dangers, the crop at present is much above the average in promise.

The Pacific Coast pack of salmon this year is 1,000,000 cases smaller than last year and 2,000,000 cases short of the output in 1901. A big shortage in Columbia River salmon, an almost total failure of Sockeyes in Puget Sound and in British Columbia, as well as a deficit of 500,000 cases in Alaskan salmon, are responsible for the small size of the pack.

Some of the mob who attempted to break into the jail at Danville, Ill., some time ago, have finally succeeded in getting there. Twelve of the fourteen citizens who were indicted have been found guilty of participation in the lynching riot and have been given an indeterminate sentence to prison. One of them is a woman. This is a wholly exceptional case of rigorous application of law to lynchers, and it cannot but have exceptionally salutary effect. It will take the heart right out of the lynching business in that place at least, and its influence will be felt in the country beyond.

Commander Robert E. Peary, United States Navy, the well-known Arctic explorer, will make another dash for the North Pole. Leave of absence for three years has been granted him, with the permission of the President. In his letter of application for leave of absence Commander Peary briefly outlines his plan of action. In a suitable ship, built in one of our best shipyards, strengthened to the maximum degree and fitted with American engines, "so that she may go North as an exponent of American skill and mechanical ability," Commander Peary hopes to start with his expedition about the 1st of Seventh month next.

Of the coming fall elections, two will command the attention of the whole country—the State contest in Ohio and the municipal struggle in New York. The Ohio campaign began last week. In New York Mayor Seth Low, Republican, will again head the fusion ticket. This was decided on at a conference of twelve powerful organizations which are opposed to Tammany. His leading associates on the ticket will be the two Democrats now holding the offices next in importance to the Mayor. The ticket decided on is as follows: For Mayor, Seth Low, of Manhattan; for president of the Board of Aldermen, Charles V. Fornes, of Manhattan; for Controller, Edward M. Grout, of Brooklyn.

Of the coming fall elections, two will command the attention of the whole country—the State contest in Ohio and the municipal struggle in New York. The Ohio campaign began last week. In New York the candidates are not yet determined upon absolutely. While Mayor Low will doubtless run again, the pending fusion conference will decide whether the fusion forces will split or adhere. Tammany's selection of a candidate will be determined by the outcome of the fusion conference. If the Low combination of two years ago drops to pieces, Tammany can elect almost any kind of a candidate; but if the fusionists hold fast, the Tammany candidate will be the most respectable and irreproachable man New York contains who will take honors at the hands of Tammany Hall.

Paul Lessar, the Russian Special Envoy, in a recent despatch, indorses the opening of the two ports, Moukden and Ta Tung Kao, and undertakes that three provinces in Manchuria will be restored to autonomy under China on the following conditions: That China undertakes that no portion of the territory shall be ceded to any other power; that no concession shall be granted to England, unless it is equally granted to Russia; that no increase shall be made in the present import tariff on goods entering Manchuria by railway; that in the event of an epidemic at Niu Chwang a Russian health officer shall be appointed to superintend it; that Russia shall retain her own military telegraph line along the railway; that the Russo-Chinese Bank agencies in Manchuria shall be guarded by Chinese soldiers. If the above conditions are agreed to, Niu Chwang and Moukden Province shall be evacuated on Tenth month 10th, and the remaining provinces in due course.

The conference of the Interparliamentary Union for International Arbitration convened in the lower House of the Reichsrath last week. Dr. Plener, the president, welcomed the delegates and visitors. He cited the recent visit of French Parliamentarians to London and the proposed return visit of British Parliamentarians to Paris as a striking instance of the growing tendencies toward arbitration. Dr. Von Koerber also welcomed the delegates, expressing his belief that the powers' love of peace would ultimately lead to the adoption of arbitration by all civilized States. Herr Pirquet, representing the Austrian group moved a resolution inviting all the signatories of The Hague Convention to incorporate arbitration provisions in all treaties, to conclude general treaties of arbitration, and in cases of dispute to invoke The Hague tribunal. M. Gobat, Switzerland, proposed a resolution that the offer of good offices should never be considered as an unfriendly act. The final action on these resolutions is not yet reported.

ART OF REST.

May Be Acquired and Used with Great Benefit.

Complete and restful poise of the body and mind is an art not easily gained.

Perhaps nothing brings one as much content, comfort, happiness and pleasure as those conditions of easy, restful, resourceful and well-balanced mind and body that make of work a pleasure and the daily life happy and peaceful.

The nervous housewife busy with a hundred duties and harassed by children; the business man, worried with the press of daily affairs, debts, etc., cannot enjoy the peace and restful repose and healthful nervous balance unless they know how.

There is a way. First and foremost, the stomach must be consulted. That means leaving off coffee absolutely, for the temporary stimulant and the resulting depression is a sure ruin to the nervous system, and the whole condition of health and happiness rests upon stomach, nerves and mind.

Start with the stomach; that is the keynote to the whole arch. Stop using things that break down its power, upset its nervous energy and prevent the proper digestion of the food and the consequent manufacture of healthful blood and nerves, brain and tissues.

When you quit coffee take on Postum Food Coffee. That is like stopping the payment of interest and starting on a career where you are loaning money and receiving interest. The good results are double. You stop poisoning the system with coffee and start building up the broken down nerve cells by powerful elements contained in Postum. These are pure food elements ably selected by experts for the purpose of supplying just the thing required by nature to perform this rebuilding.

These are solid substantial facts, and can be proven clearly to the satisfaction of anyone, by personal experience. Try the change yourself, and note how the old condition of shattered nerves and worried mind changes to that feeling of restful poise of a well-balanced nervous system.

The managing physician of a hygienic sanitarium in Indiana says that for five years in his practice he has always insisted upon the patients leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee with the most positive, well-defined results, and with satisfaction to the most confirmed coffee toper.

The doctor's name will be furnished by the Postum Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Look in each package for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

There are few more pleasant remembrances than those of college days. The class-room, the literary society, the Christian union fellowships, the pleasant acquaintances, the evening strolls and class-night songs, the absence of care, all come back to us in later years and greet us with gladness. There are no friendships like those of the campus. They abide forever. No matter where the tides of time may bear us or in what far-away seas our ships may hail each other, or in what havens we may drop anchor, we meet as friends, only to live again the sweet intoxication of the days gone by. There are no faces that have quite the same charm for us as the faces we met when we climbed Parnassus together. The old days have the right of way. And there are friendships with sacred scenes which live—the choirs in which we sang, the churches we attended, the meetings for prayer when our souls were knit together like those of Jonathan and David, the chapel hours when we sang God's songs and waited for some member of the faculty to read the Word and lead us all in supplicating prayer. These things abide, for they helped to fashion us, and will remain as part of our moral furnishing, "until Azrael passes his hand over our features and they are motionless forever."—"United Presbyterian."

"The world's battles are fought by men who were once raw recruits, and the difference between the raw recruit and the conquering hero lies in training. Wanting that there is no efficiency and no victory."

without cream are not appetizing, but good raw cream is not always easy to get. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream is superior to raw cream, with a delicious flavor and richness. Use it for general cooking purposes. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., proprietors.

FOR THE GOLF SEASON.

What makes a successful golf player? The answers might differ according to one's ideas, as the following case illustrates:

"How are you coming along at golf?"

"Oh, fine."

"Break any records as yet?"

"Well, I've broken 26 golf sticks, the front gate, the honeysuckle vine, the cat's back, and my right leg since I began playing, so I guess I'm coming strong."

TOUR TO THE PACIFIC COAST.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account Meeting National Bankers' Association.

On account of the meeting of the National Bankers' Association, to be held at San Francisco, Cal., October 20th to 23d, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company offers a personally-conducted tour to the Pacific Coast at remarkably low rates.

This tour will leave New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other points on the Pennsylvania Railroad east of Pittsburgh, Wednesday, October 14th, by special train of the highest grade Pullman equipment. A quick run westward to San Francisco will be made, via Chicago, Omaha, Cheyenne and Ogden.

Five days will be devoted to San Francisco, allowing ample opportunity to visit the near-by coast resorts. Returning, stops will be made at Salt Lake City, Colorado Springs, Denver and St. Louis. The party will reach New York on the evening of October 31st.

Round-trip rate, covering all expenses for eighteen days, except five days spent in San Francisco, $190.

Rates from Pittsburgh will be $5.00 less.

A ROYAL HEART.

*Ragged, uncomely, and old and gray,
A woman walked in a Northern town,
And through the crowd as she wound her way,
One saw her loiter and then stoop down,
Putting something away in her old torn gown.*

*"You are hiding a jewel!" the watcher said,
Ah, that was her heart!—had the truth been read,
"What have you stolen?" he asked again.
Then the dim eyes filled with a sudden pain,
And under the flickering light of the gas
She showed him her gleanings: "It's broken glass,"
She said; "I hae lifted up frae the street
To be oot o' the road o' the bairnies' feet."*

*Under the fluttering rags astir
'Twas a royal heart that beat!
Would that the world had more like her,
Smoothing the road for its bairnies' feet!*

CONSECRATION.

[The verses which appeared on our cover two weeks ago with the title, "Consecration," were attributed to Elizabeth Bennett, and they have often been printed in books and periodicals over her name. They were, however, written by our friend, Rebecca N. Taylor, and were published first in "Friends' Review" in the year 1882. We now give the poem in full, and are glad to credit the beautiful lines to their real author.—Ed.]

Tho' the rain may fall, and the wind be blowing,
And cold and chill is the wintry blast,
Tho' the cloudy sky is still clouidier growing,
And the dead leaves tell the summer is past;
My face I hold to the stormy heaven,
My heart is as calm as the summer sea;
Glad to receive what my God has given,
Whate'er it be.

When I feel the cold, I can say, "He sends it;"
And His wind blows blessings, I surely know;
For I've never a want, but He attends it,
And my heart beats warm, tho' the wind may blow.
The soft, sweet summer was warm and glowing;
Bright were the blossoms on every bough;
I trusted Him when the roses were blowing.
I trust Him now.

Small were my faith should it weakly falter,
Now that the roses have ceased to blow;
Frail were the trust that now should alter,
Doubting His love when the storm clouds grow.
If I trust Him once, I must trust Him ever;
And His way is best, tho' I stand or fall;
Through wind and storm He will leave me never.
He sends it all.

Why should my heart be faint and fearing?
Mighty He rules above the storm;
Even the wintry blast is cheering,
Showing His power to keep me warm.
Never a care on my heart is pressing;
Never a care can disturb my breast;
Everything that He sends is blessing,
For He knows best.

TWO SIDES OF THE PICTURE.

You rise from reading your morning newspaper and you probably say, "What an awful world this is!" The headlines have told of a dozen loveless homes whose secrets are paraded in divorce proceedings. There is a half score of sensational suicides and another half score of murders reported. A corruption scandal has been unearthed, and is told in large detail. A bank has been looted by its officials, or a bogus corporation has deceived the public. Scenes are reported from Bulgaria or Macedonia which make your blood run cold, for it seems as though you were reading of a region inhabited by demons who have lost all sense of human pity. You discover in a paragraph an inch long that a great and saintly man has died whose ninety years have been devoted to the slow task of raising human souls nearer to God, and on the next page you find in three columns the account of a poor wretch who was killed in a boxing match, and you learn all the disgusting details of his life and his so-called love affairs.

Well, you conclude that this is a mean old world, run by selfishness and filled with misery and wickedness. The way to purge your eyesight and to see things in truer balance is to ask what is really going on in the little world which you yourself know? First of all there is your own home, with its altar fires burning, and the whole house sweet with love. There is an unselfish woman in the house who is quietly making a little heaven out of one spot of earth. You reflect on the fact that there are hundreds of thousands of homes like yours, and your heart grows glad. Just across the road is a neighbor who has worked early and late to save money to send his two fine sturdy boys to college, and you feel a thrill over the heroism of his unheralded struggles. A little farther up the road is a home where a woman has for months been desperately sick, bearing pain and even facing death day by day. Nobody has ever heard a word of complaint from her. Her only thought is that her sickness is hard for her husband and little daughter, who has the work to do. You meditate on her courage and forgetfulness, and you feel a new sense of the grandeur of common life. In another house just within sight lives a family whose carriage almost never goes out from the gate without carrying something to refresh, or comfort or relieve some neighbor. One of the family has spent years to train herself so that she can give skillful help to anybody in the community who needs her careful nursing. You think of the lives that have found sunshine and love from this one home, and you smile as you thank God for human tenderness and love. A little beyond stands the building where a group of Christians meet twice each week. It is not a place to hear eloquence. The theology sounds old-fashioned, and the grammar might be improved, but this is the important fact—men and women meet God there, and they go home to live for Christ and to make His kingdom come. You contemplate this positive evidence of the living power of goodness and you say,

"What a beautiful world to live in this one of ours is." There is hardly a community in Christendom which does not furnish some solid facts like these to set over against the tale of scandal and desolation on which the newspapers feed us.

A GREAT DAY IN IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

OUR Personal letters from Iowa are full of interest, and there can be no question that the Yearly meeting which has just closed was one of the most inspiring and harmonious gatherings that has occurred during the forty-one years since the yearly meeting was "set up." The great event, as everybody felt, was the wiping out of the Penn College debt, which amounted to $30,000. It was a remarkable feature of this action that no great sum was contributed by anybody, which thus spurred others to give. It was a spontaneous and general movement, which hardly has a parallel.

Iowa Yearly Meeting has been characterized by its evangelistic zeal. Its workers have felt a burden for souls, and they have gone out through the towns and villages preaching the gospel and gathering the converts into local churches. In the same spirit it has boldly attacked the tremendous problem of evangelizing the island of Jamaica. Those who have borne the struggle and sacrifice at home and in the hot and dangerous island have had one yearning, to see men saved. It would not have seemed so extraordinary if in a wave of excitement these dear Friends had raised a great fund for Church extension or for missionary work.

But note their calm wisdom. They want to lay broad and deep the foundations of their work. Zeal and enthusiasm are indispensable qualities for the performance of any great undertakings in this world, but something more is needed, too. The work which Friends have to do in Iowa and Nebraska can be done only on the condition that the way is opened for the members of the church to put themselves at their best in mind and heart and will. A man who has been properly trained can do a hundred times the work which he would have done untrained, and with no more expenditure of physical effort. And then, too, work done in the right way lasts and counts, while work done on wrong lines tumbles to pieces and leaves no reward of effort. Iowa Yearly Meeting appreciates this fact and in a single day produces $30,000 to enable Penn College to do its work. What responsibilities those college officials must feel in the face of this trust and confidence! It is as though the yearly meeting said: "We expect great things of you. We give you our money and we look to you to prepare our sons and daughters for the work of righteousness and truth in the coming generation." It is a sacred task and a holy duty.

Kansas Yearly Meeting has its turn next. This is the year for it to complete the $50,000 endowment for the University at Wichita. The outcome will be watched with intense interest. Whittier and Penn have had their great days this year. Is there to be one more great day before the year closes?

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A MOVEMENT AGAINST OATHS.

BY THOMAS RAEBURN WHITE.

ARGUMENTS.

It is enough for Friends that the oath is wrong, but other minds require to be convinced of its uselessness and its vicious effects before they will consent to its abolition. Many take the position that there are still a number of ignorant people who fancy that some dreadful fate will befall them if they swear falsely, and hence are often deterred by an oath from telling a lie upon the witness-stand. This was the position assumed by the common law commissioners of England in a report not favoring the abolition of the oath, which they made in 1853, and is the only argument in its favor.

Before proceeding further it should be observed that the abolition of the oath would in no sense destroy the solemnity of the proceeding. The only change would be in administering on all occasions the same ceremonial which is now administered theoretically in some and practically in all the States at the option of the witness. It should be reiterated that the only change would be the omission in the ceremonial of all reference to the Deity. The argument, therefore, in favor of the continued retention of the oath must be directed solely to that one element, viz., the appeal to God because all other elements are retained by the affirmation.

It is a very common habit of witnesses when testifying to use such expression as "Being on my oath, I would not like to say" so and so, etc., or "I would not like to swear to that," etc. These expressions are pointed out by the upholders of the oath in confirmation of the assertion that it has a deterrent effect. These expressions, however, prove nothing unless it can be demonstrated that the witness using them is deterred by the particular element of the appeal to God, and not by the other elements present in the oath. It is quite as reasonable to suppose that a witness uses such expressions because since he is testifying upon a judicial occasion when the rights of others are involved, and when legal punishment is threatened for falsifying, unusual care must be observed. They are very common whether the witness be sworn or affirmed, and mean nothing except a real or feigned desire to be accurate upon a judicial occasion. The argument depends for its validity upon the further assumption that this class, if it exists, is compellable to so testify under oath, and hence can be frightened into truth telling. It is very doubtful whether either assumption be true. Suppose we have an individual who has been called as a witness upon a judicial occasion. If he tells the truth injury will result to him. He desires to lie. He weighs the chance of detection and punishment, and decides to take the risk. If he is religious he knows lying is sinful. He decides also that he will risk punishment by divine justice. Now is it probable that he will by virtue of having taken an oath which, as usually administered, is of little or no solemnity, relinquish his previous purpose and speak true? It is barely possible, although surely the probabilities are extremely remote.

But what about the second assumption? Can we require this man to take the oath and thus frighten the truth out of him by the fear of divine vengeance? Not at all. He does not have to take the oath. In nine States he will express his preference to affirm; no question can be asked; it is his right, although the reason he prefers to affirm may be that he desires to lie, unsworn. In the remaining States and Territories and in England he will in all human probability also be allowed to affirm without question. But suppose he is challenged. Suppose he is asked, "Why do you wish to affirm?" He replies, "I have conscientious scruples against swearing." This is a lie, but he has already made up his mind to lie when not bound by the tie of the oath. What, therefore, becomes of the security afforded by the oath? Nothing can be clearer than that it is utterly dissipated.

Two classes of witnesses are sworn:

- (1) Those who have no scruples against swearing, but who intend to and do tell the truth.
- (2) Those who have no scruples of any kind, either against swearing or lying.

Two classes are likewise affirmed:

- (1) Those who have conscientious scruples against swearing, and who will and do tell the truth.
- (2) Those who have no scruples against lying, but who declare they have against swearing because they are afraid to lie under oath (if this class really exists).

We see at once that the only persons who are compelled to swear are conscientious, upright persons who will not falsely allege scruples against swearing. All the bad witnesses either are quite indifferent as to whether they lie with or without oath, or else by exercising the right to choose, they lie without it. It has been suggested that very few, if any, witnesses would think of such a method of escaping the oath. The idea is that a witness will not appreciate the solemnity of the proceeding in his previous determination to lie, but when actually confronted with the fact that he has taken an oath he will weaken or break down completely. The "breaking down" in such cases may be due to one or all of various causes; (1) confusion under cross-examination, (2) fear of temporal punishment for perjury, (3) fear of divine punishment for lying, (4) fear of divine punishment for violating the ceremony of the oath. The first three are equally present in both oath and affirmation. The last is peculiar to the oath. Assuming for the sake of argument that the last element is the "straw that breaks the camel's back," and proves the undoing of the witness, the contention is that your witness will not, at least, in all cases, foresee this predicament in which he will find himself, and therefore will not adopt the simple expedient of taking the affirmation. In the first place will the witness who has determined to perjure himself blunder into taking a ceremony which he fears to violate? I doubt this very much. Committing perjury is not such a light matter. If one has determined to take all the risks he would surely have carefully thought out the whole thing in his mind, and if, braving detection and imprisonment, he is afraid to lie after hearing the crier say, "So help you God," surely he will ascertain if he does not already know, that he may avoid the oath by affirming. A method which must be less satisfactory has long been in use by mendacious witnesses—i.e., to kiss the thumb instead of the book. However, I am willing to assume that on some rare occasions, there may be a witness who neither fears man's nor God's punishment for lying, who omits either to kiss his thumb or to substitute the affirmation for the oath, and then may be frightened into disclosing the truth through the reiterated, "Remember you are on your oath" of counsel, and that a similar reminder, "Remember you are on your solemn affirmation," would have been wholly ineffective. I say I am willing for the sake of argument to assume this, although I do not believe it.

The oath, therefore, even on this assumption, is all but useless. Still it might be part of prudence to retain it, since it has become so integral a part of our judicial system, were there not certain positive arguments against it which seem of much greater importance than the very slight reason for retaining it. In the first place, if effective at all, it is avowedly but an imposition upon the ignorance or superstition of the witness. No intelligent man at this day pretends to believe that it is any greater sin to tell an untruth upon oath than upon affirmation. It is the lie, not the violation of the ceremony, that is wicked. Probably there are some ignorant persons who believe many other witch's tales, long since become the laughing stock of the world, but the administration of justice ought not to be rested upon such a foundation. Even if the ceremony were of any possible service, that would be no excuse for fostering and encouraging ignorant superstition.

It is particularly to be regretted that the competency of a child should ever be determined by his real or apparent belief as to what will happen to him if he tells a lie while under oath. Rev. F. Dennison Maurice, in a paper read before the Judicial Society of England, says, "A child is not taught by wise parents the meaning of kissing a book. It is taught not to lie; it is told that God is true and hates lies. If you substitute one kind of teaching for the other, when it comes into a court, you do not obtain fresh protection for its veracity; you lose the protection that you had. . . . If, on the other hand, the child has been taught to lie, if it comes primed with lies into the witness-box, your terrors will not frighten it. The expectation of the flogging which awaits it at home, if it stumbles into any wrong confessions, will be far more effectual than the apprehension of any more distant punishment which may be in reserve for it if it does not speak all that it knows." The test of a child's capacity ought never to be his understanding of the obligation of an oath; it should be merely his capacity to observe and relate, and whether he understands that he is required to speak the truth. He should never be required to take an oath—a species of profanity which we feel especially should never be forced upon an innocent child.

The second positive objection to the oath, as now used, is the discrimination made by requiring certain people to swear while others are permitted to affirm, this objection is re-enforced by the inconsistency above noted, viz.: That those only are compelled to swear who are entirely reliable, and therefore need no guarantee that they will speak the truth. Even in the Roman times a proposition to swear to a promise was deemed a reflection upon one's integrity.

The third objection is the hypocrisy of the oath. Certainly very few, if any, intelligent persons to-day believe in the efficacy of the imprecation, "So help me God," believe that by virtue of those words God's vengeance will be inflicted for false swearing. If, therefore, you subscribe to this form when you have no faith in its essential purpose, do you not commit an act of supreme folly? Are you not a hypocrite? It is easy to say you are, but subscribing to a necessary form which is the custom of the community, and that no hypocrisy is intended; but the solemn words of the oath involving, if they mean anything, the most awful consequences, ought never to be taken in such a perfunctory manner, and with so little appreciation of their import.

The fourth and last objection which I shall dwell upon is one which will have or should have great weight with those even who have no sympathy with purely ethical considerations. There is a large class of persons who not only have conscientious scruples against swearing; but also against administering oaths. This is particularly true of the Society of Friends.

As a matter of fact, Friends who maintain their standing in their Society are to-day excluded from holding the offices of Judge, Magistrate, or any other office as a part of the duties of which they may be called upon to administer oaths.

This is not true religious liberty. This is not consistent with the spirit of the Constitution of the United States or of the various States. If persons having conscientious scruples against administering oaths are capable of filling such offices creditably, and there can be no doubt of this, both themselves and the community are injured by a rule which prevents them from becoming candidates. If William Penn were alive to-day it would be impossible for him to hold the office of judge or magistrate. The time surely has come when affairs secular and affairs religious should be finally separated. When the duties of civil office should be definitely severed from all questions which could affect the religious belief of a possible incumbent.

PRESENT SITUATION.

Legislation having this for its purpose has already been agitated for many years in some States, and has been successful in some. In Maryland the imprecatory form of oath in judicial proceedings has been abolished by recent legislation, largely through the instrumentality of Benjamin P. Moore, a member of the Society of Friends, who has agitated the question for many years. The form of affirmation there prescribed by the act of 1898 is: "The affirmation of judicial and all other oaths to be taken or administered in this State, and not prescribed by the Constitution shall be as follows, 'In the presence of Almighty God I do solemnly promise or declare,' etc., and it shall be not lawful to add to any oath the words, 'So help me God,' or any imprecatory words whatever."

Similar legislation has been introduced in the legislature of North Carolina, and I understand in Delaware. This form, while a great improvement over the imprecatory form, is yet not entirely satisfactory to Friends, because it contains a reference to the Deity. The omission of all such reference would be a decided gain. Mexico has in this respect gone beyond any State in this country. The law there is, "The simple promise to tell the truth shall be substituted for the religious oath in its effects and penalties."

California made an abortive effort in 1901 to abolish all reference to the Deity in their form of oath, but the act was declared unconstitutional, for reasons which had nothing to do with its subject matter.

A paper similar to this, but more technical in its treatment of the subject, was read before the Pennsylvania Bar Association this summer. At that time a committee was appointed to draft a resolution, having for its purpose the abolition of the imprecatory oath, and the religious test of competency of witnesses, which will in time probably get before the General Assembly of Pennsylvania. It is hoped that all Pennsylvania Friends, and particularly those who are members of the bar, will do all in their power to create sentiment in favor of such action, and at the time when the bill is pending will lend their active support.

Philadelphia, Pa.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

The recent session of Iowa Yearly Meeting—the forty-first—will long be memorable in the history of Iowa Friends. Their keynote, “Go forward,” so well sounded by Thomas C. Brown, was remarkably realized. Friends evidently had come together after much prayer at home, and from the opening sessions of the yearly meeting there was evident an unusual spirit of harmony everywhere prevailing, and a depth of spiritual power seldom observed anywhere. The direct power of God was clearly manifest in pouring upon Iowa Yearly Meeting the spirit of devotion and of giving. The voluntary offerings made during the week aggregate nearly $33,000.

The business was despatched with promptness and with general satisfaction under the direction of Stephen M. Hadley, presiding clerk; Mary H. Lewis, recording clerk; Richard Newby, reading clerk, and John Fry, announcing clerk. The committee work was better distributed than heretofore, one person rarely serving upon more than a single committee.

Seven yearly meetings were represented by visiting ministers and workers, as follows: Thomas C. Brown, Zeno H. Doan, Nereus M. Hodgkin, Western; Willis Hotchkiss, William P. Pinkham, William G. Hubbard, Deborah Maris, Abarilla Cowgill, Ohio; Nathan and Esther G. Frame, Wilmington; President H. Edwin McGrew, Oregon; President L. Lyndon Hobbs, North Carolina; J. Farland Randolph and wife, Emma Randolph, Millie M. Lawhead, Chas. D. W. Hiatt, Isom Jackson, Indiana; Mary F. Sibbitt, James L. Welch, Kansas.

The presence of these visiting Friends and the epistles from the several yearly meetings called forth cordial expressions and greetings from the meeting. Numerous references were made to the Five Years Meeting in its great helpfulness in binding the meetings more closely together, and in promoting the interests and strengthening the work of American Friends.

At the session on Bible Schools stirring addresses were made by Charles W. Sweet, Zeno H. Doan and others. The reports show an enrollment of 5,276 scholars, with an average attendance for the year of 3,328. The funds raised for school purposes amounts to $1,740; for missionary purposes, $757. Nineteen mission Bible schools have been kept up. The Cradle Roll and the Home Department are reported to be helpful by the several schools which have tried them.

William Jasper Hadley, general superintendent of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Work gave a very encouraging report. This year more help than before has been given to the smaller meetings, especially in the pioneer fields of this yearly meeting—in Wisconsin, Dakota, Nebraska and Colorado. Eighteen missions are reported as kept up by pastors and fifteen by members. Twenty-three males and eighteen females are reported as giving evidence of a call to the ministry. The Church Extension work was repeatedly referred to during different sessions, as an interest that should claim increased attention the coming year—a most natural result from the great and growing interest in foreign mission work. A collection of about $400 was taken to aid in the Evangelistic and Church Extension work the coming year. William Jasper Hadley was continued as general superintendent; J. M. Lemmon, president; L. Maria Deane, secretary, and Hiram Hammond, treasurer.

The Christian Endeavorers held several important business meetings. They decided to keep a superintendent and organizer in the field at least a part of the year. John D. Mills was chosen for this work. He is also the field secretary of the Iowa Mission Board. Richard Newby is president, and Alice Cook, of Oskaloosa, is secretary-treasurer. The union decided to assume the support of the Glen Haven station in Jamaica—three workers, Albert and Ola Courtney and Alice Kennedy—at an expense of $900; also to raise at least $300 for home expenses. “Tent Endeavor,” maintained as headquarters by the Oskaloosa Society, proved a decided success.

At the public Christian Endeavor meeting greetings were brought from different yearly meetings and mission fields represented. Elma Mather, recently returned from a visit in Cuba, gave an account of the work there. Fifty Juniors and Intermediates sang a hymn and recited Psalm 98, first eight verses. Willis Hotchkiss gave a powerful and searching missionary address. The meeting was moved as never before in Iowa Yearly Meeting. No one present will ever forget the hour. In the quiet hush, and under the overshadowing spirit, a collection was taken, amounting to over $200, and then, under the power of God's spirit, all over the house, and in quick succession, offerings were announced (the quiet hush continuing), some for Jamaica, some for Africa, until over $900 was reached. A season of consecration followed, when many young men and young women came forward, and in the same spirit cried in quiet unto God and gave themselves. Other offerings were given, amounting in all to about $950—about $350 for Africa and $600 part for the Christian Endeavor work and part for the general work in Jamaica.

Earlier the same evening about 150 Friends enjoyed an “Educational Tea” at the college. President Rosenberger presided, and short addresses were given by Willis Hotchkiss, W. Jasper Hadley, O. J. Marshall, James Bruff, President H. E. McGrew and President L. L. Hobbs.

At the Peace Meeting on Sixth-day encouraging reference was made to what Friends (with others) have accomplished the past year. Helpful addresses were made by William G. Hubbard and John F. Hanson.

The meeting directed a message of love and sympathy to be sent to Rufus M. Jones, in the recent loss of his son.

Late in the afternoon of Sixth-day the Educational session was introduced by the reading of the reports from the academies, from Central City College and from Penn College. Short addresses followed by President McGrew, Thomas C. Brown, President Hobbs and President Rosenberger. While the canvass for the debt had been in progress for a few months and a few thousand dollars had been subscribed, the thought of taking up a subscription in the face of the yearly meeting was born the morning of Educational Day. The debt amounted to $30,000. Charles W. Sweet conducted the raising of funds. One Friend gave $3,000, one $1,500, nine $1,000 each, and twelve gave $500 each. At 6 p.m., with $25,400 raised, a recess was taken till 7.30. Faith and works were combined. A prayer and praise service opened the adjourned session of the yearly meeting, while certain members of the Board, students and others, were raising $1,300 in the city and by telephone outside the city. Nearly $2,000 of the amount subscribed was conditioned on the entire debt being provided for on that day. Everywhere there prevailed a splendid spirit of giving. Almost every one present gave something. Before 10 p.m. the subscription reached $30,000, and the meeting closed in the midst of great rejoicing and thanksgiving to God. All felt that the college is relieved of a great burden, and that the managers can now direct their efforts in the direction of further equipment, endowment and buildings, avoiding, if possible, any indebtedness in the future.

President Hobbs presented the plan of raising the proposed Harriet Green Fund in the establishment of a Biblical Chair at Guilford College. Friends expressed much interest in the matter, many referring to what American Friends owe to North Carolina Yearly Meeting; and notwithstanding the large giving in other lines this year, $140 was raised for this fund. The yearly meeting also appointed a Friend in each quarterly meeting to present this interest in their home meetings.

Unusual interest centered in the mission session this year. The interest was intensified by the recent disastrous hurricane in Jamaica, destroying six mission buildings, and considerably damaging all the others. The bananas and cocoanut and other valuable trees were almost a total loss; also the houses of the natives are almost all destroyed. Notwithstanding the help already given, large gifts are needed at once to meet the necessary expenses of giving relief, of repairing and rebuilding the properties, and replanting the banana fields and cocoanut orchards. Large plantings also need to be made at once upon the newly-acquired lands of the mission.

The reports show 569 members in the three monthly meetings; 500 scholars in the day schools; 1,040 enrolled in the Sabbath Schools, and nearly 200, including Juniors, in the Christian Endeavor societies. Before the storm in the island the various stations had raised in their own support this year, including the government grants, and tuitions in Happy Grove School, and other donations in the island, the sum of $1,950.

The treasurer's report (not including this fund raised in the island, but including a bequest of $830), shows a total of over $8,600, including $500 for Cuba and Africa. (Hereafter, in accordance with a provision of discipline, all missionary money raised within Iowa Yearly Meeting for any mission field is to be sent through the missionary treasurer of the yearly meeting, H. D. Lane, Oskaloosa, Iowa.)

One of the most impressive moments in the entire yearly meeting was when Gilbert Farr, in beginning his missionary address, alluded to the death of Captain Baker's wife, and proposed that the yearly meeting send a message of sympathy to him and his family. The meeting was deeply moved. Friends who had known her paid touching tributes to her memory. With the deepest sympathy on the part of the meeting, the message was directed to be sent.

H. E. McGrew, Thomas C. Brown and William Jasper Hadley followed with stirring missionary addresses. Jamaica's need is the opportunity for Friends. The latest reports from the island show great material needs and a great spiritual awakening. Scores are being saved, and many are becoming interested in spiritual things. Our workers in helping the people in their material needs are winning their hearts and lives for the Lord. The Master still has power over the storm. The spiritual harvest is a most blessed one. The funds raised at this session amounted to over $900, two young women pledging $100 each, and one young pastor assuming $200 for her meeting.

An enthusiastic temperance meeting was held Seventh-day afternoon, addressed by Mary F. Sibbitt and John F. Hanson. At this meeting another collection was taken (the last offering during this yearly meeting, and the largest probably even taken in Iowa Yearly Meeting for this purpose), amounting to more than $250.

The blessings poured out upon the yearly meeting in giving were well reflected also in the various devotional meetings of the yearly meeting. Large meetings were held on the Sabbath in the yearly meeting house, on the grounds, with the city churches also opened to Friends.

REBECCA THOMAS.

Rebecca Thomas, the daughter of Jeremiah and May Fulgham Corbit, was born in Wayne County, North Carolina, Seventh month 1st, 1823. She was brought by her parents and settled in Randolph County, Indiana, when about four years of age. Here she had such opportunities for an education as the neighborhood of Arba afforded at that time, which she improved as circumstances would permit. She was received by request into membership with the Society of Friends when about fifteen years of age.

Her love for the Church was such that quite a number of times she walked to New Garden Monthly Meeting, seven miles away.

She was united in marriage with Francis W. Thomas more than sixty years ago. To them were born five children, who, with one exception, survive their mother. She was a faithful wife, a loving mother, a lover of hospitality, and unwavering in her faith in the divine record. Having received the forgiveness of sin and a new life, she was ever ready to make any earthly sacrifice to help her husband to preach the gospel of life and salvation to lost men.

Modest in her claims as to her own goodness, she chose rather to prove her faith by her works. Resting in that faith she said many times during the last few weeks of her life, "I want to go home," and "I will soon be there, for I am going to die." This may truly be said of her, "Faithful unto death." She departed this life at their home near Dunreith, Indiana, Ninth month 12th, 1903, aged 80 years, 2 months and 12 days.

FOURTH QUARTER.

LESSON I.

TENTH MONTH 4, 1903.

DAVID BRINGS UP THE ARK.

2 Samuel 6: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed are they that dwell in thy house. Psalm 84: 4.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 28.—Bringing up the ark. 2 Sam. 6: 1-12.

Third-day, Ninth mo. 29.—The ark described. Ex. 25: 10-22.

Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 30.—Captured by the enemy: 1 Sam. 4: 1-11.

Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 1.—Obedience needful. 1 Chron. 15: 1-3; 11-16.

Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 2.—Psalm of Praise. 1 Chron. 16: 7-22.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 3.—Psalm continued. 1 Chron. 16: 23-36.

First-day, Tenth mo. 4.—Acceptable worship. Heb. 12: 18-29.

Intervening Events.—Ishbosheth or Ishbach, the surviving son of Saul, supported by Abner, became king over the northern part of Israel while David ruled over the south. Naturally there was conflict between the two kingdoms. David, however, was the gainer. Ishbosheth quarrels with Abner, who agrees to hand over the kingdom to David. Joab kills Abner in revenge (2 Sam. 3: 27, 30), and Ishbosheth was murdered by two assassins (4: 5-12), who expected reward from David. He, however, had them put to death. "Then came all the tribes of Israel to David to Hebron," and David was anointed king over all Israel. "David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years. In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months; and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah." (2 Sam. 5: 4, 5.)

Place.—Since the return of the ark from Philistia it has been at Kirjath-jearim, about 11 miles west of Jerusalem. The account will be found in 1 Sam. 4: 1-11; 6: 21 to 7: 2.

Time.—According to the old chronology, B.C. 1042; according to the newer, 1004, or about 7 years after David became king over all Israel. David was now about 44. He was strong enough to have a settled capital, and having captured Jerusalem, the stronghold of the Jebusites (2 Sam. 5: 7-9), he made it the political and religious capital of Israel.

The "Ark of the Covenant" was the most ancient and at the same time the most sacred of all the religious symbols of Israel. It was a chest of acacia wood 3 feet 9 inches long, and 2 feet 3 inches high and wide. It was covered within and without with gold. The top or lid was solid gold and was called the mercy seat; on it were the winged figures called the cherubim. Inside the ark were the tables of stone on which were the Ten Commandments. According to Hebrews (9: 4) there were also Aaron's rod that budded, and a pot of manna. The ark was a visible expression of the Divine Presence in Israel; a place where Jehovah revealed His will; the tables were a reminder of the Holy Law, while the Mercy Seat was an emblem of the forgiveness of God. Thus it was for the Israelite a central point of religious worship. It is easy to see how important it was for David that the ark should abide at Jerusalem, and what would be the influence of its presence there upon the people. That the ark should have been so neglected during the reign of Saul shows into how low a condition religious life had fallen.

1. "Again." That is probably after the great ceremony attending David's coronation. It did not follow very soon, however.

2. Ba-a-le of Judah is the same as Kirjath-jearim (1 Chron. 13: 6) and means forest city. "The ark of God which is called by the Name, even the name of the Lord of Hosts that sitteth upon the cherubim." Revised Version.

3. "New cart." So there would be no possibility of any defilement, or that it should have been used for any other purpose. "Abinadab." His son had been placed in charge of the ark seventy years before (1 Sam. 7: 1). "Gibeah." Better, "the hill." "Sons." A general term for descendants.

5. "Played." The word literally means to dance to music. It was a kind of religious exaltation.

6. "Threshing floor of Nachon." It is not known where this was. "Put forth his hand." This was a most natural thing to do, and apparently was done with no evil intentions.

7. "Anger of the Lord." The indignation of Jehovah. The impression conveyed by the text is that Uzzah is some way was too familiar. Undoubtedly the ark had been lifted into the cart and touched in so doing; but in Uzzah's case there appears to have been something more than the mere touch, for Uzzah had been long familiar with the ark.

8. "David was displeased," etc. It put a stop to his plans. "Made a breach." "Had broken forth upon Uzzah." Revised Version. "Perez-uzzah." "The breaking of Uzzah."

9. David now fears to have the ark come to Jerusalem. He does not understand the incident.

10. "Obed-edom the Gittite." A Levite belonging to the family of the Korachites (1 Chron. 26: 1, 4-8; Num. 16: 1). The exact place of his house is not known.

11. This verse is intended to show that a right appreciation of the ark and what it signified would bring great blessing. The trouble in the former case came from some carelessness or disobedience or wrongdoing.

12. David hearing of the blessing which had come to Obed-edom and his household, was reassured, and made another attempt to bring the ark to Jerusalem. This time he was successful. Some think that the twenty-fourth Psalm was written for this occasion.

The remaining verses of the chapter should be read, particularly verse 17, which shows that David had a tabernacle ready for the reception of the ark.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. It is dangerous to trifle with holy things.
2. No greater blessing can come upon a household than the felt presence of the Holy Spirit.

TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH FOURTH.

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE; WHAT ABRAHAM TEACHES US.

Gen. 12: 1-8; Heb. 7: 1-10; Rom. 4: 1-9.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 28.—A lesson in generosity. Gen. 13: 10-12.
Third-day, Ninth mo. 29.—A lesson in obedience. Gen. 13: 14-18.
Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 30.—A lesson in chivalry. Gen. 14: 10-16.
Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 1.—A lesson in hospitality. Gen. 18: 1-8.
Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 2.—A lesson in prayer. Gen. 18: 23-33.
Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 3.—A lesson in faith. Gal. 3: 1-9.

"The father of all them that believe" is the high title conferred upon Abraham by Paul, to whom the lesson from the patriarch was that it is by the obedience of faith and not by works of righteousness that we do that we come into fellowship with the righteous Lord. Spiritual kinship is recognizable, and the persecutor who "straightway was not disobedient" to his new light saw his real paternity, not in a Pharaonic progenitor according to the flesh, but in that man who went forth when he was called, "not knowing whither he went."

We sing such hymns as "He leadeth me" and "I'll go where You want me to go," and yet how few of us get outside the circle of possessions of our forefathers. We hold them fast and prize them because they were theirs, while we are ourselves called not merely to be worthy offspring of a forthgoing, achieving ancestral line, but also to go out and receive a kingdom of our own that we may transmit an enlarged inheritance to those who shall come after us. Can we imagine Abraham praying God to bless and establish him in Ur of the Chaldees? Faith ventures, and it obeys though the looked-for city may never be realized this side the boundaries that divide the transitory from the abiding.

Abraham did more than launch on an unknown sea; he held the prow steadily away from the old harbor. If he had been mindful of that country from which he went, opportunity to return was not wanting (Heb. 11: 15); but his choice was a continuing one. When Eleazer suggested that Isaac might have to go back to the old home if Abraham's wish for a daughter of his own people as his son's wife was to be fulfilled, the old choice was still the new one: "Beware that thou bring not my son thither again." He would run no risks of old associations and habits from which he and his had been delivered, no matter how plausibly the question might be put. "Be ye separate" means not only to become but to remain.

We may find in Abraham's life concrete illustrations of divers graces that to-day we call Christian, but nothing is more prominent and nothing more inclusive than his staunch faith and persistent obedience: not that there were no lapses, for there were grievous ones, but in the midst of them all, this abiding loyalty and high resolve kept the citadel; and after every assault came the victorious sally that beat back the powers of the enemy. "This is the victory that hath overcome the world—our faith."

TOKIO WORK.

Letters received from Japan during the summer give us hopeful reports of the progress of the work on the buildings, which has advanced beyond what was expected. The boarding house was under roof, and one coat of plastering was on. The lower floors were ready for the mats. This building, which will be the home of the girls residing at the school, is most fittingly given as a memorial to Abby A. Longstreth, who was actively associated with the Japanese Mission from its start in 1885 to the time of her death in Twelfth month, 1902. The frame work of the teachers' residence was up, and the carpenters were putting in braces and bolts. The school house was up to the eaves. Our teachers were planning some exercises when the building was opened, and expressed the wish that Friends here who have generously made this building possible through their contributions, could share in this opportunity. According to Japanese custom, when all goes well with a building, the carpenter had presented them with a goose.

The marriage of Yamamoto San had taken place, and it was a quiet and suitable occasion. Gilbert and Minnie P. Bowles were glad of the opportunity to open their house for the reception of the guests, and all rejoiced in the feeling that these united lives would be given to direct Christian work. Owing to the crowded quarters the school was occupying, all concerned had decided it would be best to close it on the 26th of Sixth month, two weeks earlier than usual.

Our friends write of the encouragement they feel in finding that the thoughts of many who are not Christians are being turned to Christ, and we rejoice with them, believing that the Spirit will open the things of God to those who seek Him by the way.

R. W. C.

And this is the mission of the Church—not civilization, but salvation—not better laws, purer legislation, social elevation, human equality and liberty, but first the kingdom of God and His righteousness; regenerated hearts, and all other things will follow.—A. E. Kittredge.

NOTICE.

To Attenders of Kansas Yearly Meeting:

On behalf of the Committee on Entertainment for Kansas Yearly Meeting, which will be held in Wichita next month, I wish to announce that instead of meeting the trains, as formerly, it has been thought best to give some directions in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and let those who attend the yearly meeting make use of the street cars to transfer them to the university where the sessions will be held. All the depots are situated on Douglas Avenue, the principal street of the city, and street cars pass all depots at intervals of 10 to 15 minutes. By procuring one transfer visitors can go from either the Santa Fe, Rock Island or Frisco depots to the university, and no transfer is necessary in going from the Missouri Pacific depot to that point. Every motorman knows where the university is located, and there is therefore no need for anyone to make any mistake in reaching the university.

Once arrived at the university, the committee will be ready to meet all and assign them to some place where they may find entertainment for the week.

For the Committee,
O. C. EMERY.

To Attenders of Indiana Yearly Meeting:

Indiana Yearly Meeting is to be held at Marion, Ind., this year, beginning Ninth month 30th. A large boarding tent will be erected on the grounds, at which everybody who desires it can get good meals at very reasonable rates. Also a check room, in which all baggage and lunch boxes can be taken care of, and tables on which lunch can be eaten by all who desire to bring lunch. The Committee on Entertainment request that all who expect to attend the yearly meeting and wish entertainment will drop a postal card to William E. Darter, corner Sixteenth and Boots Streets, stating their wishes, whether board and lodging, or only beds, are wanted. Very truly,
ELWOOD SCOTT.

Arrangements have been made with the Central Passenger Association for reduced rates for those wishing to attend Indiana Yearly Meeting, commencing Ninth Month 30th. Tickets will be on sale Ninth month 28th, 29th and 30th at the rate of one fare for the round trip, tickets good returning until Tenth month 10th. These tickets will be on sale at all points on different roads within the limits of Indiana Yearly Meeting. All necessary information can be procured from the local agent at the different points. The yearly meeting will be held this year at Marion.
B. JOHNSON,
R. R. Secretary, Indiana Yearly Meeting.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

We have passed through a never-to-be-forgotten experience. A cyclone, estimated to be 400 miles in diameter, swept over our island, reducing it from agricultural prosperity and tropical beauty to a wilderness and nakedness.

We have had a comparatively small loss of life, considering the wide area devastated and the danger from falling buildings and cocoanut trees.

The computation of lives lost reaches 90. There are those that are dying from injuries and exposure. One such is in our mission home now.

She is the only one of our denomination whose life is likely to be sacrificed as a result of the storm.

Our buildings have suffered seriously. Our large Seaside Chapel is entirely destroyed. The foundations are not much injured. The new addition, which we were building of concrete, is intact, but the work is not very far advanced.

We now hold meetings and day school in a shelter, the roof of which is made of cocoanut boughs.

The mission home and our girls' school are spared, but all outbuildings are badly broken, and the mission home and girls' school, though standing, will require about one hundred and fifty dollars of repairs.

The East Indian Tabernacle was undergoing a remodeling, but it suffered the fate of thousands of other chapels and buildings. Our Cedar Hurst Mission lost two chapels, but it was spared its central chapel, which is a very great blessing.

The people are reaping what they find left in their fields. It will only be a short time when it will be gone, and then we must face the food problem.

We hope we may be able to give people work on rebuilding our destroyed buildings, and as we purpose rebuilding Seaside Chapel of stone—concrete—if we have the means to push the work, we can take care of all that may be hungry in this district.

Our Seaside monthly meeting has about one hundred and fifty dollars in its treasury, and I have already begun the gathering of materials.

One hundred and fifty dollars will not go far, as the estimate puts the cost of rebuilding at about $3,000.

It would have taken a wind of much less violence to destroy the old Seaside Chapel, as the position is so exposed and the chapel was so badly constructed that it had a bad list.

The government is doing its best to institute relief works and to provide homes for the homeless. Relief Committees have been organized in the parishes that have suffered, and they are carefully dispensing the little that they have at their command.

I am on two of these Relief Committees. We realize our greatest difficulty is not the present, but that that will come a few weeks from now. Some of our leading planters fear that the unruly will plunder and be violent.

I feel assured that we shall see nothing of that kind in our mission districts. God has favored us until our people are brought into a gentle and loving state. We have carefully represented this calamity as of God's providing, and we have followed it up with special evangelistic effort, until about 140 people, negroes and East Indians, have bowed in professed surrender to God's claims upon their lives and have sought forgiveness. Of this number there are twenty-three couples, who, living in unholy alliance, have signed banns papers to marry between this and Twelfth month 12th.

There seems to be an humble acquiescence to God's will, and a disposition to make the best of it. I look for no violence here.

If I can give a large number of people three or four months' work I have no fear of starvation, as the shops will keep canned goods, flour and salt fish.

We shall be very thankful for any contributions that might come through THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and if you feel like publishing the foregoing or putting in a note of our need you will confer a great favor upon our people.

With kind regards and best wishes,

Your brother,

ARTHUR H. SWIFT.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Many Friends whose ancestors went from the Carolinas to the West when the great exodus took place on account of slavery, have a tendency to go back to the "old Southern home," even though it be for the first time. To such there are many interesting facts, handed down to the present generation; hardly a home but has its legends, and Carolina will ever be to us the "dear old Carolina" we were told about in childhood. North Carolina Friends gave much to the West in the formation of new States and meetings, and there are many facts surrounding the history of Friends in the South of interest to all lovers of history. There are few Northern people, however, that understand the real situation of Friends in the South.

That it pays to stand for principles of truth is well illustrated here. Friends suffered for righteousness' sake a century ago, but conditions have changed much. The prospect for the growth of Friends in North Carolina is one of the most hopeful fields in all the country. Friends have the confidence of the people, and there seems to be no limit to opportunities of growth. In many places they are wanting new meetings, and asking for Friends to come. It is interesting to note the respect shown to Friends by outsiders in different places. At High Point, where the yearly meeting was held, the other denominations adjourned their services for the week, in order to attend the Friends' meetings. In the vast crowds that came, even on the Sabbath, there seemed little desire for conversation, but all seemed anxious to hear. It was almost pathetic to notice the stillness and eagerness with which the people listened to the Gospel. There seemed to be much hunger of soul, while the order on the grounds was exceptionally good.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting this year was said to be one of the most harmonious in its history; the work in it better organized, and there is a prospect of larger results the coming year.

The yearly meeting, true to the Quaker idea, that being a woman should not hinder one from any special portion in the Church, appointed Mary C. Woody as superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension Work. Albert Peele had done faithful service for several years.

Josiah Nicholson and Priscilla B. Hackney were the assistant clerks in the meeting. Priscilla B. Hackney will continue her services as matron at Guilford College. All visitors interested in Friends' work in North Carolina turn with interest to Guilford. We are glad to note the beauty of the grounds, the seemingly healthful location, and to find that the outlook is very encouraging for the present year.

With gratitude to my Heavenly Father for the privilege of attending the yearly meeting sessions and meeting with the Friends in this State in different places, and with prayers that God will make them able to occupy the great fields here that He has given them, I am, very sincerely,

ANNA MAY PEMBERTON.

Louisa Bridgers is located at Nahunta Meeting, N. C.

David E. Sampson was appointed superintendent of temperance work of North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

Friends will kindly notice that the address of Arthur Swift is Hector's River P. O., Jamaica, West Indies.

John Thompson, 88 years of age, sits at the head of Snow Camp Meeting, N. C., and is a faithful attender.

The records of North Carolina Yearly Meeting are stored in a vault, built for the purpose, at Guilford College.

Etta H. Johnston, of Winthrop Center, Me., has accepted the position of teacher at the Blue Ridge Mission, N. C.

William Cox, of Bethany Meeting, N. C., lost his eyesight twelve years ago, but is yet a cheerful and faithful worker.

Humelius Hockett has gone three and one-half miles over rough roads to Center Meeting, N. C., all his life, which is 82 years.

John S. More preaches at Woodland, New Hope and Rhoads Meetings, in Contentnea Quarter, N. C. Rhoads is a new meeting.

William Card, of West Newton, and Seth Stafford, of Greensboro, Ind., were present at a recent meeting in Raysville, Ind., and had good service.

John M. Watson is visiting meetings and families in the limits of North Carolina Yearly Meeting. He seems especially drawn to the families and God is blessing his work.

The meeting at West Milton, Ohio, is united in asking E. C. Stanley to remain with them another year. The statistical reports for the past year show that good work has been done.

John W. Woody, of Guilford, N. C., has felt led to make much effort in behalf of the education and elevation of the colored people of the South, a work in which all Friends should feel an interest. He will continue his work at the Slater School the coming year.

The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight for North Carolina Yearly Meeting has a committee appointed to look after the development of the gifts of the membership in the different places.

Alfred Cook, after visiting meetings in California, Neb., and Iowa, has returned to England. He took passage on the Majestic the 16th inst. His address is now Stapen Hill, Goddard's Avenue, London, England.

Our deep sympathy goes out to our venerable friend, Francis W. Thomas, of Dunreith, Ind., who has just been left alone by the death of his faithful life companion, an account of whose life is given in another column.

Thomas Anderson and Thomas Andrew, with the help of other workers, have been conducting a series of meetings in Rockey River Meeting, in Western Quarter, N. C. There was a large attendance and good work done.

Marlboro Quarterly Meeting, N. C., was held the 21st and 23d ult. John Watson, Irena Hunnicutt, Thomas Newlin and Anna May Pemberton were present at one or more of the services. It was a time of real blessing and spiritual uplift. Wm. Low in his 89th year rode twelve miles over rough roads to be at the services.

Oscar Moon, who has been located at Ludlow, Ind., was very acceptably present with Friends at Knightstown, Ind., the 6th inst. He will locate permanently in the meeting at Knights-town, after Tenth month 1st. The Friends at Ludlow spent a pleasant evening with Oscar Moon and wife the 12th instant, leaving behind many tokens of appreciation and love.

Earlham College opened Ninth month 14th with a much increased attendance over previous years. The dormitories are overflowing, and the attendance of day students is very gratifying. The number of students enrolled with Prof. Russell in the Department of Biblical Instruction is much larger than ever before. The Christian Associations at once began an active campaign, with encouraging results.

We are very sorry to learn that a heavy scourge of yellow fever is prevailing at Victoria, Mexico. Irving Kelsey and family were prevented by illness from leaving the city before quarantine was established, and now they are afflicted with the fever. The last letter received from Victoria, dated the 9th inst., states that their daughter, Anita, is very ill. There have been many deaths in the city, and the situation is serious.

The camp meeting, held two miles west of Lynn, Ind., from the 28th ult. to the 6th inst., was truly an interesting meeting, with a large attendance. The principal speakers were Harry Hayes and E. E. Williams. Fully two hundred were definitely blessed; also Millie Lowhead conducted a children's meeting each day, in which many children were led to accept Christ as their Saviour. C. E. Pruly and wife were much blessed in their song service.

The cost of the new meeting house at High Point, N. C., when completed, is estimated at $7,500. The building is of Mt. Airy granite. Eli Reece is in his second year there. The meeting is growing. The orphan children, of which there are about forty at present in the home under control of the yearly meeting, attend First-day School and meeting at Springfield Friends' Meeting, near High Point, N. C. Rufus King, and Abigail Blair are ministers there.

A large public reception was tendered Morton C. Pearson and family, by the Indianapolis Meeting, at their meeting house on Ninth month 14th. The house was tastefully arranged and decorated for the occasion. Fully 300 of the friends were present, and a most delightful evening was enjoyed by all. Morton C. Pearson enters upon his work with the hearty co-operation of the meeting, and the future seems full of promise. Plans are already being made for aggressive work in this fruitful field.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, was held the 11th to 13th inst. The visiting ministers were Benjamin J. Mills, S. Rufina White, Charles S. Winslow and J. P. Hunt. Word came to the meeting of the death of the wife of Francis W. Thomas, and a message of love and sympathy was sent to the stricken family. Credentials were given to Lydia Palmer for service in North Carolina; to Minnie Bassett, Baltimore; and to Lizzie Randolph and husband, Iowa. The annual reports of church work were full and satisfactory. Emma Hosier and Lindley Johnson were appointed clerks.

Yonge Street Quarterly Meeting, Canada, was held at Heathcote on the 12th and 13th inst. It was fairly well attended, considering the distance some of the members had to come, that being about one hundred and twenty miles. Charles Walker, a minister, and his wife, an elder, from Pelham Quarterly Meeting, were present; also the home ministers. The Gospel was preached effectively by Robert H. Rogers, the yearly meeting superintendent of evangelistic work in our yearly meeting; Charles Walker, Sarah A. M. Dale, Benjamin Moore, John H. Rogers and others.

Ada Lee, Mary C. Woody and Albert Peele have been engaged in a series of meetings at Germanton, N. C. There was a large number of conversions—some very remarkable cases. This is a neglected locality, and Friends have been asked to come in and occupy the territory. There is a prospect of a meeting house being erected. Ada Lee has since gone to McAdenville for a series of meetings, and John and Mary C. Woody are conducting a series of Bible institutes in different places, lasting a few days. By this means many are instructed that could not go away for Bible study.

We print the following program not only as an item of news, but as an excellent model for quarterly meetings to follow:

From "The London Friend" we learn that our friends Charles and May Replogle were shipwrecked in the Lofoten Islands, off the coast of Norway, early last month. We quote: "We were plowing along nicely at the rate of fifteen or sixteen knots an hour. All bade fair for a pleasant night, and we were just getting comfortably settled, when there was a terrific noise, a grating and a tearing and a heave of the steamer, and she slowly settled over on her side. She had struck a sunken reef a few miles north of Brono, and was filling. The noise of the tearing of the iron off the bottom of the ship, as heard from the sleeping compartments, can only be realized by experience. But the shock was terrific. Such disorder and confusion, as obtained for some time is past expression. My wife's bed being on the port side just in front of her room door; she was thrown violently through the door into the hall. As I was on the starboard side, I did not realize how much we were listed until I arose, notwithstanding the bottles, pitchers, and shoes, which had come suddenly across the saloon, piling up against my bed, in company with a man who had brought with him a loose table; however, he was not much hurt. Every one as quickly as possible struggled to get on deck, which was no easy task with the deck on an incline of 75 degrees. Such a panic there was—men, women and children pulling and struggling with each other, trying to be first on deck. Fashions and styles were not considered now. The drinker of the evening was on his knees praying to God, so intent in prayer that he did not notice he was being tramped on by the frenzied crowd. Valuables were forsaken, and a rush made for safety. I at last found my wife on the upper deck, and John Lundquist, our interpreter, suddenly appeared on the hurricane deck, where he was helping to get the boats launched. In hearing of that frightened crowd of passengers, he called out, 'Aren't you glad you did your praying first?' We answered, 'Yes, bless the Lord.' We struck at 1.45 a.m., and at 6.30 we were taken to another steamer which was passing our way. No lives were lost, and there was great cause for thankfulness and rejoicing, when all the passengers were transferred safely on the steamer Mars."

MARRIED.

PAIN—WOODY.—In her mission home, "El Faro Cristiano," Madruga, Cuba, Eighth month 13th, 1903, Amy Ellen Woody and Arthur Edward Lywood Pain, of the American Friends' Mission, Banes, Cuba.

TITUS—CHAMBERLAIN.—At the home of the bride's aunt, Melvina C. Corlett, Cleveland, Ohio, Eighth month 27th, 1903, Isaac C. Titus and Mina C. Chamberlain, both of Cleveland, Ohio.

DIED.

BACON.—At the home of his son, Dr. John Bacon, Torresdale, Philadelphia, Seventh month 13th, 1903, Josiah Bacon, of Greenwich, N. J., in the 70th year of his age. He was a member of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting.

CHAPMAN.—At the home of her parents, Jerry and Henrietta Chapman, near Bloomingdale, Ind., Eighth month 31st, 1903, Laura May Chapman, aged 16 years.

COX.—At Pueblo, Col., Eighth month 1st, 1903, Richard T. Cox, son of Nathan B. and Sarah W. Cox, aged over 28 years. By his kind, obliging disposition and upright Christian life he won the respect and esteem of those with whom he mingled.

COX.—At Friendswood, Texas, Eighth month 27th, 1903, Jesse F. Cox, son of Isaiah and Nancy J. Cox, aged 22 years. He was a birthright member of Friends, and was married only six months before his death.

COX.—At Friendswood, Texas, Eighth month 30th, 1903, Paris Jay Cox, brother of Jesse F. Cox, in his 20th year.

JOHNSON.—At the Clarence Baker Hospital, Biltmore, N. C., Eighth month 30th, 1903, Thatcher S. Johnson, of Leesburg, Fla. He held a birthright membership with Friends, and was a member of Cincinnati Monthly Meeting at the time of his death. His widow, Mary K. Johnson, and two married daughters survive him.

LEEDS.—At New Garden, Chester County, Pa., Seventh month 31st, Phebe A. Leeds, in her 80th year. The deceased was a member of Twelfth Street Meeting, Philadelphia.

MINCHIN.—At her home, near Dundee, Oregon, Eighth month 26th, 1903, Julia G. Minchin, daughter of Samuel and Sarah Minchin, formerly of Poplar Ridge, N. Y., in her 27th year. The deceased was converted at an early age, and lived a beautiful, unselfish, Christian life. She died with a calm, unfaltering trust in her Saviour, which was manifest throughout her life.

MORGAN.—At his home, near Paonia, Col., Seventh month 14th, Milton Morgan, aged nearly 69 years.

THOMAS.—At Ludlow, Ohio, Ninth month 5th, 1903, Edna, wife of Marvin Thomas, in her 26th year. She was possessed of a beautiful character and Christ-like spirit. She was a member of the meeting at Ludlow.

WELLS.—At Rose Hill, Kan., Ninth month 12th, 1903, Esther Ann and Chester Alga, the twin children of Cyrus and Lillie Wells, aged four months.

WING.—At his home in Northfield, Somerset County, Maine, Eighth month 25th, 1903, George A. Wing, in his 86th year. He was a very conscientious member, and elder of Sidney Monthly Meeting.

Events and Comments.

There are now 717 college Young Men's Christian Associations, equaling in number the city associations. These have enlisted 1,000 new men for foreign missions in the past year.

The Western Electric Company has posted a notice prohibiting gambling in any form, drinking, cigarette smoking and other forms of dissipation by its employees. The Illinois Central Railway, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway, Marshall Field & Co., the Farwell Company and other corporations have posted similar notices.

Premier Seddon has introduced a very drastic bill for the prevention of monopolies in New Zealand. It proposes to establish a monopolies court, with full powers to investigate all complaints regarding the enhancing of prices by the formation of trusts, and prescribes heavy penalties for offenders.

The agreement reached between Minister Conger at Peking and Prince Ching that the port to be opened on the Yalu River shall be An-Tung, instead of Ta-Tung-Tao, has the approval of the State Department, it having been shown, as stated in the press dispatches from Peking that An-Tung has the better harbor.

Japan and Great Britain have exchanged views on the latest demands made by Russia on China, and they have decided to protest separately to the Peking Government against their acceptance.

BLACK TAFFETA SILKS

Extra values are the rule and not the exception in our Silk Department—nearly every Philadelphia woman knows that; and when we can offer even lower prices than usual on such staple lines as these Black Taffetas, it is a good idea to get some of them while they are going:

- 75c Black Taffeta, 19-inch—58c.
- 80c Black Taffeta, 19-inch—68c.
- 85c Black Taffeta, 19-inch—75c.
- 95c Black Taffeta, 21-inch—85c.
- $1.00 Black Taffeta, 23-inch—85c.
- $1.00 Black Taffeta, 36-inch—85c.
- $1.50 Black Taffeta, 36-inch—$1.25

All of these Silks are guaranteed to wear—they are of the same sturdy, reliable sorts that have made this department popular throughout our own country, and famous in the great silk centres of Europe.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER

PHILADELPHIA

In case this should prove fruitless, and Russia continues her occupation of Manchuria, Japan proposes to break off the negotiations with Russia for a definition of their respective rights in Manchuria and Korea, and to demand of the St. Petersburg Government that it order the evacuation of Chinese territory.

Studies of malaria in certain regions of India have been made which lead to the discovery that in many localities where the mosquito of the most vicious variety and in great abundance is found there is no malaria. Two doctors, Schoo and Celli, advance the assertion that when mosquitoes feed on the juice of the acrid fruits they are not susceptible to the malarial germ, and are consequently almost harmless. This gives a new importance to the tomato, of which the mosquito is inordinately fond.

For the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War and the war with Spain we have paid $3,038,623,590 in pensions up to date. This includes none of the expense of war as waged, only its after effects. The annual expenditure for Spanish War pensions now amounts to $1,765,310, and the evidence is all too patent that many volunteered for that war with the expectation of resorting at once to the national treasury. There is no other explanation of the percentage of pension applications from certain regiments.

Nearly one-third of the territory of the United States is unoccupied public land and two-fifths of its entire area is arid. While this is the case, it is further true that by far the greater part of the areas now lying waste are susceptible of being transformed into fertility; in the case of the most of the sterile soil neighboring streams need only to be diverted and distributed to win it back to productive-ness. It is this fact that gives interest to the Irrigation Congress which held its eleventh session in Ogden, Utah, last week.

Nineteen hundred and three is a jubilee year in the royal family of Denmark. The King will have reigned forty years on Eleventh month 15th, and it is fifty years since he was recognized as heir to the throne. The Crown Prince, who lately attained his 60th year, has been Crown Prince for forty years. The King's second son, King George of Greece, celebrates his 40th year, and this year Queen Alexandra celebrated her fortieth wedding anniversary. The Duchess of Cumberland, who will be 50 on Ninth month 29th, keeps her silver wedding in Twelfth month. The King looks young and rides daily.

The breaking up of the Balfour Ministry began with last week by the coincident retirement of the leaders on both sides of the controversy over preferential tariffs. The resignation of Joseph Chamberlain as Secretary for the Colonies; C. T. Ritchie as Chancellor of the Exchequer, and of George Hamilton as Secretary for India, were announced the same day, and came as a surprise to many on both sides of the Atlantic. The war between the preferential treatment advocates and the conservative free traders will now be opened, and the Government seems disposed to postpone the dissolution of Parliament as long as possible in order to favor the protectionists.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and much had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contains the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly-concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

One hundred cases of bubonic plague are reported in Tondo, the most populous suburb of Manila. Of these, eighty have been fatal. Twelve cases, with nine deaths, are reported in Cebu. Cholera is prevalent in all parts of the islands.

Several country clubs and other organizations in California, including the Tamalpais Forestry Association, are much engaged in the project for setting aside Mt. Tamalpais and the adjoining Marin slopes as a national reserve. Tamalpais is northwest from San Francisco, on the opposite side of the Golden Gate, and is 2,590 feet high. It commands a wonderful diversity and extent of view, and is yet well covered with forest growths; it is also the home of Indian legends galore.

TWO TIPS,

And Both Winners.

A man gets a friendly tip now and then that's worth while.

A Nashville man says: "For many years I was a perfect slave to coffee, drinking it every day, and all the time I suffered with stomach trouble and such terrific nervousness that at times I was unable to attend to business, and life seemed hardly worth living. I attributed my troubles to other causes than coffee, and continued to drench my system with this drug. Finally I got so bad I could not sleep, my limbs were weak and trembling, and I had a constant dread of some impending danger, and the many medicines I tried failed to help me at all.

"One day a friend told me what Postum had done for her husband, and advised me to quit coffee and try it, but I would not do so. Finally another friend met me on the street one day, and after talking about my health he said, 'You try Postum Cereal Coffee and leave coffee alone,' adding that his nervous troubles had all disappeared when he gave up coffee and began to drink Postum.

"This made such a great impression on me that I resolved to try it, although I confess I had little hopes. However, I started in, and to my unbounded surprise, in less than two weeks I was like another person. All of my old troubles are now gone, and I am a strong, healthy, living example of the wonderful rebuilding power of Postum. It is a fine drink as well as a delicious beverage, and I know it will correct all coffee ills; I know what a splendid effect it had on me to give up coffee and drink Postum." Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The tour will leave New York 7.55 a.m., and Philadelphia 12.20 p.m., Saturday, September 26th, in charge of a Pennsylvania Railroad Tourist Agent, and will cover a period of six days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the party throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $22 from New York, $21 from Trenton, $19 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents; Tourist Agent, 263 Fifth Avenue, New York; 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address Geo. W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

The running of ships on the transatlantic routes to break the record is less prevalent than it used to be, or less often attended with success, and the record of five days, seven hours and twenty-three minutes from Queenstown to New York, made by the Cunard liner Lucania in 1894, still remains unbroken. But the big German liners are lowering the record for the Cherbourg route quite frequently. The Deutschland last week made the westward passage from the French port to New York in five days, eleven hours and fifty-four minutes, which was three minutes lower than the best time of the Kronprinz Wilhelm, that had previously held the record, and it is safe to say that a five-day passage between New York and Queenstown has become substantially a reality or among the things immediately attainable.

The Macedonian organizations are preparing a memorandum to be presented to the representatives of the powers, in which they will declare that the insurgents intend to resort to reprisals for the Turkish atrocities. The memorandum gives detailed information of villages destroyed and the massacre of their inhabitants. It declares that 65,000 men, women and children have been slaughtered and 120 villages burned. In the list of villages given only two are in the Province of Adrianople. The others are principally in Monastir. The memorandum repeats the statements recently issued by the insurgent general staff at Monastir, that the Turks, instead of fighting the insurgents, have instituted a general massacre of the Christians. The organizations declare they are issuing the present memorandum because they are no longer able to restrain the bands from retaliation, and henceforth the responsibility will rest with the great powers, which, instead of attempting to moderate the Turkish barbarities, are calling on the Turks to speedily end the revolution.

By thine own soul's law learn to live;
And if men thwart thee, take no heed,
And if men hate thee, have no care—
Sing thou thy song and do thy deed;
Hope thou thy hope and pray thy prayer,
And claim no crown they will not give.

TOUR TO THE PACIFIC COAST.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account Meeting National Bankers' Association.

On account of the meeting of the National Bankers' Association, to be held at San Francisco, Cal., October 20th to 23d, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company offers a personally-conducted tour to the Pacific Coast at remarkably low rates.

This tour will leave New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other points on the Pennsylvania Railroad east of Pittsburg, Wednesday, October 14th, by special train of the highest grade Pullman equipment. A quick run westward to San Francisco will be made, via Chicago, Omaha, Cheyenne and Ogden.

Five days will be devoted to San Francisco, allowing ample opportunity to visit the near-by coast resorts. Returning, stops will be made at Salt Lake City, Colorado Springs, Denver and St. Louis. The party will reach New York on the evening of October 31st.

Round-trip rate, covering all expenses for eighteen days, except five days spent in San Francisco, $190.

Rates from Pittsburg will be $5.00 less.

For full information apply to Ticket Agents, or George W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

VISION

*I but open my eyes, and perfection, no more and no less
In the kind I imagined, full fronts me, and God is seen God
In the star, in the stone, in the flesh, in the soul and the clod.
And thus looking within and around me, I ever renew (With that stoop of the soul which in bending upraises it too)
The submission of man's nothing-perfect to God's all-complete,
As by each new obeisance of spirit I climb to His feet.*

WHY FOLLOW CHRIST ?

THERE are in the world two classes of Christians: (1) There are those who "accept" Christ out of fear, and (2) there are those who follow Christ because they love Him. Fear is not a very high motive, but it must be confessed that millions of persons have begun their Christian life because they were scared into it. Most little children, and school boys, and a vast multitude in our great cities, are influenced by the fear of results. This is, of course, better than nothing. Every wise mother, every successful teacher, every caretaker of the public, makes use of the instinct of fear in the lower stages of moral training. But we should certainly call nobody good who was kept from wrong-doing solely through fear and terror. We should know that the moment such a person was no longer watched he would follow his natural impulse as a piece of bent steel flies back when the weight is off.

Now there is a proper place for fear even in religion. Fear is the beginning of wisdom. But there are hosts of Christians who, alas, never get beyond it. A good deal of popular theology begins and ends in an appeal to fear. In this theology "salvation" has reference to the future life. It means escape from an awful punishment due for one's sins. To be saved means that "I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies." Throughout the entire history of Christianity this conception and this attainment have exercised an enormous influence. Men have followed Christ because they believed that he could "save" them in this particular sense. They were afraid of punishment, and He could deliver them from it. They "accepted" Him because they were afraid of missing heaven, and because they believed He would let them in. Such a view has assuredly had its place in the world, and it has worked upon men and upon whole races when nothing else would have worked.

But at its best it is a very immature and partial conception of the gospel of salvation, and by itself it never could produce the highest type of Christian souls. It ought never to be more than the beginning-stage in any Christian experience or in any Christian theology. Christ came to save men, not from the punishment or the consequences of their sins, He came to save them from their sins. No man is wholly saved until he is dead to sin and alive unto Christ. His overwhelming purpose and aim—his "one-thing-I-do"—is not to get a title of admission through a gate, but to get a white soul which throbs with love, to get a will completely conformed to the will of God, to get that mind which was in Christ Jesus the Lord. Heaven and Hell will take care of themselves after that. If the stream properly conforms to the power of gravitation it will finally end in its true element, the ocean; and when a soul has found its life in God and lives in the power of such a redemption, heaven is already not far away—there is little worry about gates!

Such Christians follow Christ in quite a different way than do those who are under the dominion of fear. They follow Him because He is the way of Life, because He shows them the Father, because He constrains them to hate sin and love goodness, because He draws them by His own unspeakable love. They rise up and go to Him, as the strayed child runs to find the mother. They love Him for His own sake. They walk with Him because their hearts are glad to be busied with His work and to be doing anything which would please Him. They have one sole and single task, to be one of Christ's men in brave and unfailing loyalty.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING AT MARION.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS ago there was not a single Friend in what is now the State of Indiana. Migrations were then just beginning from the Carolinas and Virginia to Ohio and Tennessee. Between 1801 and 1810 monthly meeting records show that 562 removal certificates were granted to persons going into Ohio, while only two were granted during the same period for Indiana.* David Hoover and four others with him seem to have been the first Friends to cross the line into Indiana. This was in the year 1806. These pioneers fixed upon the tract of country now known as the city of Richmond, and soon there was, what David Hoover in his autobiography calls, "a great rush to White Water" (the little river which runs through that section of country). During the decade from 1810 to 1820, 253 removal certificates were granted by Southern monthly meetings to Friends going into Indiana, and there must have been a great many removals in the same direction from Ohio, which was becoming a populous state, and had had a yearly meeting of its own since 1812. Indiana Friends got a yearly meeting of their own in 1821, and from that year until the present time they have met annually by the White Water to transact their affairs and to increase their spiritual life and power. Four times during these years the yearly meeting has "swarmed" and set up new yearly meetings. Still the home membership has kept growing until it now numbers over twenty thousand. For the last few years some of the Friends in the northern counties of the State have asked for a new yearly meeting, and the subject has received weighty consideration. It was decided last year that "way did not open" for a division of forces. It was believed that the yearly meeting would count for more, would have, in fact, a larger working power if it remained a single body. But at the same time it was concluded, undoubtedly with wisdom, that the yearly meeting should assemble in 1903 at Marion, which is a large Quaker center in one of the northern counties. This will enable many Friends, who have seldom enjoyed the privilege of attending it, to sit in and participate in their yearly meeting. It will, too, as we remarked two weeks ago, shake the country for ten miles around, and it will leave behind a permanent impression upon the community and the towns in the near neighborhood. There is no other State of the Union in which Friends exercise so strong and deep an influence as in the State of Indiana. They have grown up with the country. They have formed a majority or a strong minority in many towns. They form an element to be reckoned with throughout the State. They have given that section of the country some of its best educational institutions. They have taken a solid part in all the movements which have made for better citizenship and for a purer society, and they have had a religious influence quite out of proportion to their numbers. We hope this will be one of the greatest years in their history, and the prophecy of better still to come.

* See "Southern Quakers and Slavery," by Stephen B. Weeks, Ph.D.

"As we love our neighbor we must try to do him good; but if we love only ourselves and our homes, we must be at work to make the world better. If Christians do not make the world better, the world will surely make the Church worse."

You are not very holy if you are not very kind.—
Andrew Bonar.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

HISTORICAL SKETCHES.—I.

BY RUFUS M. JONES.

THE BOYHOOD YEARS OF GEORGE FOX.

"In the month called July, 1624," a little fellow came into the home of a poor Leicestershire weaver at Drayton-in-the-Clay. Like other little babies of godly parents, he was taken to the parish church and christened. We can easily believe that he cried and marred the solemn ceremony, but on this point history is silent. We merely know that on this occasion he got the name of George. Nobody, except, of course, the mother, had the slightest intimation that Drayton had a wonderful child in its borders, for prophets and great men were not expected from these flat, clayey fields,—but there are surprising possibilities in babies which the neighbors often fail to see.

His mother, who was "an accomplished woman," we may be sure began to tell him stories of martyrs as soon as he was old enough to hear stories at all, for there had been martyrs in her own family, and she would know more about these things than she would of Greek legends or fairy tales, and the boy's eyes would shine as he listened to them. While he was still in the story period there was a real martyr-fire in the public square of Litchfield, not far away, and we may well believe that the details of this test of faith were told over in the little Drayton home until George's mind was deeply stirred, and we know now that what gets in early into a boy's mind makes a difference all his life. The next thing which influenced him after his mother's stories were the great passages from the family Bible which told of the heroes of faith in Hebrew history. The Bible would be the main book, probably the one book, in the pious weaver's home, for Drayton parish was Puritan in its sympathies, and already the Bible was becoming the supreme influence in the life of peasant and scholar. The little church of the village was five minutes' walk from the home of the Fox family, and in this quaint old building George heard the Drayton minister set forth the theology of the time. It would doubtless seem dry to little boys to-day, and the sermon would seem endlessly long as it laboriously "justified the ways of God to man," but nobody in those days thought of asking whether a sermon was interesting; their only question was, "Is it sound?" and little boys were expected to listen as though their eternal destiny depended on following the argument.

George never went to school, for it was not very easy in those days for a weaver's son in such a country community as that to have the advantage of a school. But he had the next best thing to a school—his mother taught him. He learned to read and to write, though he seems never to have fathomed the mystery of spelling which was not taken very seriously by anybody in his century. When one remembers that it takes fifty-three pages in Joseph Smith's catalogue to print the titles of his books and pamphlets there will be no question that he learned to write! One of his contemporaries who knew how completely he had mastered the Bible and made it his own book says: "If the Bible had been lost it could have been found in the mouth of George Fox," so that it is settled that he knew how to read! In his funny old book, the "Battle-Door," he undertakes to prove that in many languages the singular, "thou," is used for one person and not "you," and to illustrate his argument he cites the languages of the Apharsathikites, the Tarpetites, the Aphorsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susanchites, the Dehavites, the Elamites, the Temanites, the Naomites, the Shuites, the Buzites, the Moabites, the Hivites, the Edomites, the Philistines, the Amalekites, the Sodomites, the Hittites, the Midianites, the Latine, Italian, Greek, Hebrew, Caldee, Syriack, Arabick, Persiack, Ethiopick, Samaritan, Coptick or Egyptick, Armenian, Saxon, Welch, Mence, Cornish, French, Spanish, Portugal, High-Dutch, Low-Dutch, Danish, Bohemian, Slavonian, with some examples from the Polonian, Lithuanian, Irish and East Indian! But probably nobody would infer that he learned these languages at his mother's knee in Drayton!

George never played like other boys, "refusing," as William Penn says of him, "childish and vain sports and company when very young." "From a child," he says again, "he appeared of another frame of mind than the rest of his brethren." He was "inward and still" and thoughtful. While the other Drayton boys were fishing in the fens or hunting birds' nests this odd little boy sat off alone by himself wondering what he was in the world for, and how he could penetrate the strange mysteries of life and sin which he heard so much about on Sabbath mornings. He must often have been laughed at by the careless, healthy boys who could not understand a boy that never enjoyed fun and frolic, but this treatment was good training for one who was to be jeered at and tormented for a whole lifetime. His mother at any rate understood him. She was pleased at "the gravity, wisdom and piety which shined through him," and William Penn says that "she was tender and indulgent over him, so that from her he met with little difficulty." "When boys and rude people would laugh at me, I let them alone and went my way," he writes in his Journal. "Boys and rude people" cannot see what shines through a quiet boy's face as a mother can! So the days and years went by, and the early home lessons were doing their work. "When I came to eleven years of age, I knew pureness and righteousness; for while I was a child I was taught how to walk, to be kept pure." Isn't that a fine picture out of this home which gave the world its first Quaker! George never forgot his mother whose tenderness had done so much for him. He was on his way to sit by her in her last illness when he was seized and thrown into Worcester jail. He says, "My mother, an ancient, tender woman, had sent for me, earnestly desiring to see me before she died." But before he was free again Mary Fox had passed over to join her martyred kinsfolks.

When George was about sixteen years old an important event occurred—there was a change of ministers in the parish church at Drayton. The Reverend Nathaniel Stephens, M.A., came from his long studies at Oxford to be the cure of souls in Fenny Drayton. He was thirty-four years old, and settled in his own mind on all the points of doctrine.

"No human flea but thinks that he Can speak for his Creator."

He was mighty in teaching his favorite doctrine of the utter depravity of man, and those who care to be enlightened on this subject may still read his "Three-fold Defense of the Doctrine of Original Sin." He was equally strong and infallible in dealing with the doctrine of Election and Reprobation by God's absolute decree. He was a master in arguing for infant baptism and for clergymen's tithes, and he unraveled the mystery of "Revelation" in his "Plain and Easy Calculation of the Name, Mark and Number of the Beast." To those who hungered and thirsted for this kind of nourishment "Priest Stephens" was undoubtedly a good shepherd, but we shall see that there was one hungry soul in his flock who was not to be easily satisfied with the dry scholastic phrases, and who felt too plainly the mysteries of the spiritual life to enjoy having its affairs settled and catalogued as precisely as though one were dealing with the fossils in a chalk down. The effect of Stephens' ministry will be considered in the next article.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SOME NEGLECTED BRANCHES OF EDUCATION.

BY HENRY H. SWIFT.

It seems to be quite commonly believed that as our public schools are so good and as every effort is made in them to teach the useful branches of education in the best possible manner, there remains little or no room for denominational schools, and that these labor under such disadvantages as to cost and distance that they must sooner or later give place almost wholly to the public school.

It is also thought and said, that as our children have such excellent privileges near home, why should we send them far away to a school at which they will learn little which they cannot be taught, without expense and under our own influence, at home.

These arguments are unanswerable, if the premises are true, that the children can learn no more at the distant school; but it has seemed to me that there is still a wide field of education of the most necessary kind, which is still largely unoccupied, and which will probably never be occupied by the public school, and in which the denominational school will find abundant opportunity and pressing need.

In the first place, of course, is Christian instruction. The Mohammedan or Buddhist child is taught first and continually as the prime necessity of education, full knowledge of their holy books. All else is neglected rather than these. And we have the real revelation of God, and His Son, the means of everlasting life, the fountain of truth, to say nothing of the grandest poetry, the most perfect ancient history, the only true word of prophecy, the most complete analysis of human nature, and words will fail to mention the half of the treasures which are waiting for us in these words of God. And our public schools are forbidden even to teach these scriptures in any way.

Our youth have only the ridiculously little opportunity of one hour on the Sabbath Day, with an inexperienced teacher, often, and small or no preparation, to learn these grand lessons which make for happiness and eternal life.

First, then, should not our Church schools be the centers of Christian instruction? The ignorance of our people, not Friends only, but speaking generally, is almost proverbial, in regard to these vital matters. Heresies and differences have been largely the result of ignorance of the real teaching of revelation, and, invoking as a necessity the guidance of the Holy Spirit, with reverence and earnestness, may we not make this study of the Bible a strong point in our guarded education? Neither should such study be confined to the Bible only. There are many works, histories, writings of early fathers, papyri, recent discoveries and works of many different kinds so multiplied in these days, that the student, once started and interested, will find his time far too short to learn what he would gladly know, and the study may not cease, neither will he probably ever learn all its beautiful lessons. Who that has studied them does not remember his "Butler's Analogy" and "Paley's Evidences" with the keenest enjoyment?

Were such a course of study as this clearly outlined and enthusiastically taught and encouraged, it is not to be believed that parents would not make the greatest of sacrifices that their dear ones might have a complete equipment in this respect, which they can never be taught in the public schools, at least till a far different public sentiment exists.

But there are other branches which are almost equally neglected, while their need is almost as great.

The young man who intends to undertake a business life finds a business college awaiting him. He is trained by careful instructors in business ways. All his early education has been leading him by an understanding of arithmetic, grammar, etc., toward a fitness for his business life. The engineer, whether civil, or electrical, or mechanical, has a most thorough training. So with the doctor, the lawyer, etc.

But for the trade which occupies almost half our population, the one on which we all depend for subsistence, and which needs careful study no less than these others, there is almost no opportunity for special training, and the boy who, whether by choice or necessity, will be a tiller of the soil must get his training where he can. If his father happens to be a skillful man, he may get some training from him. Should he progress far enough, he may by strong effort enter an "agricultural college," where he may at length get some suitable training. But for all the ordinary boys there is no way in which they can get the special training which is particularly necessary in these days to make a successful farmer. It is just as much needed as for any other trade.

What father would expect to teach his son all the technical knowledge necessary for the engineer or the doctor, even though he himself were a college man, and well taught?

How much less can the untrained farmer teach his son that which he himself has never learned?

We often hear it said that farming is an unprofitable employment—as "Josh Billings" said, "an honest way of getting a hard living." But there are farmers, and farmers.

Our Eastern farmers say that at the West only does farming pay. But statistics show that the lands of the East produce as much per acre as those of the West, and can be bought for even less money, while nearness to market makes their product more valuable. Moreover, there are frequently found farmers in our Eastern States who are prosperous and successful, and in whose hands farms have been and are fruitful and profitable.

There are farmers who live well and make money. It is largely a matter of skill and knowledge of the means which will lead to success. Farmers frequently are satisfied with the ways of their neighbors and predecessors and do not care to learn the better systems which will enable them to know whether a certain crop is a paying one or if it is or is not suited to the soil and climate where its cultivation is to be attempted.

The subject is a large one, and should be much more exhaustively treated than these few lines will allow; but that a course of elementary instruction in that which goes to make a successful practical farmer should be easily attainable, and taken by every one who attempts to till the soil is, I think, indisputable. The trained farmer would love his business, and, as it supplies him with comforts and luxuries, would enjoy it instead of disliking it. If this is the case with the boys, it is still more true with the girls. One of the wise men said, "Teach your boys that which they will need to practice when they become men." But our custom seems to be really to prevent the girls from knowing that which they chiefly need to understand.

According to Scripture, woman was created that she might be a helpmeet for man. All her instincts lie in the direction of keeping the house, preparing the food, caring for the family, and all those beautiful arts which go to the making of that which we lovingly call "home."

But in the training of the girls what do we see? So far as possible her training is kept free from all connection with home cares and duties. She is diligently taught that such work is degrading and that it is to be shunned.

From that which I know of the art, and my information is necessarily limited, I am convinced that there is no art or science known to man so rich in opportunity for the exercise of skill, having so many branches which need to be learned, and for the perfecting of which life is too short, having such rich rewards for lessons learned and work well done, and opening so attractive a vista for the building of a life of joy and contentment as that which is included in the general term of housekeeping—or rather, home-making.

The preparation of food alone is far more complicated than the work of the chemist in his laboratory. It should be prepared with no less care, and its results are appreciated by a far greater number and to a much greater extent than the discoveries even of an Edison can be. The neat and tasteful arrangement and adornment of a home is a work of art far beyond that of a painter or sculptor, and the training of children is the branch of human effort on which all our future depends. Yet for these mighty responsibilities what opportunity has the girl for preparation? At what school can she find competent and patient instructors who are devoted to the work of preparing her for her life duties and pleasures, for there are few pleasures greater than the consciousness of work well done?

It will doubtless be said that she should learn these things from her mother and practice them in her home, but in that case at best she can only learn that which her mother happens to know. Sometimes the mother is a skillful manager, and her home is a fit training school. But in many cases such training is faulty and lacking for various reasons. If the mother has the cares and duties of a family, she has little time to train her daughter, except to make use of her help, and often in such a way as to make her life seem unattractive, if not repulsive.

But in most cases it seems to be the mother's effort to keep her child as far as possible from her burdens. She feels that the life has been a hard one for her, and she would spare her dear one as long as possible any share in the burdens which she carries. She herself was trained to think it a life of drudgery from which she should make every effort to escape, and she has perhaps never learned its attractive side.

The first instincts of the girl are in the direction of home-making. Her first plaything is a doll, and often loved with real affection. She likes dishes, a little cook stove and kitchen ware. Our country school houses are often adorned by stones laid in rows to make a pretended house in which she may set up housekeeping, and it is only by careful training that these instincts are perverted, and she is led to think these plans are misleading, and that if she would find the happiest life it should be in some shop or factory or in some business office; or in that which is least to be desired of all—a life of idleness. The consequences of this training and lack of training do not fall upon her alone. From among these girls the young men must select their wives, and most of them sooner or later will marry. It is expected that the husband shall be able and willing to support his family, and his training has been for that end.

It is no wonder that he often longs for "the biscuit mother used to make," and the many items of comfort or ease which she perhaps had been able to prepare; or he may have hoped to find in a new home greater comfort than he has yet known. How often is he bitterly disappointed!

The wife has no love for her duties and no skill in them. She hates them and requires some one to take all these cares off her, and perhaps she does not even know how to direct the unskilled hands which can be hired. Bright visions of a cozy home are rudely dispelled, and the husband takes refuge in his club, or worse; the wife is, and feels, neglected, and we hear it said that "marriage is a failure." Thorough training of our girls in these arts of home-making will, I fully believe, do more to overthrow the power of strong drink than many laws can do.

The young wife who goes to her new home well equipped for its duties is queen in her own household. If it be her lot to direct rather than to do, she is able to secure the best and most intelligent help, and is respected by them, and in the emergencies which must arise she is no victim, helpless, but strong in her own skill. As her husband knows every detail of his business thoroughly, she is equally prepared for hers.

And in the far greater multitude whose household must be cared for by her own hands, she has learned how to lighten half its burdens; the work skillfully done is a joy in doing, and the many economies will make a saving in cost of living, and delicacies of that which would be otherwise wasted or spoiled to an extent that might seem impossible. Why should not our schools teach these things?

And in the very teaching there may be a lessening of expense. The girl must necessarily practice as her teaching goes on, and in doing so some of the school expenses will unavoidably be reduced. The boy may have some practice on the soil, though this will be to so small an extent that only by neglect of other studies could any appreciable economy be gained, and the school year is broken at the most busy time on the farm. His instruction must mainly be a theoretical one, with object lessons. I cannot help but think that the school which will give proportionate attention to these neglected branches, sending out as its graduates men and women equipped with some real knowledge of the Scriptures, and of their duties in life, not having omitted to learn also the usual lessons of school instruction, but having added to them these which make practical that which has gone before, will never lack for patronage, even though its prices be much higher than other schools in which similar advantages cannot be obtained.

Doubtless the time will come when these things will be taught in all our public schools, and we shall wonder what our ancestors were thinking of to neglect these really vital points, but until they are so taught there seems to me a wide and needy field for our denominational schools.

WILLARD MEMORIAL HALL.

BY LYDIA ARNOLD.

The Frances E. Willard Memorial Hall, built in Forest Park, at Ottawa, Kansas, is considered a success by the many who have enjoyed the hospitality it affords. It was near enough done at the time of the Chautauqua Assembly, this summer, for us to occupy. Heretofore we used a large tent, and many a soaking we cold water women received at times of heavy storms for twenty-four years. This year was the twenty-fifth year of our Assembly at Ottawa, and a silver anniversary it truly was to the faithful W. C. T. U. women of Kansas, when we think of the many who worked so far to collect the dimes and dollars in order that the thing might be accomplished. Franklin County W. C. T. U. made a quilt with forty names to the block. The lady who got the most received the quilt. The money went into the building fund. Mrs. Anna Manly collected $50.30. She got the quilt. Our Union, South Ottawa, is a larger society than the others, yet the quilt netted $125 to the fund. Space forbids mentioning the different modes employed to secure means—memorial columns, stairway, etc., besides statuary, doors, windows, chimney, chairs and pictures donated in honor of the different women who have worked for the temperance cause throughout the State and nation. There is one upper window east of the L. T. L. door, looking out on the south veranda, dedicated to the honor of Drusilla Wilson and her work in Kansas. She has passed her eighty-eighth birthday and is still in the field. The Ottawa Union has the use of the building, also the county and State, for all religious temperance work. During the Franklin County Fair we opened the building as a rest room and to distribute literature. The North Ottawa Union assisted us of the southside union in the work. Altogether over three large baskets of good literature were given out. Our south union's committee counted over 17,000 pages, and the northside looked to have as many, besides three large packages of "Our Messenger" and "Union Signal"; also the last day of the fair the city temperance paper, the "Ottawa Guardian," was sent in to be distributed. We kept a register book on the table for all who wished to write their vote of thanks for the home prepared for the comfort of the people on such occasions. Many were the thanks given at the close, when the tired mothers began to gather up the excited, weary little children for their long ride to the country. We felt well paid, though weary after the three days as hostess in our Frances E. Willard Hall. There were thirty-six pages of names in the register at the close. We have not met and counted them. As the writer is superintendent of literature, good books, papers, etc., will be very acceptable. So many ways are open to distribute them at the Forest Park.

The International Lesson.

FOURTH QUARTER.

LESSON II.

TENTH MONTH 11, 1903.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH DAVID.

2 Samuel 7: 4-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thy throne shall be established forever. 2 Sam. 7: 16.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 5.—God's covenant with David.—2 Sam. 7: 1-16.
 Third-day, Tenth mo. 6.—David's response. 2 Sam. 7: 18-29.
 Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 7.—The promise remembered. 1 Chron. 28: 1-10.
 Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 8.—The promise fulfilled. 1 Kings 8: 12, 21.
 Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 9.—Precious promises. Ps. 132.
 Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 10.—A firm covenant. Jer. 33: 14-22.
 First-day, Tenth mo. 11.—Established throne. Heb. 1: 1-12.

Intervening Events.—The last lesson ended with David's bringing the ark of the Lord "to the city of David." Chapter 6 continues the account, dwelling on the episode of Michal, Saul's daughter, David's wife, who despised David because he himself took part in the rejoicing, dancing in a way which seemed to her unseemly. David's rebuke was severe, and the implication is that David was from that time estranged from her. It is also related that David distributed among the people on the occasion of the bringing of the ark to Jerusalem, bread, raisins, and perhaps other food.

Time.—Shortly after the last lesson. About 1042, or 1004, B.C. Six or seven years after David had become King over all Israel.

Place.—Jerusalem.

Characters.—David, Nathan the prophet of whom we now hear for the first time. He was the chief prophet of the reign of David. He rebuked David for his sin with Bathsheba (12: 1-15); took a prominent part in securing the accession of Solomon (1 Kings 1: 22-38); and wrote a history of the reign of David and of part of that of Solomon, upon which is doubtless based the books of Samuel, Kings and Chronicles (1 Chron. 29: 29; 2 Chron. 4: 29). Another contemporary prophet was Gad (2 Sam. 24: 10-14), also a chronicler (1 Chron. 29: 29).

David had now been successful over his foes. He was well established at Jerusalem; he was recognized as king over all Israel. He reflected that he dwelt in a permanent house while the ark was kept in a tabernacle (tent) formed of temporary materials. He gave utterance to this thought to the prophet Nathan, who, speaking in his own wisdom, said, "Go do all that is in thine heart, for the Lord is with thee" (2 Sam. 7: 1-3).

4. "The word of the Lord came unto Nathan. Note the distinction between Nathan's own judgment, and the message of the Lord. From a human point of view David was just the man to build the temple.

5. "Shalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in?" This expression is equivalent to a negative. Compare 1 Chron. 17: 4.

6, 7. These verses are equivalent to saying that, as God had not told the people to build him a permanent dwelling place, the time had not come, for if he had wished the house he would have told them to build it.

8. The prophet, while telling David that the Lord forbid him to build, is sent with a message of promise. This is preceded by an account of the benefits which had already been bestowed upon David. The words are to some extent metrical, as was common in prophetic utterances. "I took thee." The hand of God was in all his life.

9. Continuation of the recital of God's mercies to David.

10. God will plant the Israelites in a place where they will not be moved, etc., but the result depends upon whether they will so conduct themselves that they will remain where God has placed them. All depends on themselves. God will do His part. "Beforetime." "At the first." Revised Version. That is, during the time in Egypt.

11. "The Lord telleth thee that the Lord will make thee an house." (See 1 Sam. 25: 28). A family.

12. "I will set up thy seed after thee." The emphasis is laid on the fact that David's descendants should occupy the throne, and that his family was not to be cut off, as, for instance, was that of Saul. Such a promise as this would appeal with the greatest force to an Oriental mind, and it did to that of David, for notice that in what he says he does not refer to the temple. See verses 18-29. This promise was immediately fulfilled in Solomon, and afterwards in the kings of Judah, who were all descended from David, and finally in Christ, whose mother was of the lineage of David.

13. "He." His son Solomon. "Name." The name of God signifies God himself.

14. "I will be his father," etc. The king is taken as representing the nation. Compare Ex. 4: 22; Ps. 89: 26, 27; 1 Chron. 22: 9, 10; 28: 6; also Heb. 1: 5. "If he commit iniquity," etc. His position will not excuse him. Compare 1 Kings 11: 14.

15. I will not desert him.

16. "Shall be established forever." Shall be made sure. "Forever." These words can only be fulfilled in the kingdom of the Messiah.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. It is always well to see how we can honor God.
2. It is often a blessing to prepare for the work of others. Each generation is to a large extent dependent on the generations that have gone before.
3. "God cannot in the nature of things compel men to be good, but unless they are good they cannot reap the full harvest of God's blessings."

No one can resist the argument of holiness brought in a personified form before him, in its gentleness, in its sweetness, in its aspiration, in its love, in all its blossoms and fruits of peace and joy.—Henry Ward Beecher.

TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH ELEVENTH.

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE: WHAT JOSEPH TEACHES US.

Gen. 41: 14-16, 42-46.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 5.—To have high ideals. Gen. 37: 5-11

Third-day, Tenth mo. 6.—To bear injustice. Gen. 37: 18-23.

Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 7.—Not to remain a menial. Gen. 39: 1-6.

Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 8.—To show kindness. Gen. 40: 1-23.

Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 9.—To give God the glory. Gen. 41: 25-28.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 10.—To believe God's promises. Gen. 50: 22-26

Doubtless Jacob had planned that Joseph, the first born of his beloved Rachel, should have the position that the choice of his early love would have secured for him—the headship among his brethren. Joseph's persistent faithfulness to Jehovah, though alone in an idolatrous nation, and his confident faith that God would one day visit His people and bring them again to Canaan prove how carefully he had been taught concerning the God of his father. Yet who that might have seen the slave boy carried away by the Midianites would have believed that his father's hopes could be realized, much less that he would become viceroy of Egypt?

Joseph's own recognition of his future greatness as it was revealed to him in his boyhood, may have been indiscreetly published; but his confidence that no adversity could thwart destiny must have been a main support in times when the honors of a ruler seemed the farthest removed. We know from Genesis 42: 21 that he was no stoic, yet when we see the rank that he takes while purchased slave and committed prisoner, we can but believe that he had a dominant faith in the outcome of things that strengthened his heart and made his abilities recognizable. Courage and steadfastness won for him friends and place in whatever circumstances.

Nor was he so occupied, either with his own difficulties or with the thought of his sure vindication and final triumph as to disregard the troubles of others or the necessity for right effort on his part.

He was not a "self-made" man. His historian wrote of him: "The Lord was with him, and that which he did, the Lord made it prosper"; and he himself said: "It is not in me; God shall give Pharaoh an answer." To sin against Him upon whom he so depended was a thing beyond his power. "How can I?" Because all his powers were dedicated to God's service he could not.

On this foundation rested the whole structure of a life that is presented to us in such detail and with so little—perhaps nothing—that we can really condemn or even criticise. The dramatic discipline given his turbulent and factious brothers, and the hardly repressed emotions that finally broke forth in loud weeping, are not quite along the lines of Anglo-Saxon procedure, but his character stands out as one of the most flawless among the patriarchs. His faith won for him a place on the roster of the heroes named in Hebrews 11. His genuine, forgiving love for his brethren and the tender remembrance of his father and the lad, Benjamin, are an example for us. And his conquest of all obstacles by sturdy uprightness and unembittered patience may serve as pattern and consolation for every unrecognized or repressed potential great one of to-day.

OUR NEW SECRETARY.

Endeavorers will learn with regret that the Friends' International Union is no longer to have the services of Myrtle Lightner in the position which she has so faithfully filled for a number of years. Her resignation was presented to the Executive Committee recently, and it seemed proper to comply with her wish to be released.

Mary Lewis, of Sabina, Ohio, was chosen as her successor, and enters at once upon the duties of her office. While we confidently expect the work to be well cared for by Miss Lewis, the fact remains that no secretary can accomplish the desired end without the co-operation of others, and especially of the yearly meeting secretaries; while these in turn are at the mercy of the local societies, so that in the final analysis a real responsibility rests upon each of us. An appropriate welcome to our new secretary would be to furnish her with larger statistics and more varied reports of work done than have ever come into the hands of the incumbent of that office.

THE NEXT INTERNATIONAL.

It is worth while to fix steadfastly in mind just now that the next World's Convention of Christian Endeavor will be held, according to the unanimous choice of the Executive Committee, in Baltimore, Seventh month 5th to 10th, 1905. "Washington, '96," was the last rallying cry from this section of the United States, and it is to be expected that the great attendance of the eastern conventions of other years will be equaled if not surpassed.

The main meeting place is to be the State Armory, recently completed, and having a seating capacity of twenty thousand. Its walls of massive stone, marred by vicious-looking slits through which rifles may be discharged at attacking parties, ought to be so baptized and impregnated with the atmosphere and spirit of brotherhood that to ever afterward use them as a barricade between seekers after human lives would seem an impossible desecration.

Mine be the reverent, listening love
That waits all day on Thee,
With the service of a watchful heart
Which no one else can see:—
The faith that, in a hidden way,
No other eye may know,
Finds all its daily work prepared,
And loves to have it so.

WORK AT CHRISTIANSBURG INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE.

At the annual commencement of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, our principal, Charles L. Marshall, was asked to make the address on behalf of the graduates of the institution. His address covered principally the work done by the Christiansburg Industrial Institute, and, as the following letter addressed to a member of the Board of Managers clearly shows, was much appreciated:

"I have thought you would be pleased to learn how acceptably Mr. Charles L. Marshall, of the Christiansburg school, spoke at our commencement exercises, Thursday, May 28th. Mr. Marshall spoke of the work of the Christiansburg Institute, and paid a high tribute to his co-workers, as well as to the loyal support which has been rendered him by you and other members of the Board. We are all very proud at Tuskegee of what Mr. Marshall and his co-workers have been able to accomplish.

"Yours truly,

"BOOKER T. WASHINGTON."

One of our old teachers, Willie May Griffin, has been spending the last year at Tuskegee. She returns to her work in the Intermediate Department of the Christiansburg school this next year. She was a post-graduate student at Tuskegee, and received much training in teaching while there. Two other teachers, Rosa Hunter and Nellie Marshall, spent six weeks at the Hampton Summer Normal School.

During the summer, three large boys, three small boys, and for the greater portion of the time two girls, have been at the school and working on the farm. The principal reports that the work has been in every way entirely satisfactory.

The gardens made last spring by the Science Classes, which were experiments in connection with the daily lessons, turned out well and gave much valuable information and practice to the students on the care and growth of plants.

The work on the farm during the spring and summer months has turned out satisfactorily and is decidedly encouraging. A new instructor in agriculture, A. L. Burks, came some time in the Seventh month, and our principal says:

"He is taking hold of the work in a satisfactory manner, and we would not know but what he had always been one of our force; he is an extremely satisfactory man."

In the summer of 1900 our first crop of wheat was harvested, and field No. 1 yielded at the rate of 6 bushels per acre. This field has had two crops of cow pease since then, also a small amount of fertilizer. The result is, that this year the same plot yielded 17 bushels per acre, or 238 bushels from the fourteen acres, which is being delivered to the mill at 85 cents per bushel. This is a very good price, and is interesting as showing how our farm may be improved by a careful course of growing grain crops for plowing under. I am confident that the yield of wheat might be very much increased by growing another variety, and I would suggest that some of the money received from the present wheat crop be used for purchasing and sending down from the North a more prolific variety. There are lots of varieties of wheat which would yield a good deal more per acre than the kind they are now growing.

The rye, which is ordinarily all cut for hay, was some of it allowed to stand, from which 35 bushels were threshed.

There has been a good crop of summer apples, which are not very salable. These, of course, come from the old orchard. Marshall is making some of them up into cider for use as vinegar. He has been cautioned not to allow it to be used by students or officers before it has reached this stage.

All the work of the farm has been done by the boys excepting some little help at threshing time; they also hired a horse for eight and one-half days during the harvest season.

Four heifers 18 months old, and a steer 20 months old, have been purchased for $100.00. The steer will be killed this winter and used in the boarding department. The hogs are reported to be doing well, and, of course, will add very materially to the food supply for the boarding department.

The field next to the railroad is in corn this year; the flat part next the railroad has again been flooded. It is our aim to get that seeded to grass as soon as possible, and keep it as a permanent sod for as long as possible.

The field which will be sown with wheat this fall has now a very promising crop of cow peas, which will be plowed under in time for seeding.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION.

To all persons wishing to send donations to the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission by freight:

Before sending, please communicate with the secretary, Emma B. Malone, 702 East Prospect Street, Cleveland, O., about the character of the donation and the time of sending. Storage rates in New York City are very high, and the sender can secure much better freight rates by sending when the Board are shipping.

Also, please note that extra care must be used in packing all such goods. If this is not done great damage or loss is likely to occur.

By order of the Executive Committee,
EMMA B. MALONE.

NOTICE.

To Attenders of Kansas Yearly Meeting:

On behalf of the Committee on Entertainment for Kansas Yearly Meeting, which will be held in Wichita next month, I wish to announce that instead of meeting the trains, as formerly, it has been thought best to give some directions in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and let those who attend the yearly meeting make use of the street cars to transfer them to the university where the sessions will be held. All the depots are situated on Douglas Avenue, the principal street of the city, and street cars pass all depots at intervals of 10 to 15 minutes. By procuring one transfer visitors can go from either the Santa Fe, Rock Island or Frisco depots to the university, and no transfer is necessary in going from the Missouri Pacific depot to that point. Every motorman knows where the university is located, and there is therefore no need for anyone to make any mistake in reaching the university.

Once arrived at the university, the committee will be ready to meet all and assign them to some place where they may find entertainment for the week.

For the Committee, O. C. EMERY.

To all native-born North Carolinians now residing outside of the State:

The Governor and the Legislature of North Carolina have joined in a call for all native-born North Carolinians residing outside of the State to meet the people of North Carolina in re-union at Greensboro, N. C., on the 12th and 13th of Tenth month, 1903. The railroads will sell round-trip tickets to Greensboro for one-half fare, plus $1.00, sales beginning on Tenth month 9th, ticket good for fifteen days, or, by paying fifty cents extra, the ticket will be good until Eleventh month 15th.

Large numbers of North Carolinians now living in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Kansas and the great West have already expressed their intention of coming. Thousands of letters are being sent out to all parts of the world by thousands of our home people, inviting their children and kindred, who have been gone many years, to come home and see the old grounds of their childhood.

This is to be the first great re-union of native-born Carolinians in the history of the State. The Committee of Reception consists of the Governor, all the State officers, five members of the Supreme Court, two Federal Court judges, ten members of Congress and the two United States Senators.

All the colleges of this State will have re-unions of old students, and Guilford College, located near Greensboro, invites all former students to return and meet in re-union at college headquarters, in Benbow Hotel.

North Carolina is the only Southern State where Friends hold yearly meetings. It is the only Southern State that has a Friends' college. We wish all old students of Guilford College, scattered all over this nation, to come back and see their Alma Mater and behold the new South, where emigration has ceased and the loom and the spindle, the hum of machinery in our great factories and the noise of the workmen in our busy towns and thriving cities, and the joyful laugh of the workmen in our well-cultivated fields have taken the place of slave labor, the roar of the cannon and the desolated homes.

CYRUS P. FRAZIER,

Dear Friends:—In THE AMERICAN FRIEND of Ninth month 17th, Minnie Pickett Bowles writes of the intellectual needs of missionaries, and a letter from Daniel Oliver in an earlier number dealt with the same subject under the head of "Missionary Qualifications," showing how necessary a complete intellectual equipment is to the success of our workers in other lands. Knowledge of the people, their history and thoughts, as well as of the best Christian literature, is urged by these Friends, and the following extract from a letter recently received from M. P. Bowles may be given in this connection as an expression of appreciation for what has already been done by the Philadelphia Foreign Mission Association in sending books to Japan. But, as the writer says, a larger supply is needed, and we appeal to all who desire to help our work there for funds for this purpose:

"We felt deeply thankful that all the books sent early last fall were in our house, and so were saved (at the time of the fire). Some of the best reference books are doing most valued service at Gurney Binford's in their work in Mito. We have sold several of the Bibles; a few have been given to replace those of girls who lost theirs in the fire. Gurney Binford was most glad to have some to keep in their home, to lend to unfurnished members who frequently come to his Bible classes. Every book sent will be valuable, and has its place. The teachers in the Girls' School have mentioned many times how thankful they are for these books in the Mission Library to use now as reference books, for, of course, their own personal helps of any kind whatsoever were all burned. When the new school building is finished it has been suggested that it may be better to have these books removed there. . . . As thou suggested. I will send thee a list of the books on Japan we so much desire for the Mission Library. Please do give our united and abundant thanks to all who helped send the books."

A list is enclosed, and the prices of the books desired given. About $250 would purchase those specially needed, and any contributions, large or small, will be most gratefully received and acknowledged by the undersigned.

SUSAN G. SHIPLEY,
Supt. General Literature of Phila. F. M. A.,

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

President Edwin McGrew, of Pacific College, is taking a course of graduate study at Haverford College.

We learn that the Kelseys, at Victoria, Mex., whom we reported last week as very ill with yellow fever, are improving.

Wilmington College has the highest registration in five years. The sum of $250 has been appropriated to refit the physical laboratory.

Professor H. H. Goddard, of West Chester, Pa., with his wife, is spending the year in Heidelberg. We regret to learn that his wife is ill with typhoid fever.

N. C. and Cora E. McLean have been holding revival services at Erie, Pa., by arrangement of a union gospel committee from several denominations in that city. Good reports come from the meeting.

Rosa E. Lee has been visiting meetings and families in the State of Maine. She is expecting soon to go to Ramallah, Syria, in company with A. Edward Kelsey and his wife, who are to take charge of the Eli and Sibyl Jones Mission.

Haverford College opened on the 23d ult. with 130 students in attendance. President Sharpless spoke feelingly at the opening exercises of the death of Professor Rhoads, who was a very promising scholar in the field of physics. He also gave much valuable counsel to the incoming students. Professor Don. C. Barrett, professor of history and economics, with his wife, is spending a year's leave of absence in Europe.

Seldom have the people of New Lexington, O., been more highly favored than within the past week or two, as they have listened to the preaching of William J. Sayers, of Fall River, Mass. Many families were visited, and these occasions were times of power and great profit, in which souls were born into the kingdom. The public meetings, also, of which there were twelve, were seasons of divine favor. In these meetings also a number sought and found Jesus, and the faith and confidence of those who had been long in the Way was quickened and renewed.

The fiftieth wedding anniversary of John B. and Asenath Griffith was celebrated at their home near Tonganoxie, Kan., the 14th ult., by their children, grandchildren, great-grandchild and a few of their special friends. Alfred Bowles, who witnessed the ceremony performed fifty years ago, was present. The room was decorated with evergreen and golden-rod. They received a number of presents suited to the occasion. All partook of a bountiful dinner, spent a few hours pleasantly and departed wishing the aged couple many more happy and prosperous years.

A large number of friends attended the opening of Whittier College, Whittier, Cal., Ninth month 15th. Addresses of welcome were given by members of the Board and faculty and the various associations. This beginning marks an epoch in the history of the college, as this is the first year it has started out under an endowment and with a full college course. There are four members in the first senior class. There are many new students in both the college and preparatory departments, making the total enrollment larger than ever before. Owing to the increased work, Blanche Bradshaw has been elected to the chair of modern language.

The centennial of the establishing of Miami Monthly Meeting is to be commemorated at Waynesville, O., by both branches of Friends on Tenth month 16th and 17th. A most interesting program has been arranged. All friends are cordially invited to be present, but especially those who were at one time members there, or whose ancestors were identified with the meeting. All wishing to attend should notify William T. Frame, Waynesville, O., chairman of the Reception Committee. Meals will be furnished at twenty cents each, and lodging will be provided at reasonable rates. Arrangements are being made to secure reduced rates on the railroad.

Elk River Quarterly Meeting was held at Skiatook Mission, Indian Territory, Eighth month 15th and 16th. George N. Hartly, superintendent of Indian work; also Anna M. Ray, a minister from West China, Me., with approved credentials, and Edna Hill, a singing evangelist, with endorsement from the meeting at Thorntown, Indiana, were present. The different sessions of the meeting were well attended, and the gospel was listened to with much interest. On the Sabbath the meetings were held in the grove near the mission, with a basket dinner. Our next quarterly meeting will be at Bolton, on the Santa Fe Railroad branch line to Cedarvale.

Marion Quarterly Meeting was held the 11th to 13th ult. The meeting on ministry and oversight was attended by about one-half of its members. No visiting ministers were present. Diligence and watchfulness seemed to be the prevailing theme for the day. On Seventh-day the meeting had the company of William J. Thornberry, from Amboy, Ind. "We cannot grow like Jesus, but we must be made like Him," was the foundation for his remarks. C. H. Stratton was also present and had good services. The quarterly meeting is composed of five monthly meetings, and some of them, being comparatively new, neglected to report to the quarterly meeting. The report of the evangelistic superintendent showed an upward tendency. The Home Mission, Foreign Mission, Sabbath School and statistical reports were good as far as the meetings were heard from. The quarterly meeting was not as well attended as at many other times.

The following letter from Allen Jay is very encouraging: "I have just come from Earlham College first prayer meeting for this school year. It was very large and a time of great blessing. The power of the Lord came upon the students in a wonderful manner. About one hundred took part in vocal exercises either in prayer or testimony or both. Many new voices were heard. The officers of the institution, who were present, joined in the exercises. Seldom in my life have I witnessed such clear and definite testimonies given to the saving power of God, many saying He saved them in their college life, and that they had found it easy to serve Him while at Earlham, where the religious influence was so healthy. I felt during the meeting, if the the parents and friends of these dear young people could have been present, that many of them would feel that their prayers were being answered. The number of students is the largest ever had in the opening of any college year. Pray for the students and for those who have the care of the institution."

One of the editors of "The Congregationalist" writes as follows in that paper of three sermons which he heard during the summer: "The first Sunday evening service I attended during my vacation outing was led by a student of theology from Yale University, who, avoiding all explanation from the standpoint of the understanding, drew out all legitimate lessons from the standpoint of the intuitive and religious imagination that are to be found in the Old Testament narrative of Jacob's wrestling with the angel. The second First-day evening service in the red district schoolhouse was by an elderly and beloved missionary who goes over Berkshire Hills shepherding the shepherdless and aiding young and inexperienced shepherds. He told us sweetly and persuasively of the joy there is in communion with the living Christ, and we envied him because his face shone. The next Sunday we listened to the discourse of a layman, a university-trained Quaker, who set forth the Quaker belief as to the core of religion, namely, immediate contact with God revealed by the Inner Light, and who pleaded for a righteous life—personal and social—as the fruit of such direct communion with God. In essence, the three discourses were one, but from how diverse messengers! Yet it is not strange. On all sides comes testimony of the eye and ear that men are turning away from all else to find their source of spiritual authority where the Quakers always have found it and where Puritanism found it."

DIED.

GIFFORD.—In Dartmouth, Mass., Sixth month 24th, 1903, Mary Abbie, wife of Captain Warren Gifford, aged 53 years. The deceased was a cheerful, trusting Christian and a member of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting.

HOCKETT.—At Sterling, Kan., Ninth month 15th, 1903, Julia Elma Hockett, widow of Pleasant Hockett, aged nearly 63 years. She was a consistent and highly-esteemed member of Sterling Monthly Meeting, Kansas, and died in the full assurance of her acceptance with the Father.

Events and Comments.

Forerunners of the approaching invasion of New York City by the army of the "Restoration Host" of John A. Dowie's Catholic Church in Zion, which is to take place this month, have made their appearance in the form of messengers distributing leaflets.

Trade unionists belonging to the associated building trades of Chicago have served notice on the city government that they will not finish an uncompleted school building there until all work done on it by non-union labor has been torn out. This would involve a considerable destruction of the building so far as completed, and large extra cost to the city. The impudence of this attitude of the trade unionists certainly passes the bounds of toleration. Where the spirit of unionism is carried to such a length it is assuredly riding for a heavy fall.

That the depression in the stock market is unrelated to conditions existing in the carrying trade is clearly shown by the statement of Dun's Review for the week ending Ninth month 19th, in that the gross earnings of railroads reporting for the first week of Ninth month indicate a gain of 10.3 per cent. over last year. The heaviest earnings are in the Western and Southwestern roads. The prosperity of the continent is revealed by the increasing earnings of railroads in the United States, Canada and Mexico. The gain on the Central Western roads over the corresponding period of last year is nearly 14.5 per cent.

Hosiery and Underwear

Our stock is full of the right things for present wear, at the lowest prices charged anywhere for equal qualities. We have picked out some very attractive lots for special mention:

Men's Cotton Half Hose—medium weight and absolutely fast-black; with high-applied heels and double soles; extra-good 25c quality—sold only in the original boxes at $1.00 for six pairs.

Women's Cotton Hose—fast-black, either with full unbleached soles or unbleached split feet; imported to sell at 25c a pair—special at 18c a pair, or three pairs for 50c.

Children's Heavy Ribbed Cotton Hose—fast-black, with double knees; extra-good school hose; sizes 5 to 9—at 12½c a pair.

Children's "No-mend" Hose—great for wear; linen spliced knees; all sizes from 6 to 10—25c a pair.

Women's Vests and Drawers—gossamer weight; strictly firsts, which we purchased at exactly half price; vests with long or short sleeves; ankle-length drawers; regularly 50c—here at 25c each.

Children's Ribbed Vests and Pantalets—of a quality that has always given excellent satisfaction—special at 25c each.

Boys' Underwear—shirts and drawers, of heavy ribbed cotton; not too heavy for present wear, and sufficiently warm for the winter months—50c each.

Men's Shirts and Drawers—of heavy French balbriggan—$1.00 each.

PHILADELPHIA

GOVERNMENT LANDS TO BE IRRIGATED.

IN THE FAMOUS SALT RIVER VALLEY, Arizona, near Phoenix, the capital, there is, now belonging to the government, a large tract of beautiful rich desert land, needing water only to make it of great value. The Verde Water and Power Company has been organized for the purpose of creating power and irrigating this land. The enterprise has been planned and is being financed in the interest of the land owners, rather than for the usual purpose of earning large dividends for the share holders.

ELECTRIC POWER. The water will be stored in a mountain reservoir, which expert engineers pronounce one of the largest and finest natural reservoir sites in the country. Over $50,000 has been spent in perfecting the surveys and engineering for the enterprise. Before the water is spread over the land for irrigation, it will be used to develop electric power. The company will develop 12,000 horse power, for all of which there is a present demand at high prices.

THE LANDS. The wonderful fertility and crop capacity of these lands has been demonstrated by cultivation under a dozen canals in the immediate vicinity. The soil is very deep and rich. A crop of wheat and a crop of corn are frequently harvested in one year from the same piece of ground. With a full water supply, four or five heavy crops of alfalfa hay can be cut from April until November; in addition, the fields can be grazed through the winter season. No grain is fed to beef cattle or milch cows. Southern California is only 200 miles distant. All the fine fruits of that section are raised here.

WATER-RIGHTS. We are now selling the water-rights for these lands, which will enable the purchaser to obtain title to the land and guarantee adequate water for its cultivation.

This beautiful country will develop rapidly. Towns, churches, schools, electric railways—a highly Christian community, will arise rapidly when the water is ready for service; thus the usual discomforts of settling a new country will be largely avoided. New places will soon be surrounded with plenty of fruit and shade, and all the comforts of older eastern homes.

We shall gladly send free, statements from numerous Arizona farmers and testimonials of reliable Christian people from half a dozen States, who have made a trip to Arizona to study this enterprise; also maps and other printed matter describing our plans.

Please address, mentioning this paper,

OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO FRIENDS.

A few Friends have made purchases of water-rights as mentioned above. William G. Hubbard, of Columbus, Ohio, and John L. Moore, of No. 135 East Market Street, Indianapolis, Ind., are both expecting to visit Arizona Tenth month 20th to see the lands and the irrigation prospect, and would be glad to have a few other Friends go with them to investigate the matter thoroughly with a view to starting there, if they find conditions satisfactory.

"It may be that God wants some Friends in this rich valley," is a sentence in Brother Hubbard's letter. Persons thinking of joining the half-fare excursion Tenth month 20th should write to either of the above-mentioned Friends. For full particulars about land and water-rights, address

The twenty-first annual Lake Mohonk Conference of the friends of the Indian is to meet for three days, beginning Tenth month 21st, at Lake Mohonk, N. Y.—so long is it since Albert K. Smiley began his good work upon a then neglected national problem. Now work for the Indian is intelligently directed toward the gradual abolition of the reservation, with its tribal life, and the substitution of individual land holding, civilized homes and citizenship.

Three Books You Should Have

We have three books written by the late DR. DOUGAN CLARK, Professor of Biblical Literature in Earlham College. Dr. Clark was recognized as one of the leading teachers on Holiness, and his books are full of spiritual food.

1. HOLY GHOST DISPENSATION.

This book sets forth with great clearness fellowship with the Holy Spirit. It should be the higher life. It contains 170 pages, finely printed, cloth binding, price 50 cents. It treats of the following subjects: 1.—Dispensation of the Holy Spirit; 2.—The Holy Spirit our Sanctifier; 3.—The Holy Spirit an object of Worship, Praise and Prayer; 4.—In the Functions of the Holy Spirit; 5.—The Anointing and Sealing of the Spirit; 6.—The Holy Spirit's Guidance; 7.—The Striving of the Spirit; 8.—Sanctification not by Growth nor Death; 9.—Sanctification not Impeccability; 10.—Sanctification and Temptation; 11.—Be ye therefore Perfect; 12.—Preserved; 13.—A Plea for Orthodoxy; 14.—The Reckoning of Faith.

2. INSTRUCTIONS TO CHRISTIAN CONVERTS.

This book has passed through eight editions. It is one of the most valuable books to put into the hands of young Christians. The chapters are: 1.—Be Definite; 2.—Be Diligent; 3.—Be Faithful; 4.—Be Patient; 5.—Be Holy; 6.—Be Filled; 7.—Be Established. 133 pages; price 50 cents.

INNER AND OUTER LIFE OF HOLINESS.

This book was written just before Dr. Clark's death. In many respects it is his spiritual work. The book has 100 pages well printed and bound; price 50 cents; leatherette 20 cents. The book treats first of INNER LIFE: Peace, Faith, Full Assurance. Extinction of Selfishness, Communion with God, and Spiritual Growth. And of the OUTER LIFE: The Walk, Regulation, Habit, Meekness and Rule of Action.

SPECIAL OFFER.—The three books, in cloth binding, will be sent postpaid for $1.00.

*Far out into the Eternal Main I spied,
Where Sea and Sky to melt in one are seeming!
When, from the depths of sad and tender dreaming,
I heard a still small voice close by my side:*

*Lo! Such is Death and Life! Thus near allied Beginning are and End; the one redeeming
The other ever. Which was first: This teeming
And throbbing life? Or Death? Who dare decide?*

*Then let us live as if no Death could sever
The aspiring soul from frail and mortal frame.
Then let us die as if to live forever
In this unfathomed All from whence All came.*

ETERNAL LIFE.

It has long been recognized that Christ was not the first to tell of a "future life" for the individual. In fact, most primitive peoples have had some idea of an after life. Their customs, especially their burial customs, show that they looked for a continuance of life or for a resurrection of some sort. But one has only to examine this expectation, even in its highest representatives, to discover how far it came from satisfying any deep human needs. Almost everywhere the after life was believed to be in the underworld—in a dark, sunless region where souls flitted about, as shades, incapable of any real life and enjoyment. "I had rather be a slave on earth in the home of a man of mean estate than reign over all who have gone down to death" is the word of one of the wisest of the Greeks. Socrates and Plato come the nearest, of all who lived before Christ, to some conceptions of real hope in reference to the life beyond, and yet one has only to read Socrates' speech to the judges who condemned him to see how vague and uncertain even this best hope was.

The Hebrew of Old Testament times had little to say—some maintain that he had nothing to say—of a happy after life. In the two centuries before Christ, however, the Jews of Palestine had formed a very definite hope of an after life. The literature of this period has much to say of a resurrection-life. Their notions of it, however, are always crude and materialistic. Unfortunately, these Jewish notions, and with them many of the pagan notions, have come over into Christian views and have been again and again supposed to be of Christian origin.

But the moment Christ begins to speak we are at once on a new height. No truer word ever was spoken than this: "Christ brought life and immortality to light." With Him life and immortality always go together. In fact, they mean exactly the same thing. Christ uses "life" again and again for "eternal life": "I am come that they might have LIFE." "Believing in me ye have LIFE." "The resurrection unto LIFE." "Ye will not come to me that ye might have LIFE." "I am the LIFE." He announces that there is a kind of life which is beyond the reach and touch of decay and death. It is a kind of life which goes on; it is a life which has an endless power. It is not something future; it is already present. "This is life eternal—to know thee." "He that hath the Son hath eternal life." Christ uses the term "resurrection" for the act of rising out of the natural life into this spiritual life which is eternal. "I am the resurrection; he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." This teaching has brought an absolutely new fact to the world. It tells us that death is not a break in the continuity of life at all. It is merely a sloughing off of the body, and an entrance into an environment which fits and satisfies our spiritual needs. The life goes on in another of God's many dwelling places with powers unweakened and with forces fresh and strong. "Where I am there you are going to be" is all we need to know about the "place." "We shall know as we are known" is all we need to be told about the manner of the life. One cannot see the effect of this new view of life better than in the change which it wrought in Paul. In his earlier days death was to him the supreme "enemy." He had known what it was to live "in bondage to the fear of death." He was chained to a "body of death"—i.e., to a mortal body, and under a "law of death." Christ set him free from all this. The one purpose of his life after this was to experience the power of the resurrection—the renewing life over which death is powerless. Now note the result! You find this man who had formerly been in bondage to the fear of death crying out in a rapture: "I am in a strait betwixt two. I cannot tell whether I prefer to live or to die! To live is Christ and His service, but to die is gain"! Just this effect Christ works upon all who really have Him in their lives, so that the goal is no longer the grave—but that life which is life indeed.

A PARTICULAR CASE OF THE FULFILLING THE OLD.

THERE is nothing new under the sun. We often think we have made a new discovery or started a new movement or method, but as soon as we make it known to the world half a dozen persons appear who have made the same discovery or who can tell us how many times the same method has already been tried. An ancient report has just come to hand which has caused these reflections. It is a report* of a general committee from seven American yearly meetings held in Baltimore in 1833—seventy years ago. It is a perfect forecast, almost in detail, of the Five Years Meeting and the Uniform Discipline which have seemed to some Friends like innovations.

This report starts out with the assumption that Friends, “however widely scattered,” should be “one body.” It then proceeds to point out that steps should be taken to secure “greater uniformity and agreement” in the Disciplines of the several yearly meetings, and finally it mentions a number of matters which can be best worked out by a general conference or in “whatever mode may be best adapted to the [accomplishment of the] object.” This central body, the report suggests, would undertake to unify the Disciplines, set up, divide or lay down yearly meetings, look after the circulation of literature and matters of historical interest, present memorials to the general government and carry on work in behalf of the African descendants. This is precisely the idea of the now existing Five Years Meeting. Its scope has merely been widened to include the other activities which time has made a part of the work of the Christian man and woman of to-day. One year ago this month a group of Friends, meeting in the city of Indianapolis, carried out in a practical way what this other group seventy years ago sketched out in their report to the several yearly meetings. The spirit and plan of the earlier day have been exactly fulfilled, almost to the letter.

So much for history. Now a word upon an existing situation. There is a little company of Friends in one quarterly meeting of North Carolina who have decided to secede from their yearly meeting because this latter body has joined the Five Years Meeting and adopted the Uniform Discipline. We would not make too much of this event. It is a sad relic of an ancient disease which has played havoc in Quakerism from its early days. It is great to suffer or to die for principles; it is quite another thing to make a schism in the Church through a failure to see what the issue really is. The Five Years Meeting is organized merely to add efficiency and power to the work of the Church. It cannot tyrannize over a yearly meeting. Each yearly meeting still has all the opportunity it wishes for providing in its Discipline for everything which its own work and peculiar needs suggest. The real point which these Friends raise is that the Uniform Discipline abolishes birthright membership. It does in the same way that correct astronomy abolishes sunrise! Correct astronomy teaches that the sun does not rise. It is the earth that moves instead. The only real difference in either case is the change of name—the change of a word. As a matter of fact, the Uniform Discipline provides better for birthright membership than the old Disciplines did, and in a way more in harmony with the methods of early Friends’ meetings. This point might well be studied before it is made the occasion of a schism in the Church.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

KANSAS Yearly Meeting opens this week in Wichita, which will be the Mecca for Friends from the entire State. It is sure to be an important gathering, and there are indications that it will be an occasion long to be remembered.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE DIFFERENT YEARLY MEETINGS:

TO THE YEARLY MEETINGS OF NEW ENGLAND, NEW YORK, BALTIMORE, VIRGINIA, NORTH CAROLINA, OHIO AND INDIANA.

Committees of the different yearly meetings above mentioned having met in Baltimore, agreeably to appointment, on the 1st day of the Seventh month, 1833, proceeded to the consideration of the subjects directed to their attention by the several yearly meetings.

The weight of responsibility of our appointment, and the duties now devolving upon us have been felt to be peculiarly impressive, not only from the nature of the subjects demanding our attention, but from the circumstances that many of those who are under this appointment are now absent, as well as from other considerations that have had an influence on our minds at the present time.

We are aware that from the wide extent over which the Society is spread, and from a variety of other causes, it is not easy for all who may be under such an appointment to give their attendance; yet we have very forcibly felt in our present situation the caution, how far we may form conclusions on the subjects before us, or make propositions to the meetings by which we have been appointed. But, while on the one hand the necessity of this guard has been seen, we have believed that the duties of our appointment demand that we should suggest with freedom the views which have been presented to our minds during our deliberations on the present occasion.

In humbly waiting on the Great Head of the Church, and, we trust, under a measure of His holy and cementing influence, we have been renewedly made sensible that the design of infinite wisdom in gathering and preserving the Society as a distinct people, has been, that they should be, however widely scattered, one body, holding the same precious

* This report is printed in the present number of this paper.

Truth, and bound together by the bonds of Gospel fellowship, Christian communion, and brotherly love; that we should be members one of another, having so near and intimate a relation to each other that if one member (or portion of the body) suffer all the members suffer with it, and if one member be honored all the members rejoice with it. This intimate relation of the different parts of the body to each other, and the strength they instrumentally derive from participating together of the one vital source of strength and consolation lies at the foundation of our religious institution. It is on this general ground that meetings both for worship and discipline have been established; and for this mutual assistance the connection and gradation of meetings for business have led from preparative to monthly, from monthly to quarterly, from quarterly to yearly meetings. The connection and subordination established by this order, it is well known, has been for rendering mutual assistance, and tenderly taking care of the flock. To preserve the relation in which the several yearly meetings stand to each other, as making up one body, united "by joints and bands," our epistolary correspondence was instituted and has been maintained, and at different periods committees, by special invitation, have been sent by one or more yearly meetings to unite with the meeting making the request, in the consideration of important subjects. And the separate meeting of committees, in the capacity in which we are now convened, has been adopted as occasions have appeared to demand. We do not look to stated or frequent recurrence of meetings of committees of this character, but we apprehend that the best interests of our Society demand, that the necessity of mutual counsel and assistance, in cases of a general nature, should be strongly impressed on the minds of Friends. While the yearly meetings must exercise their own discretion in fulfilling these reciprocal obligations in such manner as the wisdom of the Great Head of the Church may direct, whether by epistolary communications or by committees from the several yearly meetings, mingling with the meeting requesting assistance, or by committees in general conference, or whatever mode may be best adapted to the object.

Under these solemn impressions we have approached to consideration of the specific subjects referred to us by the different yearly meetings. These may chiefly be comprehended in three divisions. First, the setting up and discontinuance of yearly meetings, with the different objects connected with or growing out of such proceedings. Second, a greater uniformity and agreement of the Disciplines of the several yearly meetings, in their more important points. And, lastly, the examination and circulation of books of a doctrinal or historical character, effecting the reputation or interests of the Society, together with the presentation of memorials to the general government on behalf of the African descendants.

In regard to the setting up and laying down of yearly meetings, and what may be necessarily connected with such transactions, we apprehend there is a general assent throughout the Society that some regulations touching these objects are demanded. We have no doubt that it is the prevailing sentiment in the different yearly meetings that the body of the Society should be, in some way, consulted on such occasions. If, therefore, it should be found that the subject has so long rested on the minds of Friends as to have ripened into a conclusion that no single yearly meeting should take a step of so much importance; if Friends are prepared (which we have no doubt is the case), when a yearly meeting is impressed with a belief that it would be proper for it to be divided, or for its own character as a yearly meeting to cease—to communicate their prospect to the other yearly meetings and invite their participation in the concern—we do not apprehend that any injury will arise from our not proposing the manner in which that assistance may be afforded. The several yearly meetings so invited will exercise their own discretion and freedom, whether to participate in the consideration or not, or whether in rendering their fraternal assistance to do it by written communications or by committees to meet at the yearly meeting concerned, or elsewhere.

The second subject, relating to the discrepancies now found in the Disciplines of the several yearly meetings has also engaged our weighty deliberation. These discrepancies on important points affecting the order of Society, the intercourse of meetings and the rights of membership, or cases requiring disownment have increased to an extent involving, as we apprehend, very serious consequences at present, and portending, unless some remedy should be applied, results which cannot be anticipated without a deep feeling of concern. We are aware, however, that notwithstanding the importance of this object has long been felt, and perhaps before this time universally acknowledged in the Society, it will necessarily be a work of time, and even the very manner of obtaining it will require still further to be ripened in the minds of Friends. But, as we continue under the concern, as we look for the unfoldings of that wisdom by which alone the prosperity of the Church can be promoted, the difficulties which now appear to be in the way will be removed; and the prevalence of harmony and brotherly love and the nearer approximation of our codes of Discipline, will be advanced together. If this concern should rest on the minds of Friends of the several yearly meetings, and when any of these may apprehend that any important change of a general nature in their own Disciplines may be attended with advantage, this information should be communicated to the other yearly meetings, with an invitation in brother love for their participation in the consideration of the subject, we doubt not that way will be made for such an interchange of sentiment and feeling as will tend to promote the desired object. The wisdom which is from above, as it is waited for, we believe will not only incline our hearts to bear one another's burdens, but will point out the manner by which the united sense of the body can be most effectually obtained.

The sanctioning of works affecting the character of the Society and the presentation of memorials to the general government are both subjects of importance, and have been forwarded for the consideration of this committee. In our deliberations on them we have believed that an increasing concern prevails in the Society at large, that a greater guard may be placed around them. The Disciplines of the respective yearly meetings have included them within the constitutional powers of the several meetings for sufferings. And yet, on particular occasions of importance, assistance has been invited by some of those meetings and rendered by others; in some cases by written communications, and in others by committees. The prevalence of brotherly love and a deep sense of the relations in which the different parts of the Society stand to each other, we apprehend will preserve, if not increase, the freedom which has heretofore existed between those meetings in opening the way for mutual counsel and assistance in cases of general interest and unusual importance, and in such manner as best wisdom may direct. The greater facility of circulating Friends' books is also a subject interesting to the Society at large.

The question proposed by one of the yearly meetings—whether there should be stated times fixed for meetings of committees from the several yearly meetings—has not escaped our attention. We consider it virtually answered in the foregoing part of this report, so far as we think it competent for us to answer. No such arrangement has appeared to us to be necessary, but that the whole subject of mutual counsel and interchange of sentiment and feeling between the several yearly meetings be left with those bodies, for them to move in, as the consideration of particular subjects may demand, and the wisdom of Truth dictate.

Signed on behalf of a meeting of Committee of the Yearly Meetings aforesaid, held at Baltimore, on the 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th of the Seventh month, 1833, by Thomas Howland, Samuel Parsons, Hugh Balderston, Thomas Ladd, Nathan Mendenhall, Benjamin Wright, William Hobbs, Anne Mott, Dorothy Hopkins, Rebecca T. Updegraff, Margaret Morris.

(The foregoing report was deliberately read in the [North Carolina] Yearly Meeting the same year and approved.)

THE HABIT OF HOLINESS.

BY ROBERT E. SPEER.

"Whether she had any theory for it, I do not know," wrote Horace Bushnell of his mother and her ways with her children, "but it came to pass somehow that while she was concerned above all things to make her children Christians, she undertook little in the way of an immediate divine experience, but let herself down, for the most part, upon the level of habit, and condescended to stay upon matters of habit as being her heavenly allotted field, only keeping visibly an upward look of expectation, that what she may so prepare in righteous habit will be a house builded for the occupancy of the Spirit. Her stress was laid thus on industry, time, fidelity, reverence, neatness, truth, intelligence, prayer. And the drill of the house in these was to be the hope, in a great degree, of religion."

No one needs to be convinced of the wisdom of Dotha Bushnell's emphasis on the mission of habit in the discipline of life, in the simple virtues, and in fitting it for religious use. For life is bound to set itself in habits of one sort or another and each habit is alike a qualification for what lies in the line of its moral relationships and a disqualification for all else. To prepare a child for the unbiased decision of the issues of life by refraining from fixing it in habits of thought and purpose, which though approved by father and mother, yet do involve judgment upon the issues to be settled, is deliberately to choose to give odds to a decision in favor of the contrary judgment. Not to solidify a child's ways in industry, is to school it in the habit of indolence; to slight order is to assure confusion, and veracity, untrustworthiness. And all these habits of selfishness and unfaithfulness are disqualifications for religion, which demands a habit of right will, and sees in infidelity of opinion only a fruit of the habit of infidelity in the character.

HABIT A SERVANT TO SPIRITUALITY.

All this is simple enough. In the region of common morality where religion meets the daily problems of an honest life, we all assign habit a large place, and recognize its necessity and power. But the same principles reach up into what men call the higher religious life as well. The habit of veracity toward men is not more a habit than the habit of tenderness toward God. And if in the realm of righteousness, which Matthew Arnold calls "but a heightened conduct," habit thus plays its part as truly as in simple conduct, so also in holiness, which Arnold calls "but a heightened righteousness," may we expect to find it at work too. Indeed, holiness is not holiness at all, but only a sporadic effort thereafter until it has become a habit; that is, "a mode of action so established by us as to be entirely natural, involuntary, instinctive, unconscious and uncontrollable." Holiness is not an occasional victorious resolution of the will to do right. Neither is it the placid triumph over all struggle and the extirpation of all that is imperfect and weak. It is the love of righteousness grown into a passion, refusing to accept defeat or defect of effort toward ideals, and touched with piercing love of the God of holiness and right, plus, among us, the tender apprehension and inward vital acceptance of Jesus. Holiness is more than the mere purpose of right behavior. It is this kindled into light and heat by living contact with God in Christ.

Such holiness must itself become the habit of our life. Not a few are willing to rise at intervals into the consciousness of Christ, and to behold as in His presence, and to be for the moment inter-penetrated with His power. But their holiness is occasional, not habitual; and is therefore not holiness at all, but only holy impulse. When Paul, however, declares, "To me to live is Christ," or, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me," he is describing an ideal of experience, whether he had himself yet realized it or not, which is holiness grained into habit, and thus become effective and real.

And not only is holiness itself only real when it is habit, but the other habits of a righteous life are only safe when bound on to the habit of holiness as their root and sanction and security. "The grand first thing, or chief concern for us," as Bushnell said, "is to be simply Christed all through, filled in every faculty and member with His Christly manifestation, in that manner to be so interwoven with Him as to cross fiber, and feel throughout the quickening contact of His personality; and then everything in us, no matter what, will be made the most of, because the corresponding Christly talent will be playing divinely with it, and charging it with power from Himself." And it is not only the efficiency of talents and acts which thus pours out from holiness, but in this alone is to be found the efficiency of common habit, too. Unless our habits of honesty, temperance, unselfishness and purity derive from and ever return to the habit of a holy will in the heart yearning Christwards, we cannot trust them.

HABIT EXPRESSES THE INNER LIFE.

"To do Thy will the habit of my heart"—that is the secret and source of all righteous habit. "Who-soever is begotten of God," says John, "doeth no sin because his seed abideth in him." The new life of holiness is not a divine resolution wrought supernaturally by the God who acts thus once in men and then withdraws. It is the development of a divine principle abiding within, the unfolding of a permanent habit of holiness inconsistent with sin and warring against sin, until at last the good work of God begun within is perfected, and sin destroyed on the threshold of the new life from which it is debarred.

Good habit is a good thing even unrooted in holiness, but divorced from holiness it wants three things—a standard for correction, the will to suspect itself and even retest itself by its standard, and the power to rise from defeat and never rest until it attains. High purpose excluding holiness accomplished all it could in the invigorating and inspiring life of Huxley. Where could a better statement of it be found than in Huxley's lecture at the South London Working Men's College, on "A Liberal Education": "That man I think has had a liberal education, who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that as a mechanism it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold logic engine, with all its parts of equal strength and in smooth working order; ready like a steam engine to be turned to any kind of work, and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the love of her operations; one who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to heel by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself."

Yet side by side with this quotation, in his "Life and Letters," are statements like this from Sir Joseph Hooker. "That he subsequently carried the use of tobacco to excess, is, I think, unquestionable. I repeatedly remonstrated with him, at last I think (by backing his medical advisers), with effect," and this humorous letter to Professor Rolleston, "Nothing but gross and disgusting intemperance, Sir, was the cause of all my evil. And now that I have been a teetotaler for nine months and have cut down my food supply to about half of what I used to eat, the enemy is beaten." And this serious statement, which he never dreamed was a confession, to E. D. Collings, "The circumstances of my life have led me to experience all sorts of conditions in regard to alcohols, from total abstinence to nearly the other end of the scale, and my clear conviction is the less the better, though I by no means feel called upon to forego the comforting and cheering effect of a little. But for no conceivable consideration would I use it to whip up a tired or sluggish brain. Indeed for me there is no working time so good as between breakfast and lunch, when there is not a trace of alcohol in my composition." It is not necessary to comment further on these quotations than to point out the naive unconsciousness of what instantly strikes a man who challenges his habits by the standards of a holy life.

HOLINESS THE TUTOR OF HABIT.

So challenged there was defect enough in Oliver Cromwell, but the quality in him which Milton so admired and praised in "The Second Defense of the People of England" is the quality which is here set forth as essential, the quality of a right submission of his habits to Christ. Thus it came that "he was a soldier disciplined to perfection in the knowledge of himself. He had either extinguished, or by habit had learned to subdue, the whole host of vain hopes, fears and passions which infest the soul. He first acquired the government of himself; and over himself acquired the most signal victories; so that on the first day he took the field against the external enemy, he was a veteran in arms, consummately practiced in the toils and exigencies of war." The attempt to acquire the habit of holiness had directed him into habits of discipline and integrity in the entire field of his life.

Whether in speech or in conduct, opinion of truth or judgment of men, in moral life or taste or disposition, in temper or service, our habits need the tuition of holiness and its restraint. There is no sure road to invariable right opinions, acts and words save the road of habit. No man can be sure of thinking, acting and speaking right at any one time who is not in the habit of doing it at all times, and the only way to attain the habit is not to err in the act. To acquire the habit of temperance, for example, the man must never in one act venture to excess. To acquire the habit of veracity, he must never in one word depart from the truth. But who can attain in this way? It is not the only way. The habit of holiness can be created in us by supernatural donation. By one wrench God is able and willing to reverse the currents of a man's life. He will not abolish education or leap over the whole process of development, but he will alter the governing principle of our life for us when it needs altering, and set us thus in the way of possessing the habit of holiness. And if our governing principle is already corrected to conform to his purpose for life, he will foster our taste for holiness into habit, and empower thus our life in all common moralities by bathing it in the uncommon spiritual strength of holiness inwrought into habit and thus become character.—“The Interior.”

HEAD-FAITH; HEART-FAITH.

BY BISHOP H. W. WARREN.

Faith, the great essential of salvation and union with God, includes both head and heart. Faith of the head may exist without that of the heart. The devils have it and tremble. But heart-faith goes far beyond. It may build on head-faith for a foundation, but foundation is an abortion without the superstructure.

Heart-faith is a spiritual perception of the invisible realities of religion. Faith is the giving of substance to things hoped for, the test of the things not seen. It “ventures on God's side when probabilities are equal, on the guarantee of something within which makes the thing true because loved.” How much more is received from a statement of a wife or child beloved than from the same statement of Herodotus or Pliny. So credence of statements from God loved with all the heart, soul and might, means more than acceptance of the same statements of God unloved.

This distinction began to be preached by Moses. “If thou turn unto thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul.” (Deut. 30: 10.) And this “word” is quoted by Paul: “If thou shalt believe in thy heart . . . for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness.” (Romans 10: 9, 10.)

We marvel to find these fine metaphysical distinctions away back in what we are wont to esteem the beginnings of thought. The grand Shema that was meant to be taught to every Jewish child thus discriminated: “Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord, and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy might.” Paul perpetuates the distinction. “I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless.”

It is not strange that God seeks the whole of His children, since He gives the whole of Himself to them. “All things are yours, things present, or things to come.” Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it.

Oh little heart of mine! Shall pain
Or sorrow make thee moan,

When all this God is all for thee,
A Father all thine own?

We often hear the recitation of the magnificent credo by thousands. To their hearty and thorough head-faith in the theological propositions, how we wish a tender and loving heart-faith could be added.

This is to be wished because it adds so much efficiency, brightness and bloom to character. A rose is beautiful to the eye. Besides that, it is atmospherized afar with delicious fragrance. Besides that some roses are freighted more preciously by being made the expression of one heart's love for another. So men may be as pure as a diamond, strong as steel; but a heart-faith atmospheres them with so much love that it fills all space and all time, for all men and for God besides.

Thrice blest are those whose lives are faithful prayers,
Whose loves in higher love endure.

Coleridge said that the act of praying is the very highest outgoing of energy of which man is capable. Epaphras labored fervently for the Colossians in his prayers. And Paul beseeches his Roman converts by the Lord Jesus Christ and by the love of the Spirit, to strive together with him in prayers for his deliverance. Strong, rugged frames of free men are not the only ones to whom highest work is given. The chambers of the shut-in saints may be workshops for two worlds. But to this end there must be more than intellectual acceptance of theological dogmas. Missions are founded and forwarded now in heathen lands as they were at first in Judea. There is work, sacrifice, martyrdom; but the real power is gotten in the prayers of the upper chambers. Paul's third heaven visions were immediately consequent to his being stoned at Lystra. The angel of the Lord opened the prison doors for Peter, and stood by Paul in every time of need. But these visitations would not have come to Peter as a mere fisher of fish, nor to Paul as a mere maker of tents, nor as mere intellectual believers that Christ was the Son of God. It is when we undertake work too great for us that God comes to help. This is done only when every faculty of man is bent to its highest task.

For this high possibility every pains needs to be taken for the culture of heart-faith. On a matter of such importance to us, and I may reverently say, to God, surely the Scriptures will give ample directions. In that most precious Epistle to the Ephesians, 6: 18, we find “praying at all seasons with all prayer, and supplication in the Spirit and watching thereunto with all perseverance and all supplication for all saints,” and for Paul in various particulars. So Romans 12: 6-10 gives a complete schedule of athletic exercises for the development of this highest excellence in perfect character.

It is evident that such an efficient character must include more than self. It embraces heart-faith for all saints, all preachers, all men “abounding in love for all men.” (1 Thess. 3: 12.) This makes a man with growing intensity tower up toward the characteristics of God. Like father, like child.

Denver, Col.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

The forty-sixth annual assembly of Friends in Western Yearly Meeting was held in Plainfield, Ind., fourteen miles southwest of Indianapolis, Ninth month 17th to 23d, 1903. The weather was quite cool, but clear and bright, permitting a large attendance, particularly on First-day, when thousands came by steam road, electric line and private vehicle to worship and to greet acquaintances. Four gospel meetings were in progress simultaneously, both morning and afternoon, in the house and on the spacious campus. Plainfield is the site of the State Reform School for Boys, and the opportunity to extend the blessings of the yearly meeting to the inmates is always used by some of the visiting ministry and others.

Those in attendance from other fields were as follows, viz.: Nathan T. and Esther Frame, Ohio; William P. Pinkham, Ohio; James R. Jones and Carrie L. Jones, North Carolina; Alfred J. Hanson, Iowa; Daisy Barr, Indiana; Richard R. Newby, Iowa; Parker Moon, Kansas; Martha J. Hinson, Iowa; Ida P. Parker, Indiana; A. C. Kenyon, Kansas; F. H. Tormohlen, Indiana; Eli B. and Mary J. Mendenhall, Iowa; Clarkson M. Shawley, Indiana; Lindon L. Hobbs, North Carolina; Walter W. and Nellie M. Brown, Indiana; Josiah R. Hawkins, Indiana; Benjamin J. Mills, Indiana; Emory J. Rees and wife, Sarah Lindley, Mary Pickett, missionaries; John Waldo Woody, of N. C., and Edgar L. Sanders, of Iowa, Volunteer Students; President Robert L. Kelly, Earlham College; Prof. Cyrus W. Hodgkin, Earlham College; President Henry Edwin McGrew, Pacific College; Ezra Sanders; John L. Kittrell and Benjamin Hawkins, Wilmington; Willis R. Hotchkiss, Africa, and Allen Jay, Indiana.

EDUCATION.

The predominating note of this year's sessions was probably education and church extension. The splendid report of Earlham College gave impetus to the already strengthening sentiment along educational lines. The reports of the president, treasurer and board of trustees were all highly satisfactory, showing the college to be in a most flourishing condition, both financially and spiritually. Through the generosity of Francis T. White, and the loyal support of the two yearly meetings in charge of the college the entire building debt has been wiped out and the endowment increased during the past year. In addition to this there was a gain in the administration account instead of a loss as heretofore. The endowment fund now amounts to $249,912.10. This year shows the largest enrollment in the history of the college, the first week's attendance being 16 per cent. in excess of that for any opening week before. The enrollment last year reached 320, including 37 graduates. The following table shows the denominations represented among the students: Friends, 157; Presbyterians, 23; Episcopalians, 10; Lutherans, 6; Methodist Episcopal, 44; German Reformed, 1;

United Brethren, 2; Christian Disciples, 16; Catholics, 3; Evangelicals, 3; Universalists, 2; non-church members, 53.

The report concerning the Biblical Department was especially encouraging, there being 12 or 14 more students enrolled than ever before for any year. This was the more pleasing in view of the fact that the names and locations of 24 students from that department now in mission work were announced to the yearly meeting.

The report on Bible Schools and Education, by the superintendent, Peter W. Raidabaugh, showed an enrollment of 295 students in the four academies under care of the yearly meeting. It was the expressed conviction of the meeting that more time on the program should be given hereafter to the Sabbath School report, the growing importance of that work seeming to merit greater attention.

All these cheering reports, together with the presence of Presidents Hobbs, of Guilford; McGrew, of Pacific, and Kelly, of Earlham, served to give great prominence to educational work, and President Hobbs' appeal in the interest of the Harriet Greene Memorial Department for Bible Instruction at Guilford was peculiarly in place. About $150 was raised in the face of the meeting, and several subscribed in private.

EVANGELISTIC AND PASTORAL WORK.

The report of Thomas C. Brown, superintendent of the above-named department, showed pleasing progress along the line of material equipment, there having been expended for building purposes during the year the sum of $27,673.60.

The number of meetings in the yearly meeting is 115, to which 843 accessions and 811 losses were reported during the year, making a net gain of 32. These meetings expended for the work $15,094.14. Thirty meetings supported pastors, and forty-three gave partial support.

The superintendent reported aggressive work done along evangelistic and pastoral lines. He advocated better support for pastors and more care in revising lists of membership, so that names should not be dropped without sufficient reason. In the representative meeting on Fifth-day evening the question of better support to the weaker meetings was discussed freely, the preponderance of sentiment seeming to favor the strengthening and extension of the pastoral system.

There are 172 ministers in the yearly meeting, and a total membership of 15,230, of which 2,351 are non-residents. Eight hundred and forty-three accessions and 811 losses were reported. Fifteen hundred and sixty-three non-members habitually attend the meetings of Friends. The number of meetings, including five missions, is 114, of which 22 are entirely without pastors. Thirty meetings support pastors and 43 give pastoral support; $15,094.14 were expended for evangelistic and church extension work during the year; 1,523 members use tobacco, and 79 cultivate or sell it. One thousand dollars, the largest sum ever raised for the purpose, was subscribed for evangelistic and pastoral work.

SOCIAL PURITY.

In connection with this department is the Working Girls' Home of Indianapolis, known as the Bertha Ballard Home. This institution is not directly controlled by Friends, but is very closely related to the work of the Church, besides being managed by Friends. From 10 rooms, accommodating 16 girls, the Home has grown in a few years to a building of 45 rooms, furnishing a delightful Christian home for 65 girls. The rooms are never vacant except for a few days. Sixty-nine are waiting for admission now. One inmate is from London, and an inquiry has come from Canada. During the year the Home management served 77,754 meals, this representing an increase of 10,000 meals over the previous year; 1,080 visitors registered during the year. Rosa Brown is matron of the Home, and Drusilla Wilson, of Carmel, Indiana, was appointed superintendent of the Social Purity work. A collection was taken, amounting to $42.97, the same to be divided equally between the Bertha Ballard Home and the Door of Hope work for fallen women at Indianapolis.

EARLHAM BIBLE INSTITUTE.

The work of the Earlham Bible Institute was thoroughly discussed. The feeling was expressed that too few ministers and workers from Western Yearly Meeting were in attendance at the Institute. Some desired that the Institute should circulate among the three yearly meetings which support it, viz.: Wilmington, Indiana and Western, but the plan did not receive the sanction of the meeting. Those who have attended the Institute were found to be its warmest advocates. The books chosen for the correspondence course this year are: "History of New Testament Times in Palestine" and "The Church of the Early Fathers." The following persons were appointed as members of the Institute Committee, viz.: Lydia Taylor Painter, Morton C. Pearson and Richard Haworth.

TEMPERANCE.

The temperance session was eloquently addressed by Hon. Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago, and strong resolutions were adopted. Eli J. Carter was appointed superintendent of the work on suppression of the liquor traffic.

PEACE.

Prof. Cyrus W. Hodgkin addressed the yearly meeting on the subject of Peace. His lecture was a scholarly and logical presentation of the fact that a warlike policy wastes the best blood and substance of a nation, while in the way of peace alone lies national prosperity and security. He arrived at this conclusion by a logical and inductive argument, beginning with the early Christian Church as the first peace society in the world, and tracing the rise and fall of nations in the light of their policy with regard to war and peace.

Albert L. Copeland and Alma Hadley Reeve were appointed on the Advisory Board of the Peace Association of Friends.

UNIFORM DISCIPLINE.

The Uniform Discipline became operative in this yearly meeting at the close of the annual session at Plainfield. Additions were made to the Discipline, as follows:

1. A minute of advice to be embodied in the Discipline of Western Yearly Meeting.

"In view of our responsibility as Christian citizens, and of the alarming power of the liquor traffic and the use of intoxicating beverages for evil, and under a sense of our obligation to society and the country at large, this meeting would advise the following query to be read and seriously considered in our monthly meetings once a year or oftener:

"Are Friends careful in exercising their right of suffrage to cast their ballots for such candidates only as are known to be opposed to the liquor traffic and pledged to its suppression?"

2. All additions to the Discipline to be printed in brackets.

3. The yearly meeting trustees shall be ex-officio members of the Permanent Board.

4. Some paragraphs on the rights of property, trustees, etc.

5. A provision allowing an offender to make acknowledgement.

6. Language of the old Discipline adopted on question of adjusting difficulties without law.

7. Pastors authorized to call the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight.

8. The chairman of the Quarterly Meeting's Evangelistic Committee shall meet with the Yearly Meeting's Committee at least once a year.

9. No applicant shall be received or released without the consent of two-thirds of the members present at the monthly meeting.

MISSIONS.

The reports from the various fields were full and highly gratifying, showing steady progress along permanent lines, in Africa, Cuba and Mexico. The superintendent of the Woman's Foreign Missionary work, Sarah J. King, reported an increasing interest in missionary literature, and the reports from all parts of the field showed that Friends are working along the modern line whereby certain meetings and individuals become responsible for the support of a definite enterprise or missionary.

NOTES.

Memorials were read for Jesse C. Mills, Nathan D. Knight and Jefferson Jackson, followed by tender expressions of love and appreciation on the part of the membership.

Visiting ministers were heard to comment favorably upon the manner and speed used in conducting the business of the meeting.

Lewis E. Stout, of Plainfield, was reappointed as clerk.

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS, OF PHILADELPHIA
YEARLY MEETING.

All communications should be addressed to

ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS, Editor, 343 E. Main Street, Haddonfield, N. J.

The Executive Committee of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting was held at Friends' Institute on the 28th ult., and the outline for the winter's work was presented by the large number in attendance. Ten thousand and sixty-two pages of literature have been distributed through the summer, 500 temperance papers and magazines, and 32 portions of Scripture.

The address of the Representative of the Religious Society of Friends for Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, on the use of intoxicating drinks, will be sent out with a personal letter by the Temperance Association.

Will the Friend who requested the tract, "A Battle, as it Appeared to an Eye-Witness," by Rowland B. Howard, please send name and address to the editor of the Temperance columns?

NOTES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

The question of compensating liquor dealers who may fail to secure a renewal of their licenses is now agitating the English people.

As a result of the restoration of the license system in Vermont, intoxication during the month increased at the ratio of three to one as compared with the previous year and month.

From unquestioned authority we learn that in the next Congress the canteen question is to be revived, as neither the War Department nor its liquor allies are willing to let the matter rest as it is.

The statistics of the Imperial Health Office show that the total spent on alcoholic liquors in 1902 throughout the German Empire was about $625,000,000, an average per head for persons over fifteen years old of $35.

Frances Willard's memory was honored on her birthday, Ninth month 28th, when, with impressive ceremony, the cornerstone of the new Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital was laid in the city of Chicago.

The liquor problem so far as the business world is concerned is in process of natural solution. Railroads, corporations, business men, have put their ban on the drink habit. Even the saloonkeeper demands a sober man behind the bar.

Reports come from many towns in Ohio and Indiana, where saloons were recently closed, that men are secretly made drunk and then turned loose in the streets to create the impression that more liquor is used under the reign of prohibition than under that of license.

Because the Maine Legislature, by an overwhelming majority, refused to resubmit prohibition to the people, "Mida's Criterion" says:

"Very narrow in their views, very fearful of public opinion, and very much wedded to their idol, the harsh people of Maine are the least progressive of any community in America, unless it be the natives of Northern Alaska."

A congress against alcoholism is to meet at the Ecole de Medicine, France, under the honorary presidency of M. Casimir-Perier, on Tenth month 26th. Dr. Bourillon, a former deputy, who is now director of an asylum for convalescents near Paris, is taking an active part in the organization of this assembly, and is receiving numerous letters of approval and adhesion every day. He predicts that the congress will create a great stir, and he asks how it could be otherwise, when the tremendous havoc wrought by alcohol, by so-called "appetizers," and, above all, by absinth, the national poison, is considered.

The report of the Committee on School Text Books before the Pennsylvania State Medical Society has aroused the indignation of Women's Christian Temperance Union members throughout the State.

Dr. Harriett French, a prominent member of the W. C. T. U. said: "Those text books are not of our composition. We are not publishers. They were compiled by scientists who knew what they were about. We simply gave our indorsement. What we desire is that there shall be a scientific teaching of the evil effects of alcohol, and if this is done we do not care what text book is used."

THE BREMEN INTERNATIONAL ANTI-ALCOHOL CONGRESS.

German scientists have made the world their debtor for their exact experimentations which show the character and effects of alcoholic beverages, but the results of these findings of science have not in that country, to any great extent, been made matters of universal popular knowledge.

In the United States, first of all nations, laws have been enacted making instruction in this subject as a part of the laws of health compulsory for all pupils in the public schools of the nation. The facts concerning the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks have been put into simple language in text books adapted to the progressive grades of public schools. Our most effective laws specify that there shall be at least thirty lessons per year, from the first primary to the end of the first year of the high school, making, for the nine years, two hundred and seventy lessons in all in the whole subject of physiology and hygiene, a due proportion of which is devoted to the effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics.

The fact that the Bremen Congress numbered nearly fifteen hundred members from fifteen different nations shows the interest in this question in countries usually considered prejudiced in favor of alcohol. Five days were given to the profound discussion of every phase of the subject, including especially experimental and other research on the physiological and sociological results following the beverage use of alcohol even in what is termed "moderate amounts." The papers and discussions of these topics were chiefly by men from the universities and other institutions of learning of Europe. The facts against the beverage use of alcoholic drinks, facts which, disputed by the lovers of and dealers in those drinks, we are teaching in the public schools of the United States, were abundantly confirmed.

A marked impression, which is already reported to have stimulated action in five different nations, was made by facts derived from the last census and other official data presented at the Congress by the writer. These facts show that this education has helped secure the increase of 4.1 years in the average length of life in the decade preceding the last census, the greater sobriety of the American workman which is acknowledged to be one factor in the commercial success of the United States, and the decline in the rate of increase of the use of alcoholic drinks—the returns of the Internal Revenue Department showing that during the last eleven years, in which this study has been quite generally taught in the schools, the gain in their per capita consumption was only one-third as great as in the preceding eleven years when there was little or no study of the subject. That there was even this gain was largely due to the enormous influx of alcoholic drinkers, as immigrants, during this time.

Temperance education in the schools is already so much of a world movement that great interest attaches to the inquiry why such gratifying results are following this educational method of preventing alcoholism in one country and not in every other. Thus the questions of what is taught and of methods are of live interest.—Mary H. Hunt.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A TEMPERANCE BIBLE LESSON.

BY L. ELLA HARTLEY.

1. What account have we in the Bible of the formation of a Total Abstinence Society?

Jer. 35: 6: "But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons forever."

2. What was the promised reward for steadfastness to their vow?

Jer. 35: 19: "Therefore thus saith the Lord. . . . Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me forever."

3. What was the Nazarite vow?

Num. 6: 3: "He shall separate himself from wine and strong drink."

4. As Sampson was a Nazarite from his birth to his death, and the greatest example of physical strength on record, may this not have been due partly to the abstinence of his mother?

Judges 13: 13, 14: "And the angel of the Lord said unto Manoah, Of all that I said unto the woman let her beware. She may not eat of anything that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink."

5. The prophet Daniel was noted for great strength of character. To what may we attribute this?

Dan. 1: 8: "But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself."

6. The New Testament presents a character in the person of John the Baptist who possessed extraordinary spiritual power. Under what prohibitory law did he live and labor?

Luke 1: 15: "For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink."

7. Why should the physical strength of Samson, and the mental and moral strength of Daniel, and the spiritual strength of John the Baptist, be coveted by the young men of the present day?

Prov. 20: 29: "The glory of young men is their strength."

8. What condemnation rests upon that class who choose indulgence rather than abstinence?

Isa. 5: 22: "Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine."

Isa. 28: 3: "The drunkards of Ephraim shall be trodden under foot."

9. What does the Bible give as some of the consequences of the drink habit?

Prov. 23: 29, 30: "Who hath woe? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine."

10. Since strong drink debauches the physical being, defiles the moral nature and destroys the spiritual possibilities of men, what sweeping anathema has been pronounced upon those who disregard their best interests in these respects?

1 Cor. 3: 17: "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

11. What is the sad climax of all the woes in the Bible pronounced against the drunkard?

1 Cor. 6: 10: "Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, . . . shall inherit the kingdom of God."

12. Since the sin of an individual in the line of drunkenness cannot escape punishment, is this equally true of a nation?

Isa. 5: 11, 13, 14: "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning that they may follow strong drink. . . . Therefore my people are gone into captivity. . . . Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure."

13. Is wrongdoing, that has the sanction of law, any less sinful?

Ps. 94: 20: "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by law?"

14. Does the saloon keeper, though a total abstainer himself, come under the ban of condemnation?

Hab. 2: 15: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken also."

15. There is still another class who neither drink nor sell, but who condone the traffic by renting buildings for the purpose, or, from a business standpoint, sign the saloon keeper's bond, or his petition, or receive revenue from his sales. Is this class offensive in the sight of God?

Isa. 5: 22, 23: "Woe unto them . . . which justify the wicked for reward."

16. What, according to Scripture, is the woe, or judgment, pronounced upon such as these?

Isa. 5: 24: "Therefore, as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness."

17. What as a rule is the result of riches gained by unrighteous means?

Jer. 17: 11: "As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool."

18. What, finally, will be the feeling of those who have pursued such an unwise course?

Jer. 12: 13: "And ye shall be ashamed of your revenues, because of the fierce anger of the Lord."

19. Is it a commendable thing for a town or city to collect the license revenue for the purpose of making general improvements?

Hab. 2: 12: "Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and establisheth a city by iniquity."

20. What may be accepted as an invariable rule?

Prov. 15: 6: "But in the revenues of the wicked is trouble."

21. Then what should be accepted as a guiding motto?

Prov. 16: 8: "Better is a little with righteousness than great revenues without right."

22. Can those in complicity with evil expect the Lord to hear and answer them?

Amos 5: 22: "Though ye offer me burnt offerings and your meat offerings, I will not accept them."

23. Why should government officials abstain from strong drink?

Prov. 31: 5: "Lest they drink and forget the law, and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted."

24. Why should church officials abstain?

Lev. 10: 10: "That ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean."

25. Why should the masses of the people abstain?

Prov. 20: 1: "Wine is a mocker; strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."

26. What general prohibitory command has been given to all classes?

Prov. 23: 31: "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright."

27. And what the penalty for its violation?

Prov. 23: 32: "At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

28. In the midst of such general disregard of the commands and warnings given in the Bible, what should be the attitude of the Church?

Isa. 58: 1: "Cry aloud, spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins."

LESSON III.

TENTH MONTH 18, 1903.

DAVID'S CONFESSION.

Psalms 51: 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Create in me a clean heart, O God. Psalm 51: 10.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 12.—David's confession. Ps. 51: 17.

Third-day, Tenth mo. 13.—The sinful nature. Rom. 7: 14-25.

Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 14.—Confession of sin. Ezra 9: 9-15.

Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 15.—Hope for the penitent. Joel 2: 12-19.

Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 16.—True penitence. Ps. 6.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 17.—Hope in the Lord. Ps. 130.

First-day, Tenth mo. 18.—Cleansing. Ezek. 36: 22-31.

Intervening Events.—For the story of David's sin and repentance see 2 Samuel, chapters 11 and 12: 1-25. The crime of David was a double one, and was aggravated by his position; for he who should have set a good example to his people committed two of the grossest crimes. It is of the utmost importance that it should never be forgotten that David never attempted to condone his sin, which he might have done by the plea that he did nothing which contemporary monarchs would not have done. He acknowledged his sin and truly repented. Many who talk about the sin of David say nothing about his repentance. The one must always be placed by the side of the other.

Time.—The Psalm is supposed to have been written shortly after the commission of the sin, about the middle of the reign, 1034, or 996 B. C.

Place.—Jerusalem.

Book of Psalms.—This was the Psalter or hymn book of the Jews, and, like the hymn books of the present day, was a collection of psalms or hymns written by various authors at various times, and under various circumstances. It is quite possible that several hundred years intervened between the composition of the earliest and the latest Psalm. The Book of Psalms was divided into five smaller books, as is shown in the Revised Version. Hebrew poetry is based on parallelism—that is, there is a sequence of clauses, arranged for the most part in pairs, forming a series of similar, or contrasted thoughts, the later clause emphasizing what precedes either by likeness or contrast. This is very clearly shown in the present lesson, and is especially obvious in the Revised Version. It should be stated that many, perhaps most, of the headings of the Psalms are not contemporary with the Psalm and are of doubtful authority. It is also probable that the earliest Psalms have been modernized just as has been done in English literature with the works of Chaucer and even much later writers.

The Psalms were written to be sung, and there are a number of musical terms scattered through them which in some cases are not yet thoroughly understood. Names of tunes are also given and directions. All these things are noticed in the Revised Version.

It is because the Psalms are the expression of the deepest feelings of the human heart that they have been dear to so many generations. They "attract the young, invigorate the active, enliven the contemplative, and encircle with a peaceful glory the venerable brow of age."

The heading of the 51st Psalm ascribes its composition to David. The last two verses, 18 and 19, may be of a later date, as they do not seem to refer to David's time.

1-4. A confession of sin and a prayer for pardon. God's mercy can cover the deepest transgressions. "Blot." The idea seems to be that of total obliteration. "Wash me thoroughly." He feels the need of complete cleansing. Nothing else will do. "I acknowledge." David makes a complete confession. He does not attempt or wish to conceal anything, and the weight of his sin overwhelms him. Compare 2 Sam. 12: 13. "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned." Though he had sinned greatly against Uriah, Bathsheba and others, the enormity of sin against God outweighs everything else. "Justified." That is, vindicated when He pronounces judgment. That no one should blame God.

5. "I was shapen in iniquity," etc. In the depth of his remorse he cries out that his whole nature from its inception was sinful. This verse has often been taken to mean that human birth and the reproduction of the human race is sinful, and that children are born sinful. There is not sufficient reason to base such doctrine on the expression of a remorseful man; and even if it was true in David's case, which is unlikely, it does not follow from this verse that it is true in all cases.

6. "Truth." Sincerity. "Inward parts." "The most secret springs of thought and will." "Wisdom." Here, as generally in the Old Testament, the word means spiritual discernment.

7. "Purge." Purify. Hyssop, a plant not certainly identified. It was used by the priests in sprinkling, for instance, those cleansed of leprosy.

10. "Create in me a clean heart." He feels that it is not only needful to destroy the sin, but also that there should be a new creation. (Compare 2 Cor. 6: 17; Gal. 6: 15.) "Right" or steadfast.

11. He feels that he is worthy of being cast off.

12. Uphold me with a free spirit. Revised Version. "Free" means a willing spirit, a spirit that of choice follows God's will.

13. "Then." When he is in such a frame of mind as indicated he will be fit and anxious to teach others and be an instrument in the conversion of others.

14. His sense of forgiveness and cleansing is such that he will proclaim aloud his rejoicing and sense of God's righteousness.

15. "The lips closed by guilt are opened by pardon" and filled by the Holy Spirit.

16, 17. Here the Psalmist expresses the great truth that it is not outward ceremony or words that are of value in the Lord's sight, but a right heart. (Compare Is. 1: 10-17.) The outward is only of value as it expresses truthfully the condition of the heart.

TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH EIGHTEENTH.

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE: WHAT MOSES TEACHES US.

Ex. 24: 28-35; Matt. 17: 3, 4; Heb. 3: 1-5.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 12.—To rise above humble birth. Ex. 2: 1-10.

Third-day, Tenth mo. 13.—To give up our own way. Ex. 2: 11-14.

Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 14.—In the school of humility. Ex. 2: 15-25.

Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 15.—In the school of reverence. Ex. 3: 1-6.

Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 16.—In the school of opposition. Ex. 5: 1-11.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 17.—In the school of rebellion. Ex. 32: 7-14.

The resultant of the combined influences of Hebrew piety and Egyptian learning, the product of a sturdy, devout parentage and the highest culture of that ancient day, heir of the promises of Abraham and the realized achievements of the Pharaohs, the embodied fruitage of all that God purposed in the sojourn of Israel in Egypt—such was Moses, general, lawgiver, prophet, priest, man of God.

A few short years of maternal care were so used as to fix indelibly upon mind and heart his brotherhood with the oppressed slaves of the realm in which he had so high a place. The memory of the mother and of her steadfast faith were doubtless his sheet anchor during all the years of splendor and luxury amid pagan courtiers and philosophers. And when God visited him in the maturity of his manhood, he contrasted his royal inheritance by a godly lineage with the royalty of the court of Pharaoh and saw truly which had for him the greater gain.

A father and mother who are not afraid of a king's commandments which oppose the law of God have a richer legacy to bestow than gold can measure. To say the least, Moses' working capital was not less what he received by birth and mother training than by courtly tutelage.

A real call does not in itself perfect the wisdom of the one called. Doubtless Moses' visit to his brethren followed a long deliberation and the careful forming of purpose and perhaps of plans; yet human error furnished proof of his need for further tuition, which came to him in the school of the shepherd. Two chief lessons had to be learned, that man's way must be given up, and that God has a way which He will make known to us. When the effort to carry out our own will and purposes is seen to result in disaster and the missing of the intended good, the need appears for a new wisdom, a new faith, and a new obedience.

A wonderful confidence in God got possession of Moses' mind some time during these years. Unpromising and rebellious as the people of Israel were, real and formidable as were the obstacles to be overcome, both in material circumstances and in the spiritual make-up of the Israelites, his faith did not desert him and his standard was never lowered. That identical people was the object of his unfailing solicitude, and he promulgated for it laws of a perfection of justice and moral excellence that make them a model for jurists, legislators and preachers of righteousness to-day.

What his faith won ours may, and they that are victorious shall "sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb."

THE ABIDER.

(John 14: 16.)

BY LLEWELLYN A. MORRISON.

O, the sweetness
And completeness
Of the life the Spirit giveth
Unto each one who believeth
In the Christ towards whom He every heart constrains!
He allureth me before Him
To adore Him
In the whiteness
And the brightness
Of the high and holy heaven where He reigns.

There is union
And communion
In His pureness that impelleth
Each true heart, wherein He dwelleth,
Into harmony with all that doth refine;
So I gather in His guiding
And providing,
Faith's foundation
For salvation,
Love and hope supremely glorious and divine.

Teacher, Trainer
And Sustainer,
He, my spirit's great Campaigner,
Maketh me a boundless gainer
By the prudence, grace and goodness He bestows;
Every heart desire He heedeth
And so leadeth
As a lover
Watching over,
That I live in love's felicitous repose.

He resideth
And abideth
In my soul; so joy increaseth,—
Each unholy craving ceaseth;
He with me and I with Him work out His will;
Prayer unceasing, conscience tender
That doth render

To another,
Foe or brother,
Word and deed that doth love's living law fulfill.

Holy Spirit!
Thine the merit
Of the knowledge of redemption,
Of each spiritual exemption
And the wisdom, light and purity I laud;
In Thy leading and protection
Pure perfection
Is the dower
Of Thy power:
Thou wilt yet present me faultless before God.

Correspondence.

At a meeting of the trustees of Guilford College, held Ninth month 15th, 1903, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, Since our last regular meeting our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, has seen meet to remove from our midst, from works to reward, Dr. Joseph J. Cox, who has been one of the trustees of the College for many years, and at the time of his death chairman of this body, therefore, be it
"Resolved, by the trustees of Guilford College, in meeting assembled, that in the death of Dr. Joseph J. Cox his family has lost a devoted husband and father, the community and State an upright and honored citizen, and this College a loyal and faithful friend and official;
"That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy be published in the Greensboro papers, the 'High Point Enterprise' and THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and a copy be sent to his family, with the assurance of the heartfelt sympathy of the trustees of this institution in their affliction.
"J. A. Cox, Secretary."

BOARD ON THE CONDITION AND WELFARE OF THE NEGRO.

The members of this Board, appointed by the Five Years Meeting last year, has been, through its officers, engaged in some work, but it is greatly hampered for lack of funds. We therefore take this opportunity of appealing to Friends throughout the country to send contributions for the work to the treasurer, Joseph A. Goddard, Muncie, Ind.
ALLEN JAY, President.
RICH. HENRY THOMAS, Secretary.
JOS. A. GODDARD, Treasurer.

HARRIET GREEN MEMORIAL FUND.

I have recently visited Iowa and Western Yearly Meetings in the interest of this fund, and find a very warm interest everywhere in the purpose of the subscriptions now being made in THE AMERICAN FRIEND.
In both the yearly meetings mentioned subscriptions were made, amounting in all to $550.
In Iowa persons were appointed in each quarter to present the subject to the various meetings, and in Western it is believed that the presentation of the proposition to subordinate meetings will meet with a good response.
Friends in all these meetings who have ever known Harriet Green feel a deep interest in perpetuating her memory by helping Guilford College do the work in North Carolina in which she manifested the keenest interest during the last few weeks of her earthly life.
Will not Friends within the next few months in all the American yearly meetings kindly and prayerfully consider the opportunity thus presented to give a tribute of love to the memory of Harriet Green, and to help Guilford College perform the work for North Carolina which this institution ought to do?
L. L. HOBBS.
Amounts received by THE AMERICAN FRIEND since last report:
Rosa E. Lee $2.00
Joseph E. Blair 3.00
S. W. R. 5.00
Total$10.00

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Guilford College reported 190 students enrolled last week, which is the largest number ever present at one time.

Elison R. Purdy is now well settled at Oskaloosa, Ia., where the work of the Church, both in the city and in the college, is advancing.

L. N. Rich, formerly of North Branch, Iowa, is now located in the meeting at Hubbard, in place of L. Maria Dean, who goes to California.

We are sorry to learn that Thomas J. Battey, of Friends School, Providence, R. I., is ill with typhoid fever. The case, however, is proving to be a mild one.

We have received two contributions, amounting to $11.00, for the relief of the people in Jamaica, in response to the appeal of Arthur Swift through our columns, Ninth month 24th. The same has been forwarded to the treasurer.

John M. Watson was detained at Guilford College for some time by a slight indisposition, but is again visiting families in the limits of New Garden Monthly Meeting.

The annual meeting of the corporation of Haverford College will be held in the committee room of Arch Street Meeting House, Philadelphia, on Third-day, Tenth month 13th, 1903, at 3 o'clock p.m.

Our dear and venerable friend, Theodore L. Cuyler, has just returned to his Brooklyn home from Lake Mohonk, where he preached nine times during the summer. He has sent us another article, which will soon appear in print.

The Friends at Farmland Ind., have succeeded in rebuilding their meeting house, which was destroyed by fire last Third month. Robert L. Kelly, president of Earlham College, is expected to deliver the dedicatorial address the 11th instant.

David Farlow, a minister of Southeron Quarter, Marlboro Monthly Meeting, N. C., has received credentials to attend Baltimore Yearly Meeting; also some meetings in its limits en route to Indiana, where he expects to labor nearly all winter.

William and Susan T. Thompson arrived in Boston on Steamship "Commonwealth," the 18th ult., after an absence of nearly one and a half years in Gospel service in England and Ireland. They expect to stay in New England most of the coming winter. Their address will be North Dartmouth, Mass.

D. A. and R. M. Outland, our missionaries at the Otoe Mission, Okla., are sending their two little girls, 11 and 13 years of age, respectively, to Friends' University, Kansas, for work in the trainers' class. They are compelled to send their children away from home, since there are no school advantages at the mission.

Albert E. Wright, who has been serving in the meeting at New Providence, Iowa, for the past two years, has accepted a call to Earlham, Iowa, and commenced work at that place the 20th ult. The Friends at Earlham are remodeling and enlarging their meeting house, and will have an excellent building when finished.

A. Edward Kelsey and family and Rosa E. Lee sail from Boston for Palestine on the steamer Vancouver on Seventh-day, the 10th instant, at 12.30 p.m. Edward Kelsey goes to superintend the Friends' Mission at Ramallah, his wife, Mary Kelsey, to be matron of the Girls' Training Home, and Rosa Lee matron of the Boys' Training Home.

The Oakwood Seminary, Union Springs, N. Y., has opened with a much larger attendance than last year. Samuel H. Hodgkin, formerly of Guilford College, North Carolina, is principal. A few changes have been made in the staff of teachers. Lindley M. Stevens remains as superintendent. All friends of the school are looking forward to a successful year.

James R. Jones, who has been actively engaged in the ministry throughout North Carolina Yearly Meeting for the past twenty-five years, and for eighteen years was superintendent of temperance work there, has removed to Farmer's Institute Monthly Meeting, Ind., where he and his wife will engage in Gospel work. Their postoffice address is Shadeland, Ind., R. F. D., 35.

The following item of interest is taken from the first issue of "Our Missionary Work," a monthly sheet published by the Board of Home and Foreign Missions, New York Yearly Meeting: "Emory J. Rees and Deborah G. Rees, his wife, will start for the African Mission about October 15th. Vermillion Grove Quarterly Meeting, Illinois, agrees to support these workers for five years."

The meeting of sufferings in London has resolved upon legal proceedings against a Richmond firm of wine merchants who have registered a label the design of which has for its center the figure of an elderly Quaker holding a glass to his mouth with an obvious expression of satisfaction, and who are planning to sell two brands of their wares marked "Quaker Stout" and "Quaker Gin."

Our missionaries at Douglas, Alaska, are receiving many inquiries from the native children concerning the opening of a school for them in the near future, but the missionaries are not able to take up the work themselves. They are hoping, however, that the Lord will soon call some teacher to the work. If any one feels so called they should correspond with Eliza H. Carey, 1718 West Second Street, Wichita, Kansas.

For a number of years the old mission school house near the mission home at Douglas, Alaska, has not been used for mission purposes, the native school on the beach being the home of the Indian School. The old building is now being moved to the mission claim, about six miles away. It is the intention to encourage the natives to settle there, and also to encourage the establishment of such industry as will help in the formation of a Christian community.

Earle J. Harold, who spent the last three years in faithful service as professor of philosophy and instructor of vocal music in Friends' University, has entered the Divinity School of Yale University. After completing his course at Yale Professor Harold expects to devote his life to the preaching of the gospel. Professor Harold is another of the many that have gone into prominent and active places in the Master's work from Eighth Street Meeting, Richmond, Ind.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting, N. C., occurred the 12th and 13th ult. John M. Watson's service in the meeting of ministry and oversight was edifying. He read the 92d Psalm, and spoke from the verse, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree." Favorable action was taken in the process of recording a new minister. At the quarterly meeting proper Prof. Thomas Newlin acted as clerk in the place of President L. L. Hobbs, who was absent on his trip to Iowa and other yearly meetings in the interest of Guilford College. The meeting was specially cordial in its expression of gratitude for the presence and service of John M. Watson, both in the meeting and in the homes of the membership, of which he has visited more than two hundred.

BORN.

JAY.—Born to Professor J. Edwin Jay and wife, of Wichita, Kan., Ninth month 9th, 1903, a son, Howard Weybright Jay.

MARRIED.

PENNINGTON—BAIRD.—At the home of the bride's parents, Traverse City, Mich., Ninth month 9th, 1903, Hannah Pennington, daughter of Josiah and Mary Pennington, and Thomas S. Baird. A reception was given them on the 11th instant at the home of the bride's brother, Parker Pennington, and the Christian Endeavor Society presented them with a handsome painting, prettily framed.

DIED.

MAXWELL.—At the home of his son, in Lincoln County, Kan., Ninth month 24th, 1903, Alpheus Maxwell, aged 76 years. He was a faithful member and elder of Sterling Monthly Meeting, Kansas. He was modest and unassuming in his manner and always faithful to known duties.

STITH.—At Stockton, Cal., Ninth month 1st, 1903, Charles L. Stith, aged 26 years. The deceased was the only son of Fletcher and Henrietta Stith, Lowell, Kansas, and grandson of Jeremiah Hubbard, Miami, Ind. Ter. He was a Christian and active in a number of young people's societies.

EVER GIVE

Your Thinker a Thought?

Funny things happen in this world, and now and then some of them make one an interested observer; for instance: Several years ago a man pursued a systematic course of investigation to discover what kind of elements the body would take up from the vegetable kingdom out of which to make gray matter in the brain and nerve centers throughout the body; also how to prepare this food so that it would be easily digested, and allow nature to make use of these elements. So far the proposition was all right. Question: How to bring all this about?

It took over two years' work to solve the problem successfully. After it was solved the food was given to many people, and the result watched carefully.

When all results were proven beyond doubt the food was put on the market under the name of Grape-Nuts. Then followed public announcement in the newspapers and magazines that such a food was in existence, and that it would perform its intended work.

People all over the world realized the need of such a food and began purchasing it liberally. It attracted so much attention that a long list of imitators sprung up all over the country. They boiled wheat, roasted it, stewed it, chopped it, mixed it with rye, malt, oats, and perhaps hay—we are not sure—gave it a fantastic name, and told the public it was a "brain food."

Then, from these imitators, came the offering of spoons, knitting needles, chinaware, pictures, doll babies and even pianos to induce people to gorge themselves with the various and sundry things.

Fortunately the most of these imitation foods are harmless and decently clean, so that no real harm is done except that people who pay out money to secure a food for special service have a right to expect an equitable return for that money.

Investigation proves that in practically all cases where imitations are put upon the market, the men who place them are untrained and have no knowledge of the real scientific basis of food making. If they did have they would produce original articles. The very fact that they make imitations is prima facie evidence that they have no professional ability to originate valuable articles themselves, but must get under the eaves of some originator.

Up to the present time no prepared food has appeared, to the knowledge of the writer, that is made upon the solid, fundamental, scientific basis of Grape-Nuts.

In this celebrated food the right parts of the wheat and barley are selected; they pass through various and sundry mechanical processes (absolutely no chemical treatment). In these processes the starchy elements are slowly transformed into a sugar now known as Post Sugar. In this form it is ready for immediate assimilation and transmission to the blood without taxing the digestive organs. By the blood, the elements which nature uses for rebuilding the soft gray matter in the brain and nerve centers are carried to the respective parts, and there made use of, while other elements known as carbohydrates are carried to the muscles and tissues, and there deposited and held in readiness for use when energy and warmth are demanded. Remember that simply raising the arm requires the expenditure and giving off of warmth and energy. Now, then, we must have the elements that supply warmth and energy deposited in these tissues and muscles, else we cannot release them and make use of them. These are the missions of Grape-Nuts, and the person who desires to make use of the proper re-builder of brain and nerve centers, and keep them in first-class working order, and also make use of a supply of warmth and energy, can absolutely rely upon securing this service if they feed regularly on Grape-Nuts.

These are incontrovertible facts, demonstrated by actual use by hundreds of thousands of Anglo-Saxons today.

There's a reason, and a profound one, for the use of Grape-Nuts. The food is already cooked at the factory, and can be served instantly with rich cream. It is delicious, and can be made into a great variety of toothsome dishes after the recipes found in the recipe book enclosed in each package.

Attention is also invited to another very small but "meaty" little book in each package under the title, "The Road to Wellville."

Grape-Nuts food is made at the Pure Food factory of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., and sold all over the world.

If all things wished might always be,

Accepting what they looked for only,

They might be glad, but not in Thee.

We need as much the cross we bear

As air we breathe, as light we see;

It draws us to Thy side in prayer,

It bends us to our strength in Thee.

NEW VERBS.

"We had a delightful time last week," said the city cousin, who was describing the joys of metropolitan life. "One evening we trolleyed out to a suburban home, and ping-ponged until nearly midnight; and the next day we automobilized to the country club, and golfed until dark."

"Well, we had a pretty good time last week, too," ventured the country cousin, with a sarcastic smile. "One day we buggied over to Uncle Josiah's, and we boys got out in the back lot and baseballled all the afternoon, and after we had dinnereed some of the men cidered and tobaccoed awhile."—"Baltimore American."

SOME OF THE ADVERTISERS

Now using THE AMERICAN FRIEND began advertising in the paper over ten years ago. It must have paid them or they would not continue from year to year. We believe that among our regular readers there are those who could use our advertising columns very profitably, but who may not have given particular thought to this feature of their denominational paper. We should like to hear from all such, and we are satisfied that we can demonstrate to them the value of space in THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Events and Comments.

Michael H. Herbert, the British Ambassador to the United States, died the 30th ult. at Davos-Platz, Switzerland, after a long and plucky fight against consumption.

The strike of textile workers in Philadelphia, which began in Sixth month, has ended in failure, and with losses estimated at $12,000,000 for the employers and $8,000,000 for the employees. Of the 112,000 men who went out all have gone back save about 1,000.

The yellow fever, which has prevailed at several of the Mexican Gulf ports and interior towns during the summer, has reached Nuevo Laredo, on the Rio Grande, opposite Laredo, in Texas. Five deaths occurred there one day last week, and some cases are reported in the American town.

The annual report of the treasurer of the United States places the amount of money in the country at the close of the fiscal year at $2,688,149,621, of which $1,252,731,990, or nearly 47 per cent., was gold. Silver certificates, treasury notes and national bank notes make up the other 53 per cent. of the currency.

The Cape Town correspondent of the London "Times" says the customs returns indicate a falling off for the first time in several years. Money is tight throughout South Africa. The economic outlook everywhere is anxious. There is a general commercial reaction from overstocking. Severe droughts prevail.

A good deal of pressure has been brought to bear on the President to induce him not to call Congress into extraordinary session in November; but to all callers who have spoken to him in that vein he has said that this government is committed to the proposition that the Cuban reciprocity treaty be made effective at the earliest possible date, and he regards it as a matter of good faith that this country should keep its word.

Late advices show that the backbone of the revolution in Macedonia is broken. The Turkish troops are gaining the upper hand everywhere, several insurgent chiefs have been killed or wounded, others are abandoning the struggle and fleeing to the frontier, the revolutionary bands are sustaining heavy losses and are seeking refuge in large numbers, and the Turks occupy every important point along the routes of retreat to the frontier.

It is evident that the Nonconformists in England still retain the spirit which has gained all their great political victories in past generations. The "Passive Resistance" movement has now reached dimensions which entitle it to the respect of all.

Representatives of every large employers' Association of the country met in Chicago last week and organized a national body that is to fight union labor and promote the interests of employers and independent workmen by all legitimate means. The new association will send out a hundred paid organizers to form subsidiary associations in manufacturing and business centers. It will maintain a legal bureau to watch over its interests, and will probably keep a permanent lobby at Washington and in every Legislature.

The Jewish year book for the year 5664, which has just been published by the Jewish Publishing Society of America and edited by Cyrus Adler, gives some interesting figures about the numerical growth of the race in this country. New York now has the largest Jewish population of any of the States, with 500,000, and then come Pennsylvania and Illinois. The total Jewish immigration through the ports of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore for the past twelve years has been 761,598, and during the past year 58,079 arrived at the port of New York alone. The total Jewish population of the United States is now 1,127,268, while there are only 276,614 in the British empire.

General Sanger, who had charge of the successful Cuban census, has completed the census of the Philippines—the first accurate count of the islanders ever made—and finds from a "rough count" of the schedules, which is subject to slight modifications, that the population numbers 6,976,574. The "Gazetteer" of the Philippine Islands, published in 1902 by the Government, stated that eight of the eighty-four races and tribes might be regarded as civilized, but the eight civilized tribes or races contributed, according to the estimate made then, 6,363,000 of the total population. The census just taken justifies the estimate, as the wild tribes are shown by General Sanger to number 600,058, and will not aggregate more than 650,000 when a complete analysis of the census shall have been made.

"ROYAL MUSKOKA."

"The Royal Muskoka" Hotel is the largest and most magnificent summer hotel in Canada. Location unsurpassed in the centre of the famous Muskoka Lakes District, Highlands of Ontario (1,000 feet above sea level), about six hours' journey north of Toronto.

The grounds include an area of 130 acres, containing pine and hemlock groves and many beautiful walks and points commanding lovely views. There are Tennis, Golfing, Bowling, Fishing, Bathing, Croquet, Bowling Green and many enjoyable water trips. First-class in every respect. Excellent transportation service.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and much had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contains the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly-concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Stand forth in courage and in gentleness for the truth which you believe to be allied to Freedom and Progress and God. Be so strong that you are not afraid to be just. Cherish a tender humanity and a catholic heart. Then take your stand, calm and moveless as the stars.—W. M. Punshon.

GOVERNMENT LANDS TO BE IRRIGATED.

IN THE FAMOUS SALT RIVER VALLEY, Arizona, near Phoenix, the capital, there is, now belonging to the government, a large tract of beautiful rich desert land, needing water only to make it of great value. The Verde Water and Power Company has been organized for the purpose of creating power and irrigating this land. The enterprise has been planned and is being financed in the interest of the land owners, rather than for the usual purpose of earning large dividends for the share holders.

ELECTRIC POWER. The water will be stored in a mountain reservoir, which expert engineers pronounce one of the largest and finest natural reservoir sites in the country. Over $50,000 has been spent in perfecting the surveys and engineering for the enterprise. Before the water is spread over the land for irrigation, it will be used to develop electric power. The company will develop 12,000 horse power, for all of which there is a present demand at high prices.

THE LANDS. The wonderful fertility and crop capacity of these lands has been demonstrated by cultivation under a dozen canals in the immediate vicinity. The soil is very deep and rich. A crop of wheat and a crop of corn are frequently harvested in one year from the same piece of ground. With a full water supply, four or five heavy crops of alfalfa hay can be cut from April until November; in addition, the fields can be grazed through the winter season. No grain is fed to beef cattle or milch cows. Southern California is only 200 miles distant. All the fine fruits of that section are raised here.

WATER-RIGHTS. We are now selling the water-rights for these lands, which will enable the purchaser to obtain title to the land and guarantee adequate water for its cultivation.

This beautiful country will develop rapidly. Towns, churches, schools, electric railways—a highly Christian community, will arise rapidly when the water is ready for service; thus the usual discomforts of settling a new country will be largely avoided. New places will soon be surrounded with plenty of fruit and shade, and all the comforts of older eastern homes.

We shall gladly send free, statements from numerous Arizona farmers and testimonials of reliable Christian people from half a dozen States, who have made a trip to Arizona to study this enterprise; also maps and other printed matter describing our plans.

THE MISSING QUALITY IN SERMONS.

SOMEBODY once asked Hume, the great sceptic-philosopher, why it was he went so regularly to hear a certain minister preach? "I suppose," said the questioner, "you do not believe what he preaches." "No," replied Hume, "but he does believe what he preaches, and so I enjoy hearing him." This answer reveals one of the real secrets of good preaching. There never was a good sermon—one which made invisible things seem real—which was preached by a man who lacked this quality of belief. The difference is felt at once when the sermon comes from a man whose belief is weak and flabby, and whose conviction never goes much deeper than his dinner.

It is a settled attitude of THE AMERICAN FRIEND not to cast reflection upon the religion, or the religious work, of any Christian people anywhere. We are convinced that the work of the Church is not furthered by stone-throwing, or by harsh criticism of persons who are honestly and sincerely endeavoring to serve our common Lord and Master. We know, too, that never a Lord's Day passes by without the proclamation of some great messages of the gospel, without some great words of faith and truth and life which carry conviction and comfort to the hearts of men. But one who watches the reports of sermons in the daily papers has a very depressing feeling as he looks over the broken fragments which the Monday paper serves up. He is not so much depressed to find only fragments, as he is to find by means of the fragments what a weak and poor lot of spiritual food has been handed out to the multitude the day before. It makes him wonder, not that so few went to the churches, but rather that so many went.

He learns through these "fragments" that in one church the sermon described "an ideal wife," with the conclusion that "she is a woman who does not nag!" In another church the congregation listened to a sermon "against Addicks." Still another congregation listened to a discussion of an editorial in a daily newspaper on "President Roosevelt and Addicksism." Another newspaper reports a sermon which was preached by a minister just after his return from his long summer vacation, and by parallel columns the newspaper proved that the sermon was an almost word for word repetition of a sermon which another minister had preached in the same city about four months before. This last case shows certainly a very low state of conviction.

But it will be said, are not all these other subjects proper themes for a minister? Should not a minister concern himself with moral issues in the State, in the nation and in the home? Is not "the ideal wife" a proper subject for a sermon? Yes, undoubtedly a minister of the living God is concerned with everything which affects human lives. Morality and religion are incapable of division. But there is a marked difference between a sensational address on local politics, or on the advantages of a wife who does not "nag," and a sermon which reveals to men the nature of God, the real character of the spiritual life, and the principles of character which befit a Christian person. The moment the pulpit is turned into an oratorical platform for discussing popular or unpopular themes the real authority which should mark a minister vanishes. His opinion counts for no more than another man's on the subject. A minister's real power lies in his gift to reveal spiritual realities and eternal principles, and when he fails to do that his occupation is either gone or going.

QUAKER "ROUND TABLES."

WE referred, some weeks ago, when discussing Education in Quakerism, to the formation of neighborhood study groups, which are sometimes called "round tables," as one appropriate method to be pursued. This is now the proper time of year to organize such groups, if it is to be done. The long winter evenings are beginning, the summer migration is a thing of the past, and the young members are keen for something to do. Let them organize a "round table," and plunge into the rich story of our past. There should not be too much formality or machinery about these study groups. A chairman and secretary and a program committee will be found convenient, and the meetings can come once a month, or better every two weeks, from house to house, unless there is a good parlor for such things in the meeting house itself.

The course of study will depend very largely upon the capabilities of the group and the amount of historical reading which the members have previously done. One of the first things to get acquainted with, for any one who wishes to understand early Quakerism, would be the religious movements which were under way in the English commonwealth when George Fox began his work. Then there is the story of George Fox's own life and work; the type of men who helped him; the reasons for Quaker persecution; the substance of the Quaker message; the planting of Quakerism in America; the political influence of early Quakers; their social work; the character of their ministry; their belief in guidance, and a hundred other subjects equally important.

Two persons should be asked to make special preparation for the subject of each evening, and to open its consideration with short papers. Meantime all the members of the group should be learning as much as possible upon the subject, so that there can be a fairly general discussion after the papers are finished. The subjects should as far as possible be assigned ahead for the whole winter, so that those who are to have papers can make all their reading count. The question of books will seem a difficulty in communities where there is no library, but a few dollars will secure the indispensable books, and probably there is no way in which the same dollars would yield a better return.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WHERE JAPAN'S OLD RULERS CHOSE TO BUILD THEIR TOMBS.

BY L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD.

The traveler in Japan is continually asking about the "Shoguns," that is, if he or she is as ignorant of Japanese history as we were, and some knowledge of the Shoguns and their history is necessary as soon as one sets foot in the "Flowery Kingdom," as everywhere the crest of the "Shoguns" appears in some design, either in temple ornament or palace decoration, or perhaps modern reproduction of old art object.

The greatest of the families of the Shoguns was the Tokugawa, and it is to them that many of Japan's most wonderful monuments are due. Indeed, it is said of them that they kept Japan poor and isolated from the world while they themselves poured what little money there was in the country into palaces and temples.

The Shoguns were the military rulers of Japan, and all the real functions of government seem to have been exercised by them while the Mikado was kept away from the cares and troubles of a reigning prince in reality in a sort of "gilded captivity" at Kyoto, surrounded by his little court of poets, artists and literary men, while the wielders of the sword, then mightier than the pen, supported the strong hands of the head of the feudal lords or Daimyos at Tokyo.

It was not until the opening of Japan to the outside world by Commodore Perry, and the awakening of the modern spirit in the people, that the Emperor of Japan assumed the real reins of government and in 1868 forced the then reigning Shogun to retire to the seclusion of a small country estate, Shizuoka, in Suraga.

The first of the Shoguns was Yoritomo, of the Minamoto family, who ruled toward the end of the twelfth century, but the founder of the great Tokugawa family, which was destined to make Japan so rich in treasures of art while so poor in other things, was a great general named Tokugawa Ieyasu, and it is from his surname that the family name is derived.

With their religious ideas in regard to the veneration of ancestors, it was but natural that a great deal of thought should be given by these proud gentlemen to their last resting places, and that their descendants should take great care to carry out any designs for tombs which the dear departed had prepared, or perhaps already built. In Tokyo we find the tombs of some of the Shoguns, and in Sheba Park, the Shogun cemetery at the capital, one's mind is so filled with wonder at the magnificence of design and execution that it is hard not to be incredulous when your guide says, "Oh! yes; but you must see Nikko."

To reach Nikko from Tokyo is a short day's journey by rail, and, as we were in Japan for the first time, every mile of the way was interesting as it opened page after page of the Japanese book of nature and showed us pictures in the lives and of the customs of her wonderful little people.

Changing cars at Utsunomiya, we leave the main line from Tokyo for the North and take the branch line, which ends at Nikko.

It was on the platform of this station that a strange reminder of American railroads presented itself in the shape of a picture of J. Pierpont Morgan. A little Japanese newsboy had some English illustrated weekly, probably given him by a tourist, which he was offering for sale. He was much interested in learning the proper pronunciation of the name under Mr. Morgan's picture, which adorned the front of the cover.

Very soon after leaving Utsunomiya the hills and mountains in which Nikko is set appear, and the great, dark trees, which add so much of grandeur to the surroundings of the wonderful temple tombs, come into view.

Nikko is in reality a district comprising several villages, but the name is coming to be more and more used to designate the little mountain village near which are the famous Shogun tombs, and in which are the hotels for the sightseer and the summer holiday maker, for Nikko is a great summer resort for Japanese as well as a Mecca for European and American sightseers.

As the train approaches Nikko we get better and nearer views of the great avenue of giant cryptomer-ias—a tree resembling our California redwood—which extends for twenty miles straight away from Nikko, nestled in the mountains, to Utsunomiya, in the plain.

Arrived at Nikko, a ride of nearly a mile in jinrikishas—the funny little Japanese cab—with a man to pull and another to push, through the village street, which is lined with shops full of Nikko's manufactures, displayed by smiling-faced shopkeepers, who courteously express the hope that you will favor them with a visit during your stay, brings one to a very attractive hotel, with beaming host and rows of little Japanese servants, bidding welcome to the new arrivals. In our case it was the "Nikko Hotel," and they made us very comfortable while some friends who patronized the rival establishment had the same report to give.

As it was too late to go to the "temples," as the tombs are called, when we arrived, we set out for a waterfall and a walk to shake off the cramped feeling which our day in the train had caused.

Such a surprise as awaited us! We had not been told of beautiful waterfalls, and high hills, and great expanses of uncultivated country, and our eyes were very promptly opened to grand sweeps of mountain side, covered with coarse bamboo grass, where pheasants of both gold and copper varieties have their homes, and in which monkeys frisk and chatter, while the great bushes of purple azaleas make the darker wooded spots look darker still, with their bright contrast.

The waterfall we visited this first evening is named Kirifuri-no-taki, or the "Mist-falling Cascade," and was very beautiful, lacey and sinuous, divided as it was by mossy rocks on its course down a steep slope into a ravine, all dusky in the evening light, but with its sides brightened higher up with masses of azaleas.

Enthusiastic over our first experience of the walks and scenery about Nikko, we gladly fell in with our guide's suggestion, that we visit another waterfall next day.

Every visitor to Nikko should see Kegon-no-Taki, the waterfall where the outlet of Lake Chuzenji plunges over a precipice 250 feet in height and falls in ghostly whiteness into a deep, dark hole, from which it rises again to flow on down the valley past Nikko. The effect of the dark, deep hole is heightened by a number of smaller streams, which break out of the face of the precipice, all at the same line, and form a ring of smaller falls, into the middle of which the great fall springs.

Great as are the natural beauties of Nikko, the works of the old master builders, who were charged with perpetuating the names and greatness of the proud, warlike rulers and the immediate surroundings of their labors are more strange and wonderful still.

We started our inspection of these mysterious places in the bright sunlight of the early morning, when the sun was doing its best to lighten the gloom in which these tombs are shrouded by the dense shade of the surrounding groves of cryptomerias.

Our first visit was to the temple tomb of the third Shogun of the Tokugawa family, Iemitsu by name, but, as it was similar to that of Ieyasu, the first of the family and less magnificent, I shall only attempt an account of my impressions of the temple and last resting place of Ieyasu, the great general and founder of the house of Tokugawa.

The approach to the temple of Ieyasu is up a flight of fine stone steps and along a magnificent paved avenue, having one gutter in the middle, and towering rows of the dark green cryptomerias to surmount the stone retaining walls on either side. From this avenue we pass through a grand granite Tori, or sacred gate, which marks the boundary of the open court, from which rise more steps, crowned by a building called the gate of two kings. During our visit this gate was under repair, and so not open for inspection. We had to climb up another way to reach the higher court, where stand the buildings of the outer enclosure of the temple.

This court is enclosed by a timber wall painted bright red, a striking contrast against the dark background of the cedars.

On our left we saw a gigantic cryptomeria, some ten or fifteen feet in circumference and reaching a great height, which was surrounded by a cut-stone railing. This, we were informed, was a sacred tree, which Ieyasu used to carry with him on his journeyings when it was small enough to be carried in a flowerpot. Near this tree is the stable of the sacred horse, which is always kept in readiness for the good old general's spirit to go riding when the desire to wander should seize him. A very average specimen of the stunted Japanese horse it was, and one could hardly imagine the mighty man of valor being lured from his last resting place by any desire to bestride such a steed.

In this court are several buildings, all magnificently decorated with carvings painted in lifelike colors, and among them some relief carvings of elephants, whose hind legs have the joints bent in the same way as those of a cow or horse, and which is, of course, quite wrong for an elephant. They tell us the artist never saw an elephant, but his imagination was certainly very active if that be true.

The other buildings are storehouses, but all are carved and painted in marvelous fashion.

Through a second gate we enter another court having a stone balustrade in front, and in which are placed gifts to the shrine from Holland, Korea and Loochoo, all of which were considered tributary States during the reign of this glorious Shogun. Dutch traders at Nagasaki bringing presents were regarded by these proud warrior princes as embassies paying tribute. Here we also saw rows on rows of the wonderful stone lanterns, some 118 in number, presented by the Diamyos or feudal lords to the tomb of their leader.

From this court we again ascend stone steps to an inner courtyard, surrounded by a marvelously carved stone fence, and pass through a carved gate, with white columns, one of which is purposely upside down, as they feared to excite the jealousy of heaven by a too perfect structure. Elaborate carvings of birds, beasts and men, with many shades of coloring, almost bewilder the eye, and we come to the house which contains the sacred palanquins, in which the deified spirits of Ieyasu, his former master and his patron saint, are supposed to pass in procession on the 1st of Sixth month, when all Nikko turns out to do them reverence.

Through the "Chinese" gate, so called from Chinese woods and paintings used, we pass to the main shrine, which is decorated with carvings of birds, and peonies, while inside representations of the mythical phoenix enrich the walls, and everywhere the three-leaved crest of the Tokugawa family and their favorite birds the phoenix, mingle with the imperial crysanthemum.

Many of the Buddhist bells, gongs, etc., have been removed during the recent revival of the simpler Shinto faith, but some remnants of the former glory of gilded worship and ritual survive in the "gobei" or emblem made of gilt strips, and the ornate mirrors.

At the rear of this building is the real burial place, and to reach it we must retrace our steps to the second court, and thence up a grand flight of stone steps, with a stone balustrade, overgrown with moss and lichens and overshadowed by gigantic cryptomerias, we reach the highest of the courts of the temple. This court has a similar stone railing to that on the stairway, and here we see the tomb. It is shaped like a small pagoda, and is a solid casting of gold bronze, mounted on a heavy plain granite base. Two wonderfully beautiful bronze gates, with representations of the phoenix and the Tokugawa crest, close the entrance to the tomb itself, while the giants of the forest surround the whole enclosure, pointing silently upward.

The impression of it all is most solemn, and we came away very quietly, pondering what thoughts should have prompted the old warrior to build his last resting place on this lonely mountain spur, surrounded by the stately grandeur of hill and forest.

As we came down from this lofty sepulcher, with voices hushed by the solemnity of our surroundings, the boom of a great temple bell reverberating through the grove warned us that our time was running on and bade us seek out our jinrikishas, which were to take us out into the busy world again.

It was a fitting sequel to our morning's impressions to ride in these little old-fashioned carriages for some five or six miles down the great cryptomeria avenue, which stretches off to Utsunomiya, before we took the modern Japan's very up-to-date railroad and hurried away from the grandeur of the past to the busy scenes of the open trading port of Yokohama.

THE MESSAGE OF QUAKERISM TO THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.*

BY LINDLEY D. CLARK.

The age that gave rise to Quakerism was a prolific one in its numerous sects or varieties of dissenters from the Church of England. The Reformation had been followed by the establishment of an English episcopacy with Henry VIII. as the head of the Church; and in the protracted fight against papacy, every form of departure from the English establishment came to be viewed with suspicion and hostility.

Presbyterianism and Puritanism rose at different times to a predominant position in the kingdom, sharing with the older Church its fear and hatred of Romanism; and, engaging in turn in the contest for supremacy, they were no less severe than it in their treatment of those who dissented from their views.

The rapid political changes that led to the execution of Charles I., the overthrow of the Commonwealth, the deposition of James II., and the bringing in of William and Mary, were accompanied by transformations no less rapid and radical in the affairs of the Church. In 1644 every person in England above the age of 18 years was obligated by the Long Parliament to take the solemn league and covenant of Scottish Presbyterianism, while the next year the reading of the prayerbook was made punishable by fines and imprisonment. In 1662 the same people were called upon to take an oath of obedience to the episcopacy and to abjure the solemn league and covenant; two years later the Conventicle Act prohibited any religious meeting of more than five persons except according to the practices of the Church of England.

While many honest protests arose against the cruelty and falsehood of these oppressions in the name of religion, many visionary and fanatical doctrines were likewise fostered; so that on every hand it seemed as if the cause of truth were being brought under reproach. At such a time and into such an atmosphere Quakerism was born, with a message to all times and for all needs, as we believe; but with a teaching of especial force and importance to an age in which the struggle for church supremacy, the warfare of intolerant religionism, and the effort to subdue men's consciences by oath-bound prescriptions were producing constant turmoil and bitterness and making a mock of the Gospel of the Prince of Peace.

Near the beginning of the second half of the seventeenth century Fox began to preach, and within a few years had associated with him sixty ministers engaged in proclaiming the principles of Christianity as they found them in the Scriptures with the guidance of that Spirit who "led into all truth and so gave the knowledge of all truth." Hardest to receive, perhaps, of all that they had to say to the churchmen of that day was the doctrine of religious liberty—the equality of all men before God, as opposed to the idea of either priestly or civil control of conscience. Indeed, it is only in the United States that religious liberty has yet come to its full recognition. The year 1689 did see the passage in England of a Toleration Act; but, as has been acutely said, "Toleration is not the opposite of intolerance, but the counterfeit of it. Both are despotisms: the one assumes to itself the right of withholding liberty of conscience, the other of granting it."

It is not toleration, but liberty, that speaks in the following declaration made in 1676 by the Quaker proprietaries of West Jersey: "No men nor number of men upon earth hath power and authority to rule over men's consciences in religious matters: no person whatsoever within the said province shall be in the least punished or hurt, either in person, estate, or privilege, for the sake of his opinion, judgment, faith, or worship towards God, in matters of religion"; and five years later the first Assembly of the colony enacted that "none of the free people of the province shall be rendered incapable of office in respect to their faith and worship."

It might be said just here that these principles were not so fully recognized a little later in the draft of government for Pennsylvania, where belief in Christ was required, so that Jews and atheists were brought under disability for office, though not persecuted.

The charge has been made that the work of Quakerism lacked in constructiveness in that their testimony was only a passive one, thus comparing unfavorably with other dissenting bodies. But when we read of the petitions and the arguments and defenses presented by Friends in England during the dark half-century of our earliest existence, we are sure that the charge is poorly supported. Or, consider the work of William Robinson, one of the Massachusetts martyrs, who wrote, "I came with my companion, Marmaduke Stevenson, to Boston, in obedience to the Lord, to beare our testimony against there Bloody Law, which they have made. The Lord laid on me my Life to give up Boston's Bloody Lawes to try." Certainly there is no lack here of either boldness or activity. The four executions at Boston in 1659 so outraged the feelings of the colonists that, while they did not approve of Quakerism, they expressed such emphatic disapproval of persecution that not only was hanging abolished, but whipping and imprisonment were at an end, and the Quakers dwelt in peace. So far indeed did the reaction extend that the theocratic government of New England is said to have taken its death blow from its treatment of the Quakers. In many of the other colonies there was similar constancy, wearing out and overcoming the spirit of persecution, so that for the freedom of conscience that America enjoys, we can but feel that it owes much to the boldness and obedience of these men and women who counted not their lives dear unto themselves if only they might be faithful witnesses to that which they had received.

In close connection with the effective work of Friends for the establishment of religious liberty was their rejection of oaths because their use involved disobedience to the commands of Him who said, "Let your yea be yea and your nay, nay." In the change of political and religious establishments, each victorious party demanded of the subjugated forces of the enemy, and of professed adherents as well, that by an oath, allegiance should be acknowledged, whether to King or Lord Protector, priest or bishop. These oaths and tests were proposed under the severest sanctions, and oppression of every sort was visited upon those who could not from tenderness of conscience use the prescribed forms. Spoiling of goods, imprisonment, banishment, beatings, tortures ending in death, were inflicted without mercy, neither age nor sex affording a defense against the cruelties practiced in the name of religion. The imprisonment of many against whom no other charge could be brought was compassed by demanding the taking of an oath which, while it might affect no obligation that Friends repudiated as such, they yet were unable to take in the form prescribed. Four thousand Friends are said to have been in jail at one time, their patience and steadfastness being a constant testimony against that intolerant and wicked spirit that would thus persecute peaceable and inoffensive citizens. The nineteenth century was well under way before Friends were fully cleared of disability for governmental positions in England on account of their unwillingness to take the required oaths, but they maintained their ground until the nation came to accept the affirmation, as is now done, I believe, in all English-speaking countries.

A third testimony, that which lies at the foundation of Quakerism, is as to the essence of worship—that it is a communion of spirit with spirit without the intervention of sacred symbol or a consecrated priesthood, as these terms are commonly used, though in reality proclaiming the wider sanctity of all things and all men, if only brought into harmony with the eternal purpose of God. When it was opened to George Fox that training "at Oxford or Cambridge was not enough to fit and qualify men to be ministers of Christ," his proclamation of it was aiming a blow at professional clericalism which could but go ill with a church in which religion was a ritual administered by a distinctive body of men in conformity with the orders of bishops and the mandates of kings. Fox's "man or woman raised up by the Lord's power to stand and live in the same spirit that the apostles and prophets were in who gave forth the Scriptures, who should therefore shake the country for ten miles around," had little in common with the reader of forms who could submit to be directed by King James to confine his preaching to the Thirty-nine Articles, or ordered by Charles, under penalty of being deposed, to read from his pulpit the Book of Sports prepared by James I., which recommended dancing and gunning as suitable pastimes for the Sunday afternoons of loyal churchmen. Such men and women as this were raised up and traveled the length and breadth of the king's domain, until it is estimated that seventy or eighty thousand Friends were to be found in Great Britain and Ireland at the close of the seventeenth century, besides numbers in the American colonies.

"Neither dress nor language nor peculiar customs constitute the Quaker, but the spiritual knowledge which he possesses." Quakerism was a call to essentials, and in this it has a message that has never lost its vitality nor its importance. I do not know that the claim has been generally made by Friends that we are a Church of logicians or philosophers, yet the thoroughgoing acceptance of Christ's teachings constitutes the purest logic, and in this lay the great strength of the testimony of those early Friends who were frequently brought into discussions with priests and clergy. These men stood as professed representatives of a Gospel of truth and righteousness, but it was frequently laid upon Friends to show them how they really pleaded for "sin and imperfection." To remind them from the Scriptures that, if true believers in Christ, they were passed from death to life, and if passed from death, then from sin that bringeth death, was to work confusion to their reasoning and to destroy their influence over all who really desired to know the truth.

Another result of following the teachings of Christ through to their conclusion was the testimony against human slavery and war as opposed to the law of love and the brotherhood of all men in Jesus Christ. Not only in their position toward the institution of slavery, but in their treatment of the black man and the Indian as objects of the love of God there was a message to the age that saw the beginnings of our Church and to the times that have followed. In England and Europe repeated visits were made and considerable correspondence had with men and women of noble birth and breeding, so that we are assured that the greatest and the least were alike in Fox's mind when he wrote, "Let all nations hear the sound by word or writing. Spare no place, spare no tongue, nor pen; but be obedient to the Lord God. . . . Be patterns, be examples in all countries, places, islands, nations, wherever you come, that your carriage and life may preach among all sorts of people and to them."

Intolerance, religious caste, formality, deadness, disregard of the teachings of the Scripture, a practical denial of the work of the Holy Spirit—against these Quakerism had to bear its witness in its first days. It is impossible in a brief review to give the setting of conditions that gave to much of the work of Friends its vast importance, or to convey any just impression of the fierce play of passion and hatred that made the acceptance of truth an act of heroism. Not that Friends stood alone as teachers of righteousness. Baxter's "Saints' Rest" and Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" came to light in the same period; while Roger Williams preceded William Penn by half a century as the founder of a colony in which men of diverse faiths might dwell freely. But there was a place for Friends to fill that no others seemed to approach. That it was done so faithfully and effectually is proof to us of possibilities for today, and may well spur us to an activity that our Church seemed to fall away from with the passing of its founders. We are convinced that its mission is not closed, but we can hardly deny that we do not measure up to the achievements of our heroic ancestors. What we need is to emulate, not their actions and methods, but their spirit of earnestness and zeal and thorough obedience, that the message to the twentieth century may likewise be heard and heeded.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

The eighty-third session of Indiana Yearly Meeting was held this year at Marion. For several years at intermittent periods some of the quarterly meetings of Northern Indiana together with those in Michigan have requested the privilege of withdrawing from Indiana Yearly Meeting for the purpose of establishing a new yearly meeting. Such a request came up last year, and, although the yearly meeting was not convinced of the advisability of the separation, they joined in the suggestion to hold this year's session at Marion. A large tent, with a seating capacity of 3,000, was pitched upon the grounds belonging to Marion Friends, and this, with the commodious meeting house and parsonage, afforded adequate accommodations for the public meetings and committees. An excellent heating arrangement was established in the tent, and there was no discomfort whatever from the cool weather which prevailed part of the time.

The Friends of Marion and the citizens generally responded to the invitation to open their homes for the boarding and lodging of non-residents, and all felt well pleased with the accommodations received. The attendance at the various week-day sessions was certainly equal to former years, and by many it was considered larger. There was rain upon First-day, what is popularly known as the "Big Day"—but several thousand people were in attendance that day, and there were very few who did not listen attentively to the preaching of the Word. A number of visiting ministers, of whom some twenty were in attendance, as well as some home ministers, upon invitation, occupied the pulpits of the various Protestant churches of Marion and surrounding cities, which in this part of Indiana are connected by trolley lines, so that it was certainly true that the people for more than ten miles round felt the influence of the coming together of God's people. A number of visitors and workers also accepted invitations to speak at the Soldiers' Home near Marion, where thousands of United States veterans are spending their declining years. A noticeable fact in connection with the visiting ministers was the unusually large proportion of young men and women among them. Nathan and Esther Frame, of Wilmington; Thomas C. Brown, of Western, and Jasper Hadley, of Iowa, were among the older visiting ministers in attendance. The spiritual uplift which came to the membership in attendance as well as to the community, as a result of the faithful ministrations of this host of God's servants, is beyond human means of computation.

At the suggestion of Elwood O. Ellis, who for a number of years has been the clerk of the meeting, the duties of the clerk were divided among two individuals, to be known respectively as presiding clerk and recording clerk. These two offices, together with two reading clerks and an announcing clerk, constitute the working force at the desk.

Some very vital problems were considered in the meeting on ministry and oversight, and the consideration continued in the yearly meeting proper. The members were urged to be vigilant in the work of developing the spiritual gifts of the younger members, and this thought, in an unusual way, seemed to take hold of many Friends. The principal address at the session devoted to Christian Endeavor work was upon this theme.

Another question which received serious consideration was the necessity of carrying the work of Friends into the centers of population. The question was introduced into the meeting on ministry and oversight by the request of some Friends for measures to be taken toward the establishment of a meeting in the city of Dayton, O., where quite a number of Friends now live. The meeting on ministry and oversight requested the yearly meeting proper to make an appropriation for church extension in cities, and the representatives were so instructed.

The yearly meeting endorsed the action of subordinate meetings in granting a minute to Joseph John and Emily W. Mills for service in London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, and such other work as they feel called to do.

The report of the trustees of White's Institute was particularly gratifying. There are now 113 children enrolled in the institution—about three-fourths of whom have been sent in by the commissioners of perhaps a dozen counties in Indiana. Some of these counties have abandoned their orphans' homes and are sending their children directly to White's Institute. This movement on the part of the counties seems likely to continue, and the institute bids fair to be of even greater service to these wards of the State. It is the constant effort of the Home to place the children in good private homes. The receipts for the past year were $11,761.47.

President L. L. Hobbs explained the plan to establish The Harriet Green Memorial Fund for Guilford College, and a sum of money was pledged to this purpose.

The session devoted to home missions and temperance was full of interest, and showed much excellent work done in these departments of work. An address of much power was made by Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago.

There was a freshness about the reports from quarterly meetings on the state of the Church, due in large measure to the change of method from answering the queries to the plan of the Uniform Discipline. For the most part the Church was shown to be in satisfactory condition. The total membership this year is 20,483, there being a net gain of 146 during the year. The total additions to the Church were 1,281. The loss by death exceeded the loss by birth by 16. Some statistics from the treasurer's report are full of interest. The assets of the yearly meeting amount to $231,152.28. The cash receipts during the year were $52,669.32, of which all but $6,981.02 was expended in the different departments of the church work.

The Board of Foreign Missions gave a full report, a significant feature of which was the information in reference to the improvements in buildings. A commodious meeting house has been built at Victoria, Mexico, during the year. Property has been bought and buildings put in condition for Juarez Institute, a school for the higher education and Biblical training of young men. The dwelling house has been put in good repair and another house rented for the printing press.

Copious extracts were read from the eighth annual report of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, and additional information was given of the purchase and repair of a school building at Gibara, Cuba, at a cost of $700.

The prosperous condition of Earlham College is a matter of great satisfaction to the members of Indiana Yearly Meeting, who are always devoted to the college's interests. Each heart went up in thankfulness to God because of the munificent proposition of Francis T. White and the loyalty of hundreds of friends of the college, which have made possible the handsome additions to the endowment fund during the year and the freedom of the college from the long-standing building debt. Friends were pleased not only at the financial condition of the college, but that from the educational and religious points of view the year past has had no parallel in the history of the institution. A cordial greeting and pledge of loyalty was publicly extended to the new president by the old Earlham students present.

The representatives made the following appropriations:

Books and tracts	$100.00
Peace	200.00
Board of Foreign Missions	1,500.00
Southland College	700.00
Evangelistic Committee	1,000.00
Church Extension	500.00
Indian Committee	680.00
Bible Institute	200.00
Bible Schools	50.00
Temperance	100.00
Home Missions	50.00
Incidentals	2,920.00
	$8,000.00

Numerous subscriptions were taken up during the week, but the totals were not reported.

Willis Hotchkiss was present during several days of the yearly meeting, and on the last day gave a full account of his labors and those of his companions in Africa. His services were greatly appreciated. The attendance on the closing day, devoted to miscellaneous business was undiminished, a fact in marked contrast to the usual custom.

The yearly meeting will be held next year at Richmond, at which time no doubt the question of alternating between Richmond and Marion will be considered.

Charles F. Coffin, of Chicago, attended the yearly meeting for the first time in nineteen years.

The last session was a devotional meeting, at which many hearts were definitely blessed.

First-day, Tenth mo. 25.—Justified. Rom. 5: 1-5.

Intervening Events.—See notes on last lesson. The occasion is the same. See 2 Sam. 11, and 12: 1-25.

Time.—1034 or 996 B.C.

Place.—Jerusalem.

As with Psalm 51, some critics do not believe that this Psalm was written by David, but certainly the thoughts and their expression are such as might well be his. The title is, "A Psalm of David. Maschil." The word "Maschil," according to the Revised Version, means "A Skillful Psalm." (See Ps. 47: 7, margin.) Others say, "a didactic psalm"; others, "a pious meditation." The Psalm is a cry for forgiveness and an expression of repentance. Psalm 32 is an answer to this Psalm, and a statement of the blessedness of being forgiven.

Whether the Psalm in its present form was written by David or not, it is the expression of a truly penitent soul, and has been used by such for centuries. The theme of this Psalm has been stated thus: "Exhortation, based on experience, to seek the penitence which will bring forgiveness and joy." Read in parallelisms, as in the Revised Version, the Psalm gains in clearness.

1. "Transgression." There are three words in this Psalm for expressing sin. "Sin," which means literally "missing the mark"; "transgression," crossing over a line into what is known to be forbidden; "iniquity," which means "distortion" or "twisting." These are used synonymously, and it does not do to depend too much on etymology, but each word adds something to the general idea which is best covered by our word sin as now used. The man whose sin is forgiven is surely blessed.

2. "Imputeth not." Is not reckoned against him. "Guile." Deceitfulness.

3. This verse is intended to express the effort to secure peace of mind by hiding his sin and refusing to make confession.

4. "Thy hand was heavy upon me." God through his conscience, through various means sent him discomfort, pain, remorse, chastisement. Compare Heb. 12: 6-11.

5. "I acknowledged my sin." Compare 2 Sam. 12: 13. "Thou forgavest." Because he had true repentance he received the sense of forgiveness. "Selah." This word, about whose meaning there has been much question, is now generally held to be a musical term meaning an interlude by the musical instruments alone, or sometimes it may be a louder accompaniment. It has nothing to do with the words of the Psalm.

6. "For this let every one," etc. Revised Version. The sentence is best rendered as an exhortation. David's experience should encourage others to a like repentance and confession. "Godly" seems to refer to the righteous who having been tempted yielded to the temptation and need repentance, confession and pardon. "Surely when the great waters overflow they shall not reach unto him." Revised Version. The truly repentant and forgiven shall not be overwhelmed with trouble, sorrow, disaster.

7. The Psalmist rejoices that in the Lord he will find safety. He will be, as it were, surrounded by angels singing "songs of deliverance."

8, 9. These verses seem to be as a divine voice answering the thought expressed in verse 7. Note the personal emphasis "I" and "thee." God will instruct by His Holy Spirit. His eye will be upon him, not to find faults but to guide lest the wrong road be taken. "I will counsel thee with mine eye." Revised Version.

8. "Be ye not as the horse or as the mule which have no understanding: whose trappings must be bit and bridle to hold them in, else they will not come near unto thee." Revised Version. This version is much clearer than the authorized, though neither is very clear. The idea is that irrational animals need force to guide them while reason should guide men. If men will hearken to God He will guide them by love, moral influence, by the Holy Spirit; otherwise force will be used as with the irrational animals.

10. The wicked cannot escape sorrows or gain the victory over them as long as he remains wicked. "But he that trusteth in the Lord." Faith, after all, is essential. Faith implies forsaking of sin and love of God. (Phil. 3: 9.) "Mercy shall compass him about." The loving-kindness of the Lord is round about them that put their trust in Him, who have confessed their sins and received forgiveness.

11. This exhortation is primarily for those who like the Psalmist have known what it is to sin and to be forgiven.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "True confession implies your viewing the fact of sin in the same light as that in which God views it."

2. "I will guide thee with mine eye."

3. "Rejoice in the Lord, and again I will say, rejoice."

TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH TWENTY-FIFTH.

WHAT THE BIBLE TEACHES ABOUT GIVING.

2 Cor. 9: 6-11; 8: 23, 24. (Missions.)

Second-day, Tenth mo. 19.—It pleases God. Heb. 13: 15, 16.

Third-day, Tenth mo. 20.—Follows Christ's example. 2 Cor. 8: 7-9.

Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 21.—An Old Testament vow. Gen. 28: 20-22.

Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 22.—Characteristic of saints. Isa. 32: 1-8.

Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 23.—A part of God's service. Ex. 35: 21-29.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 24.—According to ability. Deut. 16: 9-12.

The double commendation of the Corinthians' giving was that it ministered to the wants of the needy saints, and that it also abounded through many thanksgivings unto God. Our giving to missions is only secondarily to supply physical necessities; it is primarily for a ministering to the spiritual needs of those to whom our missionaries go. If Paul could so highly commend an eleemosynary giving, how much more highly shall we esteem the grace that moves directly along the lines of Christ's commands to go and preach?

Unending and unbounded gratitude is God's due, but men need reminders of duty, and this is one fruit of giving. The Jewish beneficiary glorified God for the brotherhood in Christ made manifest in this tangible way; the heathen to whom light comes give thanks for their new knowledge, and are cause of joy in heaven; the giver also is in the circuit of the blessing as the one by whose faithfulness this new occasion of earth and heaven-born praise was afforded.

In the midst of it all, and rising above every other ascription and every other cause for thanksgiving, is the one with which this chapter closes: "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift." He set the pattern of giving, and our Lord only strengthened the force of the example in that He who was rich became poor for our sakes.

Giving and thanksgiving will be found in close relations in another way, if we proceed along Pauline lines. He proposed that a habit of giving be formed—a laying by weekly as God has given prosperity. Now if we review God's dealings weekly we shall certainly be established in a habit of gratitude, and if we follow the example set by Abraham at the vale of Shaveh, and of Jacob at Bethel, and taught by our Lord Himself, our feeling will find a concrete form of expression.

We desire the spread of the kingdom, but the potency of our desire does not consist in the eloquence of our words, but in the adequacy of our giving to come up to the measure of the wants of the ungospelized world.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR IN CUBA.

September 15th the Christian Endeavor Society of the Friends' Meeting in Gibara, Cuba, held their first Endeavor Social, the second social occasion the society has enjoyed, the first being a picnic in a cave near the city. The lawn of the mission premises between the church and school buildings was lighted with Chinese lanterns, and arranged with seats, table, Christian Endeavor banner, pretty plants, etc. The evening was pleasantly passed in simple games, singing, extemporaneous speeches by officers of the society and missionaries, closing with prayer. Pineapple ice was served as refreshment. These young people were surely in better condition the next day than after a night spent in dancing.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Gibara, Cuba, held an Echo meeting of the Denver Convention on the evening of September 5th. The room was prettily decorated by the members, and those on the program filled their places with credit. A pretty banner with the monogram, was prepared for the occasion. Where the odds are so against us it does our young people good to get a glimpse of the victorious forces of Christ in other parts.

The fact is that sin is the most unmanly thing in God's world. You never were made for sin and selfishness. You were made for love and obedience.—J. G. Holland.

MY PILOT.

BY CHAS. M. SHELDON.

O, my heart has been tossed on a wave of unrest,
But my Pilot has just come on board;
And He's steering my ship to the haven that's blest,
Where the tempests of sin never roared;
He knows all the dangers, below and above,
All the treacherous currents of sin,
And with confidence born of my faith and my love
I know He will bring me safe in.

He has piloted many a soul in the dark;
He has never lost one, young or old,
When the storm has burst fierce o'er the quivering bark

And the wind has ragged bitter and cold;
O Pilot, my faith in Thee grows with the years;
Thou hast never lost one of Thine own,
Forgive me my past with its cowardly fears,
I would know Thee as also I'm known.

I will rest me with Him who is never weary;
I will joy me with Him who is never afraid;
I will hide me in Him when 'tis gloomy or dreary
On account of the mists which my doubting has made;

And, when the sun breaks on the blessed to-morrow,
I have faith in my Pilot to trust him for aye.
I shall see Him and love Him, and never a sorrow Shall dim my belief in that glorious day.

Sin is to be overcome, not so much by maintaining a direct opposition to it, as by cultivating opposite principles. Would you kill the weeds in your garden, plant it with good seed; if the ground be well occupied, there will be less need of the labor of the hoe. If a man wished to quench fire, he might fight it with his hands till he was burnt to death; the only way is to apply an opposite element.—Andrew Fuller.
